"The missions in China were never so prosperous, so progressive and hopeful, as at present. New missionaries are arriving almost every month, and new stations are being formed throughout the interior provinces. Universal and absolute toleration of Christianity, its teachers and professors, now exists everywhere in the empire. Numerous proclamations have recently been issued, threatening condign punishment to any who may dare to contravene the special treaty stipulations allowing missionaries to go where they please, live where they please, and preach where they please. The proclamations say: 'You can join the church, or not, as you please, but in no case will anonymous placards, mobs, or violence in any form, be allowed!'

"Oh! that our church could believe what I tell you! I see these things—we all see them—live among them. You understand me. We are perplexed beyond measure at the attitude our church takes toward the China mission. We are at a loss to know when, if not now, 'the favorable time'—the long-looked for 'sign' of which we hear so much, and for which the church seems to wait so patiently—will be revealed. I came to China 'by faith,' and for the last four or five years have had little else to sustain me. But it is a fearful trial to faith, when faith in those who sent me here ceases to be the 'substance' of things hoped for from them, and the 'evidence' of things they promised me. But we are all hopeful, despite our discouragements, and could not be induced to leave the field on any account.

"We want more foreign laborers here. Other places must be occupied, and a race of native helpers raised up, who can meet the requirements of the times. Three new missionaries from the Southern Presbyterian Board have just arrived. Others belonging to the Old School Presbyterians have gone to Peking. Some have joined the New Connection Wesleyans—others, the American Board, London Mission, etc. Missionaries are flocking to China "like doves to their windows," from all parts of the Christian world. 'Where the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together.' The commercial eagles have scented this great carcass from afar, and are crowding to these shores.

"My church paper has already attained a circulation of nearly five thousand copies weekly! It goes everywhere among missionaries and native Christians, and even 'beyond.' I am literally crowded off the tripod and out of the paper, by native contributions. The communication from 'A Confucianist,' which you will see in the number herewith sent you, in which he reviews the doctrines and discipline of the Christian church, has opened up an interesting field of discussion. He is a sincere inquirer after truth. The comparison which he institutes between Christ and Confucius, and the question of Ancestral Worship as incompatible with a profession of faith in Christ, were questions raised by him, not by me. This man, like many others, is almost persuaded to be a Christian.

"Many Chinese are diligently studying foreign science, privately. It is utterly impossible for me to answer the numerous questions which they ask. I have already translated a 'Concise Summary' of nearly all the chapters in Wayland's Political Economy. I am now translating Natural Philosophy. Hydrostatics has passed through the press, and I am giving them Pneumatics, etc. The literary chancellor, with whom I was long associated in the Chinese College, at Shanghai, has established a large press at Su Chow for the publication of Chinese works. I have just purchased for him a font of large Chinese type, amounting to thirty-six thousand characters, and had some electrotyping done for him. He wishes me to translate Electro Metallurgy for his use."

I could copy much more from this highly interesting letter, but you editors do not like long communications. The church does not know what a treasure it has in its little China mission.

W. G. E. CUNNYNGHAM,
Acting Secretary, etc.
ABINGDON, VA., Feb. 12, 1869.

TWO DEATHS occurred in New York recently from the much dreaded disease, trichonosis. There have been eight cases reported from one German boarding house in Carlisle street, arising from the eating of raw pork.

THE American Bible Society printed and sent forth from its publishing house during last year one million two hundred thousand copies of the Holy Scriptures.

THE N. O. CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

We might give ten reasons why a Southern Methodist should take the ADVOCATE, and begin with the powerful one of the Nashville Advocate: "Because it is the only paper that belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church South." Not only does the paper belong to it, but the house it is printed in, its type, press, steam engine, publisher and editor. It is a family concern out and out. We are not "the organ of twenty-seven or twenty-eight Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church South," and so do not make any pretension of the kind; but we are the veritable organ of the Montgomery, the Mobile, the Mississippi and the Louisiana Conferences. The great reason we urge why our people should take this ADVOCATE is, it will advance the cause of God at home. We must build up our own schools, our own churches, and cultivate our own vineyard. Next to the preachers of the Southwest, we place the ADVOCATE as important in the accomplishment of this great work.

What of those firesides where the young people gather upon a Sabbath, because it is not the day for the "circuit rider"—where there are few books, possibly no religious ones? What a cheering halo would the ADVOCATE throw over that group, opening every week its varied treasures to their minds and hearts! The boys and girls would always associate it in their thoughts with the preacher who first introduced the pleasant visitor to their home, and when he stood up in the pulpit they would somehow feel as if it was the ADVOCATE standing there preaching. And how do they know but it is the preacher that's in the ADVOCATE—a man does not always sign his name to what he writes.

A good many of our brethren are standing up very squarely to this paper. They are canvassing the circuit and sending us good lists of subscribers. We look especially to the young men of the Conference to aid us in this arduous work of setting a religious weekly fairly and strongly on its legs. A few old preachers never get old, and never get too great to attend to all the work of a preacher. We have a fair proportion of such agents. Such men never require thanks. They are waiting till they can receive the thanks of the Master. They have been trained to work, and if they cannot work they want to die.

What can we hope to do with a church member who don't want the ADVOCATE, "can't afford it," won't pay for it? What does he live on—what meat, what faith? Or does he live? Well, we doubt. What! really alive, in any good sense, and yet not want to know of the great battle that is going on between the standards of Immanuel and the serried hosts of sin—a battle in which his own happiness and salvation are involved; and upon which the angels look in breathless interest! We suppose such a man, as Mr. Wesley would say, ought to be borne with for a while; but after that ——?

Southern Methodist Colleges.

Our institutions of learning are already beginning to reap the reward due to their tenacity of purpose against the severe poverty of the past two years. They have held on through evil report and good report, until the skies and the fields have become propitious, and no longer refuse to answer to the labors of the husbandman. Strange is it that there should be so much of the moral element in corn, cotton and sugar. A good many people sing,

"What though the olive yield no oil,

who have no heart for anything unless there are herds in the stall and olives on the bough; they require a pretty full hand to be good or to do good. The Lord has once more consulted the humor of such people, and he has given them good crops for the sake of their children. They are now sending forward their sons and daughters to be educated.

A letter from Dr. E. Wadsworth, of the Southern University, at Greensboro, Alabama, says: "We began the second term of the session on the 15th instant, and feel much encouraged by the patronage we are now getting. Our preparatory school is liberally patronized and skillfully managed by the whole faculty. The number in the university is increasing. We have young gentlemen who promise much to the church, the country and the world."

This is just as it should be. The powerful State of Alabama can abundantly support the universities of the Mobile and Montgomery Conferences, and the States of Louisiana and Mississippi can certainly support Centenary College. Better than all, the people are looking about and inquiring after the best places to send their boys for education, and have no disposition to send them out of the Southern States. If they want them fitted for heaven, for this country, for this age, and thoroughly taught, let them send them to one of our Protestant colleges. If they want them filled with superstition instead of Christianity, their minds dwarfed instead of developed, let them send them to some Roman Catholic foundation, where they pray to the Virgin Mary every half hour by the bell. We do hope that Methodists are done forever with the folly of sending their sons and daughters to men and women who do not know enough of our country and our language to cross themselves in good English.

When young men come out of our own colleges they can obtain a good salary, as teachers, in any part of the South—a better salary than the graduates of a Northern college can, because they have been more thoroughly taught. We mean all we say; and if any one doubts let him take a graduate from each section, at will, and it will soon be apparent which has had the better teacher. The Northern graduate will prove to be the smarter, probably, but the Southern the more solid and thorough. We know of no superiors in point of thorough scholarship to the men who, at present, fill the chairs of our Southern colleges; we therefore repeat the advice to our people, keep your boys at home and send them to your own colleges.

GENERAL GRANT.

The President goes into office quite independent of the party in power. It nominated him by necessity. This gives him a vantage-ground which the retiring President had not. He already assumes a military bearing toward the party, and keeps his policy to himself as if he were conducting a campaign. This springing the names of his cabinet, the first officers of the government, upon the country is singular, and singularity or any unnecessary departure from the usage of his predecessors is, to say the least, unwise, because the forms and customs of a government constitute an important part of it. Writing this in advance of the event, we suppose that he will try to surround himself with men who are as independent as himself. Already the two houses are at variance with each other; and in the event of a difference between that branch of the government and the executive, this will greatly strengthen the hands of the President. The power of Congress was largely increased by want of decision in Mr. Johnson. He talked like a lion, but he acted with excessive caution and timidity. History induced our political writers to fear that danger to our Constitution lay mainly in the engrossing nature and vast patronage of the executive. We think this view is the correct one. It has only worked the other way during the past four years through the anomalous nature of a President who had physical but not moral courage.

Another excuse for taking things in his own hands may be afforded General Grant, in the deep and wide corruption of the members of both houses of Congress, the vast amount of plunder which they have secured. He will be tempted to think that any act is right which rescues the country out of the clutches of such unprincipled men. And the argument of many thoughtful persons is, we are now living under a most irresponsible tyranny—that of a Congress that regards no Constitution but its own decrees; therefore they wish he would seize the reins and put an end to the legislative and social outrages we are now suffering. Alas, a stream cannot rise higher than its fountain, and General Grant himself is but an exponent of the standard of public morals. We have not yet seen in him any virtue above the average of the Republican party in Congress. Our hope is, as ever, not in princes.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

AMERICAN ECCLESIASTICAL AND EDUCATIONAL ALMANAC. By Alexander J. Schem. Price, fifty cents. New York: Frederick Gerhard, agent, post box 4,001.

We acknowledge the receipt of one of these excellent almanacs from the publisher, and advise all who wish the statistics of churches throughout the United States and the world to send on fifty cents for a copy.

CAST UP BY THE SEA. By Sir Samuel W. Baker, M. A., F. R. G. S., author of "Albert N'Yanza, Great Basin of the Nile," "The Rifle and the Hound in Ceylon," "Eight Years' Wandering in Ceylon," etc. With ten illustrations by Hnard. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1869. 12mo, pp. 413.

This book has been written in answer to "numerous letters" received by the author from boys. It is a picture of his own wanderings and adventures in Africa and on the sea. The interest is intensified by several shipwrecks, and by the death of many men and beasts. We suppose by way of a "tub to the whale," he has introduced two specimens of the inevitable negro, which contrast wondrously with the negro character as described in his "Albert N'Yanza." It will be a popular book with the young people. For sale by George Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street.

CHINA AND THE CHINESE. A general description of the country and its inhabitants, its civilization and form of government, its religion and social institutions, its intercourse with other nations, and its present condition and prospects. By the Rev. John L. Nevius, ten years a missionary in China. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1869. Large 12mo, pp. 456.

One cannot peruse this book without feeling an increased respect for the Chinese—our nearest neighbors on the West. Their civilization and government extend over one-third of the human race. They have existed nationally about twenty-five lifetimes of the United States. Our wish to know the secret of such a development gives value to every work on China; but the writer has had no ordinary opportunity for comprehending his theme, and he presents a large amount of valuable information in a well arranged, compact form. The books upon China, which we have read, have had a fragmentary, sensational character; this gives a sober view of Chinese life, based upon a philosophic and, we doubt not, correct estimate of this wonderful people. The book is full of illustrations, and accompanied by a map of the "Middle Flowery Kingdom." For sale by G. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street.

TRAVEL AND ADVENTURE IN THE TERRITORY OF ALASKA—formerly Russian America, now ceded to the United States—and in various other parts of the North Pacific. By Frederick Whymper. With map and illustrations. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1869. Small 8vo, pp. 359.

The Pacific coast generally, including California and Alaska, would not have been an inappropriate title for this work. The traveler spent a good deal of time in Alaska, upon the Yukon. The resources of that inhospitable region in fish, game and furs are estimated by him as worth all that we have paid for it. The character of its climate and inhabitants are much the same as that of all other arctic regions. The book at least reconciles one to the additional tax laid for the purchase. It is written in a sprightly vein, and abounds in important facts, geographical, meteorological, ethnological, geological and other. For sale by G. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF CHARLES G. HALPINE; (Miles O'Reilly,) consisting of odes, poems, sonnets, epics and lyrical effusions not heretofore collected together, with a biographical sketch. By Robert V. Reed-veld. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1869. 12mo, pp. 331.

An elegant tribute to the memory of this gifted genius. For sale by G. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street.

We have received through Mr. J. A. Gresham, 92 Camp street:

THE OUTLINES OF OLD TESTAMENT HISTORY, FOR YOUTH. Philadelphia: Lutheran Board of Publication. 1869. 18mo, pp. 206.

A narrative statement of Bible history—a republication from the English edition. A good Sunday school library book.

Dr. Lord and Mr. Cyrus H. McCormick.

Dr. Lord is a professor of theology in the Northwestern Theological Seminary. Some years ago Mr. McCormick gave to the seminary $100,000 to endow four professorships, to be paid in installments of $25,000. Three of these have been paid; the fourth Mr. McCormick refuses to pay, upon the ground that he endowed an Old School Presbyterian institution, and that since then it has ceased to be an exponent of Old School doctrines.

In answer to the application of the committee, Mr. McCormick explains at length his reasons for declining to contribute more money, and takes occasion to mention the relations existing between Dr. Lord, professor of theology, and himself, showing the inconsistency and impropriety of his occupying the "Cyrus H. McCormick Chair of Theology," and affirming that "there are few men who would be willing to occupy the chair in question, as he (Dr. Lord) has done, under such circumstances."

This calls out a reply from Dr. Lord, in which he impugns Mr. McCormick's motives in making handsome donations to several institutions in Virginia, and asserts that, in so doing, he but expressed his indorsement and approval of the rebellion, and sympathy with the South.

To this illiberal and malicious attack we shall let Mr. McCormick speak for himself. Rising above the pettiness of partisan spirit, in a manner worthy of his head and heart, he says:

"Whatever wrong may have been done in time past by persons connected with these (Southern) institutions, in one respect they differ widely from you and your friends. Now that the war has ended, they do not still seek to keep up the strife, but have gone quietly to work to build up institutions needed both by the church and the country. If you and your friends had pursued a similar course, this controversy would not have occurred. It is more than absurd for Christian men to boast of their loyalty and their love of country, who continue to show a bitterness and vindictiveness of feeling which even men of the world rebuke.

"But is it really true that those who now give money to assist Southern institutions thereby express approval of the rebellion? Did Henry Ward Beecher express his approval of the rebellion when he gave money to this same Washington College? Did any one think of charging Mr. Peabody with approval of the rebellion when he made his princely donation for educational purposes to the States recently in rebellion? Does it not argue a narrow mind and unchristian spirit in any man, much more a minister of the Gospel, and still more in a teacher of ministers, thus to criticise such benefaction, the very design of which was to conciliate the two sections of the country so sadly alienated, and to aid them in their deep poverty—the cries of which may never have reached your ears? Is this any part of the doctrine taught in your seminary? Is this in accord with the command of Christ: 'Love your enemies?' Has the Episcopal Church of the North expressed its approval of the rebellion by inviting the Southern branch of the church to return, and by sending money to build up churches and institutions of learning in the South? Is the spirit manifested by you to be fostered in our theological seminaries? Are the young men who go from them to make it one object of their ministry to keep up this bitterness and strife? If so, well may any Christian man decline giving money to them. This proscriptive spirit is not content to vent itself against the South. It is equally intolerant toward those 'great and good men' at the North who opposed 'the Spring resolutions,' and all who, like them, would keep the church out of the political strifes of the times.

"When are we to look for the return of brotherly love and Christian fellowship so long as those aspiring to fill the high places of the church indulge in such wrath and bitterness? Such demonstrations of passion and violence may have been pardonable during the exciting periods of the war, when great national interests were at stake, and great sacrifices were required; but now that that great conflict is past, and its issues settled, religion and patriotism alike require the exercise of mutual forbearance, and the pursuit of those things which tend to peace."

IT WAS IN 1784 that Robert Raikes published his account of Sabbath schools. The same year John Wesley said of them, in his journal for July 18: 'I find these schools springing up wherever I go. Perhaps God may have a deeper end therein than men are aware of. Who knows but some of these schools may be nurseries for Christians!' During the years immediately following Wesley and his friends did what they could to encourage them, and it is interesting to observe the growth of his confidence in them. They were introduced into London by Rowland Hill, in 1786, and in the same year they were begun in the United States by Francis Asbury, a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Wesley mentions in 1786 that five hundred and fifty children were taught in the Sunday school of his society at Bolton; and the next year he found here eight hundred, taught by eighty members. Richard Rodda, one of his preachers, records that in 1786 he formed a Sunday school in Chester, and soon had nearly seven hundred 'under regular masters.' Wesley wrote to him in the beginning of 1787: 'I am glad you have taken in hand that blessed work of setting up Sunday schools in Chester. It seems these will be one great means of reviving religion throughout the nation.' The year before his death John Wesley wrote to Charles Atmore, an itinerant preacher: 'I am glad you have set up Sunday schools at Newcastle. This is one of the best institutions which has been seen in Europe for some centuries.' It is an interesting fact in regard to the visit of John Wesley to America that, in the years 1736-37, forty years before Raike's first Sabbath school, he set apart a portion of the Sabbath afternoon to meet the children belonging to his mission in Savannah, Georgia, for catechetical and scriptural instruction. Small children, as well as large, were among his pupils, and his manner was very engaging.

MARRIED.

February 16, 1869, by Rev. R. S. Trippett, Mr. JOSIAH RENFROE to Mrs. S. E. EMMONDS, all of Caddo parish, Louisiana.

At Oak Ridge, Warren county, Mississippi, at the residence of Dr. H. W. Hill, by Rev. J. G. Jones, Mr. R. C. GRANT to Miss ALICE A. JOHNSON.

By Rev. James A. Godfrey, on the 23d of December, 1868, at the residence of the bride's father, East Feliciana, Louisiana, Mr. SCOTT J. WORTHY to Miss LEVILLA BROWN.

In the Methodist church, Clinton, Louisiana, the following named parties:

On the 3d of December, 1868, Mr. LANO M. ROGERS to Miss MARY ALICE YARBROUGH.

On the 28th of December, 1868, Mr. HENRY WELLHAUSEN to Miss EMMA E. PACKWOOD.

On the 14th of February, 1869, LEWIS M. PERKIN, Esq., to Mrs. MARIA T. NEVITT.

"Eden was a waste, the garden was a wild,
And man, the hermit, sighed till woman smiled."

OBITUARIES.

Mrs. MARY C., consort of Samuel Majors, and daughter of H. W. and C. Shows, was born in Wilkinson county, Georgia, on the 4th of July, 1823, and died of consumption, at Fort Deposit, Alabama, on the 7th of February, 1869.

The subject of this memoir was the child of a religious mother, whose deep piety, religious instruction and admonitions made a lasting impression upon her young mind. At a very early period of life she became convicted of sin, and felt the importance of consecrating herself to God. Unlike many, she cherished, cultivated and yielded to these convictions, and in 1833 she placed herself beneath the protecting care of the Methodist Episcopal Church as a seeker of religion. Church membership was appreciated by her as a privilege, but it did not hush the voice of conscience and make her embrace the delusive, the fatal hope, that it would save her. The Bible taught her that she "must be born again" before she could enter into the kingdom of heaven. Her mind grasped this fundamental truth of Christianity, and the predominant desire of her heart was that she might realize this inestimable blessing. For nine years she sought "the pearl of great price" before her faith triumphed, and she become conscious of her acceptance with God. Her conversion was in the quiet grove, and was so clear and so satisfactory that she was never tempted to doubt it.

In 1837 she was united in marriage to Mr. Cleghorn, and moved to this State. This conjugal union was soon severed by death, and in 1839 she was married to Mr. Samuel Majors.

The disease of which she died was a protracted one, having contracted it eleven years ago; but she was not confined to her bed until the 27th of last December. During her last illness I visited her several times, and always found her peaceful, happy, rejoicing in the hope of meeting in heaven her five children who had gone before. She said to me that when informed by her physician of her approaching end, it was one of the happiest days of her life. She felt that her work was done—the battle had been fought, the victory gained, and she was anxious to receive the victor's palm. J. W. GLENN.

HUMAN BLOOD!

ITS MYSTERIES.

It must be admitted by every rational mind that the man who contributes the most toward promoting the happiness and welfare of the human race must of necessity be the most highly esteemed by his fellow-men; and acting upon this principle it appears that Professor R. L. Hamilton, of New York, has, by patient investigation and vast experience, solved, the uncertain question in relation to the vexed and important subject of Liver complaint and other chronic diseases.

It will be remembered by the readers of this paper that, a few days ago, Dr. Hamilton's Theory of Liver, Lung, and other diseases, was published in connection with many other vital facts, in which all diseased persons are interested; many wonderful cures were published from all parts of the country. Others of a startling and interesting character are given below, which seem to us are evidences that cannot be questioned for a moment, and we advise those who are suffering from the diseases he makes a specialty of to write their full symptoms and get Professor Hamilton's opinion and advice at once.

STRONGLY CORROBORATED!

NEW YORK CITY, Jan. 20, 1869.

"TO THE AFFLICTED EVERYWHERE.

During my labors in publishing and editing a newspaper for many years in this city, and also in the performance of my duties as a clergyman in this and other cities, I have become thoroughly and intimately acquainted with R. Leonidas Hamilton, M. D., the justly celebrated Liver, Lung and Blood Physician of this city, who is located at No. 546 Broadway. The doctor was for many years a regular practicing physician, and also for some years a professor in one of our best medical schools, and during such extensive experience he fully realized the inadequacy of the ordinary treatment made use of in all chronic diseases, more especially that class of troubles arising from deranged functions of the Liver and digestive organs. He at once set himself about the study of this class of diseases, determined to make them a specialty. Laying the vegetable world under tribute, he has made discoveries and compounded specifics on sound philosophical principles, which have made the most wonderful cures in the annals of medicine. Liver, Blood, Lung and Nervous diseases are now virtually under his full control, and yield to the magic, subtle power of his remedies. I have myself seen numbers of those who have been saved from the hand of death by his power, when the unfortunate sufferers seemed doomed to an early grave, and all other treatment was of no avail. In addition to what I can vouch for personally, I have ample evidence from other clergymen, physicians and eminent men of the highest character, who have also been saved by this wonderful treatment, and who speak in the highest praise and gratitude of Dr. Hamilton as a physician and a gentleman of honor and integrity. It is but simply stating the positive truth when I say that it is well known throughout this country that where his works are known and the fruits of his skill have been witnessed, he is highly esteemed by the people as the most eminent and remarkable physician in the treatment of chronic diseases, of the age. As the result of a long personal and familiar acquaintance with Professor Hamilton and his unparalleled success as a professional man of the highest order, I frankly express the hope that diseased humanity in every part of our land may avail themselves of his most remarkable skill, and thus share the noble blessings so kindly and freely bestowed upon all. Most respectfully,

REV. W. R. JACOBS,
No. 41 Park Row, Room No. 4.

THE WORK GOES BRAVELY ON!

ANOTHER CLERGYMAN CURED.

The eminent divine, Rev. J. W. Hinkley, of Athens, Maine, writes:

My health has so far improved from the effects of your treatment that I am able to resume my pastorship. Had it not been for your medicine I should not have been living now. To you, with God's blessing, do I owe my worldly existence. I am a living exponent of the worth of your matchless remedies, and I shall hereafter deem it a part of my religious duty to recommend all suffering with diseases of the Liver or Lungs to speedily apply to you. May God's blessing attend your worthy efforts for the relief of diseased and suffering humanity.

CONCLUSION.

It would seem to us that, after carefully looking over the evidence given above, all reasonable persons must be led to the conclusion that there can be no good reason for doubting the fact that Dr. Hamilton is just what he is represented to be—a very successful physician in the treatment of Chronic Diseases. It is useless to cry "humbug," for the above parties have volunteered to give their evidence for the benefit of the suffering, and for no other purpose. All of these testimonials are genuine—are guaranteed to be so, in fact—and it is easy to write to them, and get from their own pens the facts. Any of them will answer all inquiries of this character, either in person or by letter.

NOTICE.

Prof. Hamilton has now in press and nearly ready a pamphlet containing a biographical sketch of his remarkable life, with a fine lithograph picture of himself. This book also contains a complete history of Prof. H.'s wonderful cures—his theory of diseases, and the only natural, safe and positive treatment for all chronic diseases—a valuable work for everybody. Sent free.

Have no hesitancy in writing to the doctor, and state to him your case in full, and he will deal honestly and promptly with you. All letters to him must be addressed thus:

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease, Consumption, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure.

To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used, free of charge, with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a SURE CURE FOR CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, etc. The object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable; and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address

ADVERTISING AGENTS,

WHAT ADVERTISERS SAY.

The firm, whose letter we print below, gave us in 1867 what was then the largest contract we had ever received for our "Lists of One Hundred Local Newspapers." The fact that they this year renew the order and increase the amount is the best argument we can give that these "Lists" are good advertising mediums.

LIPPINCOTT & BAKEWELL,

MANUFACTURERS OF

AXES, SHOVELS, SAWS, ETC.,

No. 118 WATER STREET,

PITTSBURG, PA., Dec. 3, 1868.

MESSRS. GEO. P. ROWELL & CO.—Gentlemen: One year ago with much hesitation we gave you an advertisement for one of your Lists of One Hundred local papers; a very short time thereafter we unhesitatingly added two more Lists of One Hundred papers.

But a short time elapsed before we were inquired of on every side for "Colburn's Patent Red Jacket Ax," proving to us that your idea of Lists had reached the very parties to whom we wanted to introduce the new patent Ax.

The year having now nearly gone by, we cannot but believe your system of advertising by "Lists of Local Papers" is just the kind of advertising we want, and we to-day forward you an order still adding one more List of One Hundred papers, making the number now altogether four (4) Lists of One Hundred (100) local papers.

The more we talk with newspaper agents and editors' agents the more satisfied we are that the arrangement we have made with you is preferable to any we have ever heard of. The merit of the Ax itself has, of course, something to do with the great demand for it, but we are satisfied that by your system of advertising by "Lists" we have accomplished in one year what would have ordinarily taken us five years to accomplish. Respectfully,

LIPPINCOTT & BAKEWELL.

The National Publishing Company of Philadelphia have been among the largest advertisers in our "Lists of Local Country Newspapers." Their bills for these alone amount to not less than $20,000. The testimony of their letter may be taken as an answer to those who inquire if these "Lists" can really be good advertising mediums.

We have tried every possible mode of advertising, having dealt with the press direct, and through nearly every advertising agency in the country, and have no hesitation in saying that your Lists have paid us fifty per cent. better than any other way. Respectfully,

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

NO BABY IN THE HOUSE.

This little poem was written by a San Francisco school girl, Miss Clara Dolliver, aged, at the time of her writing it, thirteen or fourteen years.

No baby in the house, I know—
'Tis far too nice and clean:
No toys by careless fingers strewn
Upon the floors are seen.
No finger marks are on the panes,
No scratches on the chairs,
No wooden men set up in rows,
Or marshalled off in pairs;
No little stockings to be darned,
All ragged at the toes,
No pile of mending to be done,
Made up of baby clothes;
No troubles to be soothed,
No little hands to fold,
No grimy fingers to be washed,
No stories to be told;
No tender kisses to be given,
No nicknames, "Dove" and "Mouse;"
No merry frolics after tea—
No baby in the house.

THE NEEDY GRASSHOPPER.

BY ANNIE MOORE.

"Good morning, sir," said an idle and unfortunate grasshopper to a very busy bee. "Can you give me a few hints as to the best way to make honey? I suffered very much last winter from hunger, and am determined it shall not be so again. Besides, I am fond of honey, and would like to learn to make it, if only for the pleasure of eating it now. What is the idea in going into flowers head first, as you do?"

"I have no time to tell you," said the bee, "and there are already too many in the business. And then you are not fitted for it. Your knees and elbows are too sharp;" and he flew away.

"Very polite, to make comments upon my personal appearance! I mean to try to make honey, at all events," said the grasshopper, watching closely another bee, who went buzzing into a flower. "I see how it is done, and I can buzz with my wings, if it is necessary." So he made a leap from the wall where he sat, into a little harebell that grew near by. The delicate flower was torn in pieces.

"Poor, perishable thing!" said he, as he hopped back to the wall in disgust.

Just then he saw a spider industriously spinning his web in the hedge.

"Good morning, neighbor," said the grasshopper.

"Good morning," said the spider, rather gruffly, for he never liked to be disturbed at his work.

"I would like to ask one or two questions about making a web," said the grasshopper. "I have often watched you at your work in my leisure moments, but can't exactly see how you manage it. I am very tired of grass and things. Are flies good?"

"Rather!" said the spider.

"That looks easy," said the grasshopper; "I wonder if I could do it."

"Nothing like trying," said the spider.

"You go backward and forward quite steadily, I see. I am accustomed to go on the jump. That would not do as well, perhaps."

"Go straight and keep your line taut," said the spider.

"Thank you for the information," said the grasshopper. "I have a great mind to try."

"Not on this side of the hedge," said the spider; "this belongs to me."

"Oh, certainly not," said the grasshopper.

Then the spider went into his den, and the grasshopper hopped over the hedge and began to go backward and forward, as he had seen the spider do.

A gay fly came flitting by. "If this web were only done, I could catch him," thought the grasshopper; but he said, "What do you do for a living, my friend?"

"Do!" said the fly—"nothing! I am a gentleman. I amuse myself."

"How about the cold winter?" said the grasshopper.

"Oh, I creep into a snug hole and sleep till the warm days come again," said the fly.

"That's a new idea," said the grasshopper. "Though I am afraid I could not sleep so long—I am rather nervous. Even in the short summer nights I sing as much as I sleep. But pray tell me if you see anything like a web here. I have been going backward and forward and across, as the spider does, for as much as ten minutes, but I fear I shall not succeed."

"There's no sign of a web," said the fly, who knew all about such matters. "That reminds me; the old spider on the other side has been making one on purpose to catch me. I must go and have a little sport with him. Did you ever try it? Fall at one corner of his web, slyly, and he comes running out of his den with his mouth open to eat you, while you soar gracefully away."

"Then you are good to eat," said the grasshopper, smacking his lips, for he was hungry.

"Oh, no! Far from it," said the fly. "It is only his whim;" and he flew over the hedge.

Then the grasshopper jumped down in despair, and walked along the garden path, thinking what he would do next.

An ant came to her door to see which way the wind blew. A bright thought came into his head. "Good morning, madam," said he. "You take lodgers, I believe. I want to find comfortable quarters for the winter, and am willing to make myself useful."

"I thought you were a dancing master," said she.

"I was, madam," said he, "but that business is dull, now the times are so hard. Though perhaps you would like to learn. You have just the figure for it."

"No, I thank you," said she, "I don't approve of dancing;" and she shut the door in his face.

"Of course not. I might have known it," said he; "a grasshopper never found a friend in an ant since the world began."

Just then he saw a notice by a doorway under the rock, "Tailoress wanted."

He rapped at the door and a striped snake put his head out.

"Do you want a tailoress?" said the grasshopper.

"Yes," said the snake, "the times are so hard that I mean to have my cast-off snake skins mended and wear them again. 'A stitch in time is worth two in a bush,' you know?"

"Yes, I know it," said the grasshopper.

"Are you good at the needle?" said the snake.

"I am good at everything," said the grasshopper, "excepting at making honey and spinning webs. But I am not sure that I know exactly what you mean by 'the needle.'"

"Begone, then," said the snake; "I see you are an impostor."

The autumn wind blew cold and sharp as the poor grasshopper turned sadly away.

"Am I then an impostor!" thought he. "My father taught me no trade, and left me no inheritance. Every one else has some way of providing for himself. Even the silly fly seems to be a favorite of fortune. Well, then, if I can do nothing else, I can at least try to take a long nap as he does. But I will eat some poppy seeds first. My mother used to eat them, I remember."

So he took a strong dose of poppy seeds, and crept into a hole in the wall to sleep away the long, cold winter, if he could.—The Children's Hour.

TO MAKE AN ÆOLIAN HARP.—Of very thin cedar, pine, or other soft wood, make a box five or six inches deep, seven or eight inches wide, and of a length just equal to the width of the window in which it is to be placed. Across the top, near each end, glue a strip of wood half an inch high, and a quarter of an inch thick, for bridges. Into the ends of the box insert wooden pins, like those of a violin, to wind the strings around, two pins at each end. Make a sound-hole in the middle of the top, and string the box with small cat gut, or blue first fiddle strings. Fastening one end of each string to a metallic pin in the end of the box, and carrying it over the bridges, wind it around the turning pin in the opposite end of the box. The ends of one box should be increased in thickness where the wooden pins enter, by a piece of wood glued on the inside. Tune the strings in unison, and place the box in the window. It is better to have four strings, as described, but a harp with a single string produces an exceedingly sweet melody of notes, which vary with the force of the wind.—Universal Encyclopedia.

SCIENTIFIC.

"MODERN ENGINEERING."

BY HON. WM. J. M'ALPINE.

A large audience assembled in Steinway Hall, February 17, to hear the last lecture of the course before the American Institute. The lecturer, after a few introductory remarks, said: Engineering is peculiarly the expouent of modern development. Its definition is "the acquisition of that species of knowledge whereby the great sources of power in nature are converted, adapted and applied for the use and convenience of man," which covers the civil and military engineer, the architect and mechanician, the closet theorist, and the practical workman. The subject covers the locomotive and its railway; the steam engine and its application; the metals and their manipulation; the workshops and their great tools; modern ordnance and armor; naval construction, telegraphy, bridges, canals, water supplies, harbors, etc.; and has been characterized by the various applications of steam, the product and manipulations of metals and telegraphy. Among the most important of the discoveries and appliances on modern engineering is the locomotive. It was invented at the beginning of this century, but was not successfully used until 1829, since which time it has increased from four to forty tuns in weight, and from fourteen to sixty miles per hour in speed. Then grades of fifty feet per mile were the maximum; now those of four hundred and forty feet at Mont Cenis, and five hundred and twenty-eight on the Baltimore and Ohio, have been used. Forty years ago Horatio Allen had to mount the footboard of the first locomotive himself; now fifteen thousand are daily whirling over forty thousand miles of railways in this country alone. To-day locomotives are passing over the summits of the Rocky mountains and Sierra Nevada, and before the year closes will go from ocean to ocean. From the days of Noah until those of the locomotive, civilized population was confined to the water lines. This one engine has spread an avalanche of peoples upon our fertile interior, who now form more than one-half of our population and sources of prosperity. The Erie canal, originally built for vessels of sixty tuns, has just been enlarged for those of two hundred and fifty tuns, and its increasing traffic already demands an enlargement for vessels of one thousand tuns. Of the traffic of the great West it now carries more than all of the great trunk lines of railway between the St. Lawrence and the Potomac. One canal boat carries more tunnage than a freight train, and the Erie canal brings daily to tide water more than five times as much tunnage as the New York Central. Its tunnage exceeds that of all the foreign commerce of this city. The materials used in its construction exceed in quantity those required for the two thousand miles of the Pacific railway. The Croton Aqueduct exceeds in engineering merit any work of its kind in the world. The American examples of bridges embrace those of every material and form, and many of huge dimensions. The Niagara and Cincinnati wire suspension, by Roebling; the Havre de Grace of wood, by Parker; the Schuylkill bridge of cast iron arches, by Kneass; and the Victoria iron girder, by Stephenson, are among the most noted. In submarine works are the piers of the Potomac and Croton aqueducts, of the Havre de Grace and Harlem bridges, and the founding of the United States Graving Dock, at Brooklyn. The aqueducts and Graving Dock were founded by means of coffer dams, the Havre de Grace bridge by means of iron caissons, and the piers of the Harlem bridge are composed of large cast iron columns or hollow piles, driven by the new discovered pneumatic process. A mass of metal of a tun weight was unknown before the Christian era. Now those in cast iron up to one hundred and fifty tuns, in wrought iron to forty tuns, and in steel or bronze to twenty-five tuns, are cast in any desired form, and turned or bored with the most perfect accuracy. Two years ago I saw the largest lathe in England, which swings twenty-two feet, and will take in a shaft forty-five feet long. Six months ago I saw one in this country which swings thirty feet, and will take in a shaft of fifty feet. There are planers which will plane iron fifty feet in length; others of eighteen feet in width; others fourteen feet in height, taking off metal shavings of two and a half inches in width and a quarter thick. Not long since I witnessed the penetration of a wrought iron shield of fifteen inches thickness by an elongated cannon shot of twelve inches diameter. The largest European gun is of steel, by Krupp, fourteen inches bore, and will throw a ball of one thousand pounds, but has never been fired. The next largest European gun is an Armstrong rifle, which throws a shell of six hundred and ten pounds. The twelve-inch American Rodman rifle throws an elongated shot of six hundred and thirty pounds, and the twenty-inch smooth bore, a spherical shot of one thousand and seventy two pounds. The "Swamp Angel" is a Parrot rifle, eight inches bore, and threw shot of one hundred and fifty pounds a distance of five and a half miles into Charleston. Its ancient rival, "Mons. Meg," is twenty inches bore, and threw stone balls of eighteen and a half inches in diameter, but notwithstanding its quaint legend, its range did not exceed a mile and a half.

It is said that telegraphy may be read by each of the five senses, namely: sight, sound, feeling, taste and even smelling. The method of signaling through the Atlantic cable is exactly the reverse of that of the land lines, and is done by alternate currents of positive or negative electricity, but ten per cent. of which is allowed to cross the ocean; and, therefore, an almost microscopic receiving instrument is used. Last autumn General Reynolds sent a message ninety-two miles across Lake Superior by means of the heliotrope (or mirror) without the aid of either wire or cable. The works of the ancients are often referred to as excelling, in magnitude, accuracy of workmanship, and beauty of design, those of modern times. This view is in part at least quite erroneous. Their works were generally for useless purposes, although there are many exceptions, such as their canals, waterworks, military roads and bridges, which show that they were occasionally called upon for works of utility. The stones in the temple of Baalbec are the largest save one of any building in the world. They range from one thousand two hundred to one thousand two hundred and seventy-five tuns; the one at St. Petersburg is one-fifth larger. The monoliths of Egypt are from two hundred to three hundred tuns, and a few of seven hundred tuns. The obelisk of Luxor, now in Paris, weighs two hundred and fifty tuns. The "goodly stones" of the temple at Jerusalem weighed three hundred and fifty tuns each. The speaker then described, from the most trustworthy sources, the probable method of constructing the great Pyramid of Gizeh, including the method of quarrying, transporting and laying the stone, and stated that, instead of scaffolding, a mound of earth and an inclined causeway were used, and when the structure was completed the earth was removed. This pyramid contained six million five hundred thousand tuns of stone, and the embankments required fifty million tuns of earth. All of the masonry of the Erie canal amounts to but one-third of this, and all of the earth moved for the Pacific railway amounts to but that used instead of scaffolding for this pyramid. It required the labor of five hundred thousand men for thirty years, and cost $5,000,000,000. A modern engineer would construct such a work for $100,000,000, and use a tithe of the men. The Coliseum of Rome was of but one-third of the size of the London Exhibition building, and but one-sixth of the Paris building. The tunnage of the Ark was twelve thousand, of the show ships built by Ptolemy somewhat less, and of the Great Eastern twenty two thousand five hundred tuns. Some of the modern men-of-war have nearly nine thousand tuns displacement, and our passenger ships three thousand to five thousand tuns. The largest steam engines in the world were those used in draining the Haerlem Mere, with steam cylinders of twelve feet diameter and fifteen feet stroke, driving eight pumps of sixty-three and seventy-three inches diameter, and ten feet stroke. These three engines were capable of delivering a volume of water six times as great as that of the Croton. The next largest pumps are those of the Graving Dock at Brooklyn, of one-third of the capacity of those at Haerlem Mere. The steam engines next in size are those of the Bristol and Providence steamers, with cylinders of nine feet two inches diameter, and twelve feet stroke. The speaker then described the Bessemer steel process, and spoke of the changes which it is destined to produce in engineering structures.—Seven of the most noted modern engineering works, to contrast with the seven wonders of the ancient world, are the Thames Tunnel, the Great Eastern steamship, the Atlantic cable, the Britannia and Niagara bridges, the Erie canal, modern ordnance, and the Pacific railway. Among the great projects of the age are those for building canals, railways, tunnels, bridges and steamers. In canals, we have the project of one around the Falls of Niagara; a re-enlargement of the Erie for vessels of one thousand tuns; the Suez, nearly completed; one across the Alleghanies in Virginia; one through the Nicaragua lake or Panama, and one from Huron to Ontario. In railways, we have the Pacific on the eve of completion; the Mont Cenis in rapid progress; one across the continent from Rio Janeiro begun, and many others of magnitude. Of bridges, we have those in progress across our great Western rivers; one proposed across the East river, at New York, of one thousand six hundred feet clear span; two over the Hudson, above and below West Point; another across the Straits of Messina, covering the "Scilla and Charybdis with clear spans of one thousand metors (two-thirds of a mile) each," and with piers of seven hundred feet high, half in and half out of the sea, and finally the modern "Pons Asinorum," a bridge project across the Straits of Dover, sixteen miles long, in clear spans of two miles each, with piers of one thousand feet depth in the water. This project is said to be favored by Napoleon. In tunnels we have that of Mont Cenis, eight miles, and of the Hoosic, five miles in length, both in rapid progress; one of wrought iron tubes at London, and another at Chicago, almost completed; tunnels proposed under the East and North rivers, at New York, under the Ganges at Calcutta, and under the Straits of Dover.—Scientific American.

TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every house keeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of.....$10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of.....15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of.....20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of.....25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased;

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

DARBY'S

PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

Letter from Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia:

CRAWFORDSVILLE, GA., Sept. 29, 1868.

Darby's Prophylactic Fluid is an article of little cost, but great value. Its domestic as well as medicinal uses are numerous; while its specialties are most wonderful. I have not been without it for ten years, and no head of a family who can afford to have it should be without it.

ALEX. H. STEPHENS.

The Wonderful Family Medicine.

Letter from the Surgeon General of the late Confederate States:

RICHMOND, VA., Jan. 14, 1869.

JOHN DARBY & Co., No. 160 William St., N. Y.—Gentlemen: I have received your letter of the 15th of December, 1868, calling my attention to your (Darby's Prophylactic) Fluid.

I most cheerfully state that the Fluid was furnished to and extensively used by the Surgeons in charge of General Hospitals in the Confederate service, with great benefit to the patients, all the surgeons making a favorable report. A great deal of it was used in the hospitals.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAM'L PRESTON MOORE, M. D.,

The Astonishing Disinfectant.

EMORY COLLEGE, OXFORD, GA., December 28, 1868.

PROF. DARBY—Dear Sir: Having not been engaged for many years in the active duties of the medical profession, I am only superficially acquainted with the claims of your Prophylactic Fluid, but am well acquainted with its chemical elements.

While, therefore, I cannot speak experimentally of the value of the compound, yet the disinfecting and Therapeutic properties of the agents employed in its composition, together with the well known reputation of its discoverer as a chemist, authorize me to regard its merits as of a high order. On the whole, it must be considered as a valuable contribution to the class of articles to which it belongs.

These views, I may add, are sustained by the testimony of many competent judges who have tested its properties.

Believe me, dear sir, your's respectfully,

A. MEANS, M. D., LL. D.

Cures Burns, Wounds, Stings, Etc.

ALABAMA INSANE HOSPITAL,
Tuscaloosa, December 22, 1868.

MESSRS. JOHN DARBY & Co., 160 William St., N. Y.,—Gentlemen: I received your circulars of the 10th instant, asking an expression of opinion from me as to the merits of your Prophylactic Fluid. The preparation has been so generally used by the profession and public at large, and so universally esteemed, that it seems to me to need no further recommendation.

As a disinfectant, and remedial agent too, when indicated, it is not excelled by any similar preparation. We use permanganate preparations very extensively in this Hospital, and could not do without them. I consider yours the best and most elegant preparation of the kind manufactured.

Respectfully yours, etc.,

P. BRYCE, M. D.,
Supt. and Phys'n Ala. Insane Hospital.

A Perfect Pain Killer.

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE,
Staunton, Va., Jan. 9, 1869.

PROF. DARBY: When I was President of the Lagrange Female College, of Georgia, I used your Prophylactic Fluid in the College with decided success. Both as a disinfectant and as a remedy for sores and burns, etc., it was efficacious and proved to be what it is represented. Every family and public institution ought to have it. I wish you great success in the sale of it.

WM. A. HARRIS, D. D.,
Pres. W. F. College, Staunton, Va.

Never was there a family medicine so highly recommended as this. Try it and you will never regret it.

Let every country merchant visiting New York this spring put this article on his list. But don't wait. Order it at once.

And so we might fill this entire paper with recommendations from the very best men in the country.

There is no question that this is a most wonderful and useful article as a disinfectant, and for wounds, sores, burns, poisons, colic, as a tooth wash, general purifier, etc.

Every Druggist or Country Merchant has it for sale.

THE THIRTY-FIRST ANNUAL Session of the WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE,

MACON, GEORGIA,

Begins on OCTOBER 5, 1868, under the direction of the following

FACULTY.

Rev J M Bonnell, D D, President.
Rev O W Smith, A M, Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy.
Rev W C Bass, A M, Professor of Natural Science.
C Schwartz, A M, Professor of Latin and Modern Languages.
Mrs A R Leak, Assistant in Literary Department.
Carl Hintz, Musical Director, (with ample assistance.)
Mrs E T Crowe, Teacher of Drawing and Painting.

CHARGES—There are three terms in the scholastic year. For each term the charges, which are to be paid at the beginning of the term, are as follows:

Regular tuition, $30. Board including washing, fuel and lights, $75. Incidental fee charged to day scholars, $1.

The following are optional: French, $15; Instrumental Music, $25; use of Instrument, $3; Vocal Music in class, $2—not charged to those who take Instrumental Music; Drawing, $15; Painting, $20.

Pupils who take French may be excused from Latin without affecting their graduation.

Special advantages provided in the departments of French, Music and Painting. For further information address the President.

J. M. BONNELL,
sep5 1f President.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION. — TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300. PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

HOMES IN BRITISH HONDURAS.

FREE FROM TAXATION.

THE PUTNAM IMMIGRATION ASSOCIATION (Limited) of Belize, British Honduras, has been founded, under the laws of that Colony, with a Capital Stock of $500,000, coin, in five thousand shares of $100 each.

The Association has purchased of the Colonial Government an area of about 500 square miles of territory, comprising some of the choicest Sugar, Tobacco, Corn, Rice and Cacao lands in the Colony.

The Association will sell to each family that will locate upon and occupy the land between this and the 12th of July next, 160 acres at 50 cents per acre, payable in Five Years from date of settlement, without interest. The Association will donate to every Parent and Child of each family, who may be living on the land at the end of the second year from date of settlement, one Share of the Association's Stock, the value of which will be greater than the price paid for the land.

An adult male member of each family who will locate, put up a cabin, and clear enough land to provision his family, will be recognized as a bona fide settler.

These lands will produce from three to five hogsheads of Sugar per acre, without cultivation. Sugar boiling can be carried on during eight months of the year. Two crops of Tobacco, Corn, Rice, Plantains and many kinds of vegetables can be made in a year. The country is healthy, and white men can work to better advantage in the warm months than in the Southern States. These facts are demonstrated by the experience of 350 Southerners now settled in the Colony.

No family should go that has not means sufficient for its support for twelve months after locating on the land.

The steamship Mexico will leave New Orleans for Belize on the 20th of February, the steamship Trade Wind on the 27th of February, and make the trip in five or six days. First class passage, $45, greenbacks; second class, $25. The Trade Wind makes a monthly trip.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC,

Or, Vegetable Medicine.

T. K. PRICE, Esq., Vendor of "Price's Patent Texas Tonic," or Vegetable Medicine:

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate use and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best recipe that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetable Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therefore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefitted.

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

We remain yours truly,

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this Institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing, it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Benners.

For further information apply for circular to

O. F. CASEY,
aug16 2m Secretary of Faculty.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTItute, Staunton, Virginia.

The next session begins on the 21st day of SEPTEMBER, 1868, and closes on the 24th of June, 1869.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with a Faculty of twelve professors, teachers and matrons.

This is a Female College of the first rank; one of the most flourishing in the South; young ladies here from nearly all sections of Virginia, and various Southern States. Method of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Health and comfort of pupils unsurpassed. Those from the Gulf States, especially, have greatly improved in health. No social disquietude. The population of this great Valley is nearly all white. This institution is an educational home for the daughters of the South.

Charges for the entire scholastic year, board and tuition, in collegiate course, embracing

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have again to notice a fair degree of animation in most branches of the wholesale trade, country merchants and planters buying freely, and dry goods dealers and others being also busily engaged in filling orders by mail. The previous active demand for sugar has subsided, and, in the absence of competition among buyers, sellers have been compelled to accept figures showing a decided decline: This is the first unfavorable turn since the upward movement excited by the disturbances in Cuba and their effect on the Northern and Western markets. Our accounts from other points, also, indicate a subsidence of the previous speculative feeling and quiet markets, but without any quotable decline. Molasses has been in fair request at about previous rates. Western produce has shown but little movement. The receipts of corn, however, have been more liberal, and all fit for shipment has met a ready sale at full prices. There are large foreign orders pending here for both wheat and corn if offered at prices which will leave the smallest margin for export. Pork and bacon have improved and met a fair demand. Flour, also, has been in better request, but we have very little movement to notice in other leading articles.

We have nothing important to add to our previous reports from the country. Both sugar and cotton planters continue to complain of their being seriously retarded by the rains and increased difficulty in obtaining laborers.

The river has risen one inch since our last report, and is now three feet three inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 26th ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	8984
Lake	22
Arkansas	530
Mobile	485
Florida	29
Texas	67
Total	10117

On Saturday, under a more cheerful feeling, inspired by the Liverpool accounts, as well as by the large falling off in the receipts at all the ports, the demand improved, and 2,400 bales changed hands at 27 to 27¼c. for low middling, early in the day, and 27¼ to 27⅛c. subsequently, strict classification bringing in one or two cases as high as 27¾c. On Monday, the Liverpool market having been apparently unaffected by our light receipts, the demand subsided, and, in order to realize, factors were compelled to recede to Friday's figures, while the sales were confined to 1,600 bales. On Tuesday the market opened with a limited inquiry, one or two parties having orders to fill for specific qualities, and a few others looking around for cheap lots, and nothing having transpired subsequently to impart any animation to the movement, the business embraced only 1,300 bales, taken at irregular prices, in some instances showing no variation from Monday, but in others exhibiting a decline of fully ⅛c. The supply on sale was so limited as hardly to furnish scope enough to constitute a market, but, on the other hand, the demand was proportionally slack. On both sides parties appeared to be awaiting further developments from abroad.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 5,300 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 669,209 bales, against 459,560 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 20,032 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 9,761 bales to France, a decrease of 162,642 to Great Britain, and of 7,246 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	24½ to 25¼
Good ordinary	26 to 26¾
Low middling	26¾ to 27¼
Middling	27¼ to 28
Strict middling	28¼ to 28¾

Sugar.—The demand has fallen off since our last review, but without any settled decline in prices, although some sales were made on Monday at a reduction of ⅛ to ¼c. per pound. The sales on Saturday and Monday embraced 600 hogsheads, mostly at 9⅛ to 11c. per pound for inferior, 12⅛ to 13c. for common, 13⅛ to 13¾c. for fair, 15¼c. for fully fair, 15⅝ to 15¾c. for prime, 16¼c. for choice, 17 to 17½c. for yellow clarified.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

THE CABINET AS NOMINATED.

WASHINGTON, Mar. 5.—E. B. Washburne, Secretary of State; Adolphe Borie, Secretary of the Navy; A. T. Stewart, Secretary of the Treasury; J. D. Cox, Secretary of the Interior; J. A. J. Cresswell, Postmaster General; E. D. Hoar, Attorney General. No Secretary of War named.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—The Senate considers the tenure of office bill after the morning hour.

House bills were introduced providing for levees in Mississippi and Louisiana, and amending the act providing for a provisional government for Virginia, Texas and Mississippi.

No developments regarding the Secretary of the Treasury. Weather bad.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—Evening In the Supreme Court Evarts introduced his successor, Judge Hoar, who qualified as Attorney General. Mr. Stewart and family depart for New York to-morrow.

The new secretaries are at work in all departments except the Treasury.

The two Republican committees from Mississippi have had several meetings without compromising their difficulties.

Senate.—The tenure of office bill was resumed. The friends of repeal struggled to put it on its passage, but it was referred to the Judiciary Committee by a vote of 33 to 25.

The bill strengthening the public credit was taken up.

Ferry introduced a joint resolution that the act removing ineligible civil officers in Virginia, Texas and Mississippi shall not take effect until thirty days after the passage of this resolution. Referred to Judiciary Committee.

A bill was introduced to pay loyal claimants in the late rebellious States. It contemplates the creation of three commissioners to be appointed by the President.

A very full caucus of Republican Senators was held to-day. Anthony was unanimously elected President pro tem. of the Senate. They determined to take up only the following general questions this session: Repeal of the tenure of office bill, the act to strengthen the public credit, redistribution of banking currency, reorganize the judiciary, enforce the fourteenth amendment, removal of political disabilities, reorganize the navy, and the Georgia question. The motion not to consider the Georgia question this session received only seven affirmative votes. Thayer, Edmunds, Carpenter and Sumner urged its immediate consideration.

During the caucus, pending the proposition to restrict the business of the session, it was resisted on the part of the Southern members on the ground that legislation was required for the settlement of the claims of loyal citizens; also that Sumner's bill preventing intimidation of voters, etc., should be passed. In addition they insisted that there should be some general friendly legislation for the reconstructed States, in order to create a better feeling and that they might understand that they were not neglected by the other sections. General Abbott's bill creating a commission for the settlement of the claims of loyal citizens is substantially the same as that introduced by him last session.

Mr. Woodbridge, by unanimous consent, moved that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from further investigation into the official conduct of the Hon. Richard Busteed, judge of the United States District Court of Alabama, and that the testimony already taken be laid on the table. The motion was agreed to.

Colonel Henry A. Morrow relieves General John S. Mason in Texas.

Rollins made a valedictory in which he said that the interests of the revenue had been sacrificed, that an unworthy policy of reconstruction might be forced upon an unwilling people, that bad men and bad women have controlled the Presidential nominations. Also that the country has abundant reason to believe that the expectation of pardon will not hereafter stimulate violations of the revenue law.

The Prussian delegation, owing to the immense quantity of bonds held in Germany, take great interest in the Secretaryship of the Treasury. They say to-night that Spinner is the man.

INTERVIEW WITH THE PRESIDENT.—THE MISSOURI DELEGATION.

The special Washington correspondent of the St. Louis Republican, in his dispatch of the 7th, furnishes the following:

The Missouri Radical delegation in Congress held a meeting yesterday, and resolved to wait on the President regarding the Federal appointments in that State. They reached the White House at three P. M., with Schurz and Drake at their head, and sought an interview. General Dent informed them that the President was not receiving any visitors, as he was engaged on important business. Drake said the Missouri delegation had come in a body, and must see him on a matter of importance. The President sent word that if this was the case to admit them. In they went, but before they could hardly say anything, the President said: "Gentlemen, I suppose you have come to see about the Missouri appointments?" They replied that such was the case. "Well," said Grant, "I have already made up my mind as to most of them. I have selected C. W. Ford to be collector of internal revenue in St. Louis. He is a good man. There is Colonel A. R. Easton, an old friend of mine, who helped me years ago in St. Louis to get the office of county surveyor. I intend to make him assessor." The delegation at these announcements stood aghast. "As for the postoffice," added the President, "I have determined to make my old friend, General A. J. Smith, postmaster. They are all good men; you cannot object to them."

The delegation did not dare to object, but they were intensely surprised. Not one of the men were on the slate of officers which the delegation had made up. After a few words they retired in confusion. The candidates for these places are still more confounded. W. P. Branscombe and General Pile are candidates for the postoffice. Branscombe says he has more endorsements for the office than any man in the United States. Carman, Newcomb and Judge Allen, of the county court, are after the vacant Missouri marshalship, and Bernard Farrar is a candidate for the pension agency. To-morrow the Missouri Democratic delegation in Congress will call on the President.

REV. W. H. PEARNE.

We respectfully call the attention of the editor of the Methodist Quarterly and the notice of the bishops of the Northern Methodist Church to the item below. It may at least help them to conceive the possibility of a change in the religious character of some of their brethren in these latitudes.

Governor Brownlow has appointed, and the Tennessee Senate has confirmed, Rev. W. H. Pearne as Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police of Memphis. While this appointment was pending before the Senate, the judge of the Memphis City Court, the judge of the Memphis Municipal Court, the attorney general for Shelby county, and a long list of others, all Radicals, sent up a written protest, in which they said:

"We protest against the confirmation of the Rev. Mr. Pearne, because he has uniformly upheld and justified the outrageous acts of the Beaumont administration; because he has been an active sympathizer with the late disorganizing but now defunct faction of the Republican party; and because, from our knowledge of the man, we believe that the office would be prostituted to corrupt purposes, to the sacrifice of the public good, and that he is generally deficient in the qualifications required for the position."

It is unnecessary to add that all the "rebels" of Memphis who knew anything of this man agreed with these Radical officials, that he would prostitute the office to corrupt purposes. But Brownlow wanted just such a man as Pearne, and the school fund stealers in the Senate thought they might need and could use him; and therefore he is chief of police in the principal city of the State.

DR. JUDSON baptized the first Burman convert in 1819, and since that time more than forty thousand converts have been baptized—Burmans, Karens and Shans—making an average of about two every day. Of these, twenty thousand are now living, and but a very small portion of the Karen population has been even visited or their territory explored.

OF THE one hundred and thirteen new pastors recognized last year by the Congregationalists in England, but seventy-six were educated among them, and the remainder were supplied from other denominations, mainly the Wesleyans.

Southern Methodist Publishing House.

TO THE LAITY AND PREACHERS, TRAVELING AND LOCAL, OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

We have received letters from several persons, both in the ministry and membership of the church, expressing a wish to aid us in the liquidation of the remaining liabilities that exist against the Publishing House, with the request that we so modify our Sixty Dollar Proposition as to give every member of the church an opportunity to lend a helping hand, and thus relieve the House by the 1st of July.

It is certainly desirable to accomplish this object, and after so much has been already effected, no one can hesitate to believe that a united effort on the part of the church will entirely relieve us from all embarrassment by the time specified.

We have made a careful calculation, and submit the following propositions to the church, which, if accepted between this date and the 1st of July, will entirely relieve us. We earnestly ask their acceptance:

One hundred persons to purchase each $60 worth of our publications.

One hundred persons to purchase each $50 worth of our publications.

One hundred and fifty persons to purchase each $40 worth of our publications.

Two hundred persons to purchase each $30 worth of our publications.

Two hundred and fifty persons to purchase each $25 worth of our publications.

Three hundred persons to purchase each $20 worth of our publications.

Five hundred persons to purchase each $15 worth of our publications.

One thousand persons to purchase each $10 worth of our publications.

Five thousand persons to purchase each $5 worth of our publications.

Six thousand persons to purchase each $2 worth of our publications.

Ten thousand persons to purchase each $1 worth of our publications.

Our brethren who may accept any of the above propositions, will please send their orders at once, accompanied with the money.

In many instances, entire churches will accept either of the two last named propositions, by purchasing hymn books for their congregation, and libraries for their minister; and by this means take fifty or one hundred shares in the one dollar or two dollar proposition.

Sunday schools can also replenish their libraries, or purchase new ones, by accepting any of the above propositions, and at the same time render us the aid we need.

Members of the church or others may also on these terms procure private libraries.

We submit these propositions, that every member of the church may have the privilege of contributing their aid to this object.

Persons who write to us will please state which proposition they accept, and whether they are ministers or laymen, and with which Conference they are identified.

Books sent by mail to any address on receipt of retail price.

Catalogues sent free of charge on application.

A. H. REDFORD, Agent.

PERSONAL INFLUENCE.

We remember once hearing an aged minister say, in a time of religious awakening, to a congregation in which were many who were deeply impressed with a sense of their personal responsibility, "Every one of you carries a key which will fit the wards of some heart that is locked against the Gospel, and the Lord means that you shall be his instrument to open it." There is a home-truth in these words, and the probability is that they are of almost universal application. No man or woman scarcely can be found so isolated as to be shut out from all ability to do anything for Christ or his kingdom; in the vast majority of cases there is just the relation indicated in the remark of the venerable man who has long since passed from earth. Should not every Christian most earnestly desire and pray for the grace which he needs, to use the key which he carries in his bosom? But there is an unconscious influence which is ever radiating from the life of one who walks with God. His character reveals itself. How careful should they be who call themselves the people of God, lest they offend the least of the Lord's little ones. How should they keep watch and ward over the door of their lips, who remember that the sin of the meekest of men was this, that he spake unadvisedly! How should they who know that out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, blasphemies, uncleanness, hatred, strife, murder, and all sins, pray that they may be enabled to keep their heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life.

John Angell James, well-known as one of the most successful ministers of Christ in England, declared, on one occasion, that the circumstance to which he was indebted for an impression that produced decisive results upon his character and subsequent usefulness, was his observation of a young man, who, before retiring, kneeled at his bedside in silent prayer. He had passed through college, not an irreligious youth, but he had restrained prayer before God, and this little incident was needed to show him his fault and lead him to closer fellowship with his blessed Lord. No Christian ever regretted holding his peace when excited by anger, but who can tell how many have mourned in bitterness of spirit over a hasty word? The sum of a Christian life is simply the aggregate of the influence exerted for God and Christ and his church. All the work included in that fleeting period which is called to-day, and which is all the time we shall ever have, is summed up in holy living; and holy living is that which Paul describes when he says: "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me."—Christian Intelligencer.

THE SUEZ CANAL.

This great work to connect the Mediterranean and Red seas has so far progressed that it may already be pronounced a grand success.

It may be remembered that in 1854 M. De Lesseps, a French gentleman of intelligence and wealth, while traveling over the ground, conceived the plan of opening a canal across the Isthmus of Suez, a distance of ninety miles, and although English engineers, among whom was Stephenson, had pronounced the scheme impracticable for many reasons, he succeeded in enlisting the approval and co-operation of the Viceroy of Egypt. A stock company was at once formed in France, with M. De Lesseps at its head, to which immense grants of land, men, and money and privileges were made by the Viceroy, and after several preliminary explorations and surveys the work was actually begun in August, 1859. Excepting one considerable interruption in 1863, the work has steadily progressed until the present time.

It has not been pushed with the energy that has characterized the work on our great railroad project to connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans; but the work has gone on, and is now so far accomplished that the projector promises that it shall be open throughout its entire length, from the Mediterranean to the Red sea, in October, 1869.

It will be ninety miles in length, three hundred and nine feet in width; and twenty-six in depth; and when finished, it is estimated, will cost $75,000,000. What return may it be expected to make for all this outlay? What advantage will it be to the world? This is answered by a correspondent of the Congregationalist in the following extract:

The commercial distance between Europe and the East will be shortened by nine thousand miles. The one thousand five hundred vessels which are said to pass every year to and fro around the Cape of Good Hope between New York and India, China and Japan, will find five thousand miles taken off their voyage. As voyages shorten, so will commerce increase, and avenues of trade will open in every direction. But trade and commerce open the way for civilization and Christianity. Already Egypt is feeling the impulse of this enterprise, and a better day is dawning upon her. Hasten on, then, ye Maritime Canals, ye Continental Railroads, ye Oceanic Telegraphs! Belt the world with your channels of communication and your bonds of fellowship, and thus prepare the way of Him who shall ere long bring in his universal reign.—United Presbyterian.

THE largest submarine project of modern days, the French Atlantic Cable, is making rapid strides at the gutta-percha works and at the telegraph construction works at Woolwich, England. It is expected to be laid in August. It consists of three thousand and forty-seven miles of rope, and it will be submerged from the same ship and by the same experienced hands that were engaged over the previous cables.

GIVING ADVICE.

Whatever skepticism there may be in regard to its being more blessed to give than to receive, where financial values are involved, it is certain that there is none in relation to giving advice. It is readily, heartily and profusely given, and yet, strange to say, it is most generally gingerly and coldly received. It would seem that society has constituted and organized itself into "a universal and gratuitous advice-giving association." Nearly all persons have elected themselves honorary members—members for life. It is not necessary to attain one's majority to become a life member. Boys and girls, as soon as they begin to take the first lessons in composition, feel authorized to assume the position and office of life membership in the association. Our examination, graduating and commencement occasions are deemed by the young members as most opportune and fitting opportunities to exhibit their talents and fitness for the position which they have assumed. On such occasions simpering misses and beardless youths, years this side of virility, give sage advice on education, on political economy, on government, the formation of character, and the general conduct of life. The middle aged and old, of course, regard themselves as members who have "seen service," and whose ripe attainments will fit them for the grave duties of their office. Advice is profusely given to all classes; but those whose office it is to serve the community in some public relation are the especial favorites of the association. Presidents, professors and teachers are continually being told the best method of conducting their institutions, of disciplining their pupils, and pushing forward their students in the laborious paths of learning. It is not thought by the association to be necessary to have the benefit of experience to qualify for advice—the capacity is inherent and intuitive in human nature. So without scholarship, or any practical acquaintance with the business, any one of the association may advise the conductors of educational institutions how best to manage them.

Editors are generally thought by the association to be in need of the practical wisdom which it is in their power to impart—the general style in which the paper ought to be gotten up and brought out, the character of the matter with which it should be filled, the subjects which should be most prominently presented, and especially the matters and subjects which should be left out.

The "cloth" are by no means ignored. Perhaps no class shares so richly in the all-pervading regards of the association. The preacher, from the year of his initiation to the fortieth of his ministry, is deemed to be specially in need of advice. His manner in the pulpit, he is told by some non-professional speaker, should be so and so. Then the matter of his preaching is matter of advice by the members of the association, young and old, the advice being as various as the ages, temperaments, capacities and education of the advisers. So, too, his manner and social habits, he is told, must be of a particular cast, according to the taste of his adviser. Certainly if the preacher in any way goes wrong, it is not the fault of abundant and various advice.

To no subject has the association devoted itself with more attention than to medicine and the curative art generally. It has accumulated a vast magazine of maxims, ancient and deep—all the best regimens, diets, preventions and cures. Just let a man complain of indisposition, as he moves about in social life, and he will find himself oppressed and his memory burdened with advice supposed to be suited to his necessities. Pharmacy, anatomy, physiology, professional experience, have nothing to do with the office of medical adviser—it's clearly an inherent right and intuitive capacity.

The wonder is, with so much knowledge of the laws of health, with so many specifics for the cure of disease, that anybody gets sick, and that all are not cured. All the pathies have their special advocates in the association, and many are always ready to tell you the best remedy in the world.

During "the late unpleasantness" it was wonderful to see in what overwhelming strength the association mustered, and how universally the members, young and old, male and female, came forward to tender their views of raising troops and supplies, of maintaining the par value of the currency, the marching of troops, building gunboats, the planning of battles, the assault and defense of besieged cities. It is no exaggeration to say that the members of the association, North and South, uttered in four years a hundred octavo volumes of advice, instructing generals, presidents, cabinets and Congress on the conduct of the war and the whole art of government.—Now, Mr. Editor, I must stop—must, for two reasons: first, to avoid being advised to do so; and second, because I am cut off from the usual resource of essayist in closing with advisory reflections. W.

THE New York Independent says: Bishop Arthur Cleveland Cox, of the Western New York diocese, has issued a pastoral letter to the clergy and laity under his jurisdiction, apropos to the season of lent. Having mentioned the late pastoral letter of the House of Bishops, as suggesting those practical matters to which attention should be particularly directed, he says:

"The enormities of theatrical exhibitions, and lasciviousness of dances too commonly tolerated in our times, are there so specially pointed out as disgraceful to the age and irreconcilable with the Gospel of Christ that I feel it my duty to the souls of my flock to warn those who run with the world to 'the same excess of riot' in these things, that they presume not to come to the holy table. Classes preparing for confirmation are informed that I will not lay hands, knowingly, on any one who is not prepared to renounce such things, with other abominations of 'the world, the flesh, and the devil.' Let all such choose deliberately whom they will serve; and, if salvation be worth striving for, let them be persuaded to a sober life, to self-denial, and to the pure and innocent enjoyments which the Gospel not only permits, but which it only can create. It is high time that the lines should be drawn between worldly and godly living; and I see no use in a font that is not sanctified to such ends. I have heretofore warned my flock against the blood-guiltiness of antenatal infanticide. If any doubts existed heretofore as to the propriety of my warnings on this subject, they must now disappear before the fact that the world itself is beginning to be horrified by the practical results of the sacrifices to Moloch which defile our land. Again I warn you that they who do such things cannot inherit eternal life. If there be a special damnation for those who 'shed innocent blood,' what must be the portion of those who have no mercy upon their own flesh? Dearly beloved, 'save yourselves from this untoward generation.'"

THE Church of England holds in fee simple the right to property worth $140,000,000 in gold, the annual income of which goes to support the clergy. And yet not more than half of the population of England and Wales is loyal to that church, and but forty per cent. in Scotland and twelve per cent. in Ireland.

MANY parents spoil their children by dressing them up when a dressing down would do them the most good.

THERE are said to be twelve candidates for the New Orleans collectorship.

TORRENT HYMN.

(LOCH CORUISK, SKYE.)

I.

The Torrent fills the air
With a terrible voice of prayer:
"God the Lord!
From the hollow of thy hand,
In the darkness of the land
I was poured;
And in solitude I bend
Round thy dimly shining feet
On the scaur,
While thou standest looking down
Upon the multitude and town
From afar;
While the black lake broodeth still,
Hark! the voices of the hill
How they die!
And I answer deep and long,
To the passing thunder cloud,
With a cry!
Lo! the seasons of the year
Glide below thee with no fear,
While still thou leanest here
On thy sword—
Yea, stilly night and day thou dost gaze on sea and shore,
On thy feet the rainbow hovers and my troubled waters roar,
While below thee, in the valleys, men adore and implore
God the Lord!"

II.

Full clear the Torrent saith
To the heart that hearkeneth:
"God the Lord!
Who shall meet thee in thy might,
Who shall stay thee if thou smite
With thy sword?
In a solitary place
Where the silence of thy face
Dwells like snow,
Thou abidest night and day,
And the troubled waters play
Down below;
There is stillness in thy skies
And the wonder of thine eyes
None may sound,
On thy face there is no change,
While thy shadow falleth strange
All around;
Yea, from silent height to height
Goes the murmur of thy might,
And the people name thy light
And thy word;
And stilly evermore thou abidest out of reach,
On thy feet the rainbow flutters, and my waters boil for speech,
While from valley unto valley mortals preach and beseech
God the Lord!"

Analysis of the Statistics of the Montgomery Conference for 1868.

DATA TAKEN FROM PUBLISHED MINUTES

Number of white members, 24,764; decrease last year, 254. Number of colored members, 4,307; decrease last year, 1,474. Total members, white and colored, 29,071. Total decrease, 1,728.

Number of local preachers, 302; decrease, 10.

Number of infants baptized, 888, being 1 to 28 white members; decrease, 35. Number of adults baptized, 1,444, being 1 to 17 white members; decrease, 1,065. There were nearly two adults to one infant baptized, but the ratio of infants to adults is greater by four per cent. than last year.

Number of accessions, 3,554. This includes both white and colored. Of these, nearly seven per cent. were Sabbath school scholars.

Number of deaths, 221, being less than one per cent. of white members.

Number of expulsions, 230, also less than one per cent.

Number of Sabbath schools, 285, being nearly in the ratio of three schools to the pastoral charge, while there is no report of schools from ten charges; decrease of schools, 5. Number of officers and teachers, 1,810; increase, 180. Number of scholars, 11,485; decrease, 876. There are over two church members to one scholar. Average number of scholars to the school, 40.

Number of scholars added to the church, 247, being two per cent. of the whole number of scholars.

Number of volumes in library, 27,946; average volumes to the school, 98; increase, 3,225.

Number of visitors taken, 1,462, being one to eight scholars; increase, 183.

Number of church periodicals taken, 893, being one to twenty-seven members. Largest number taken on any work, 70; next, 41. Average to the pastoral charge, 9, while none are reported from twenty white charges. Almost without exception, there is a significant ratio between the number of periodicals taken and the support of the pastor and other collections.

Number of churches, 426; value $235,925; average value, $538 81.

Number of parsonages, 16; value, $27,000; average value, $1,687 50.

Amount raised for local purposes: first, for Sabbath schools, $2,901 60; second, for building and repairing churches and parsonages, $9,946 75: total for local purposes, $12,848 35.

Amount raised for foreign missions, $410 85. Average amount to the member, one and three-fifths cents. Of the amount, one district, with 1,777 white members, paid $350; another, with 3,440 white members, paid $5 20. Amount paid by 5,217 members, or nearly one-fourth, the entire membership, $8 70. The average is too nearly infinitesimal to strike.

Amount raised for domestic missions, $2,847 71. Average per member, eleven and one-half cts.

Amount raised for education, $1,286 80. Average per member, five and one-fifth cents.

Amount raised for Conference collection, $2,666 53. Average per member, ten and four-fifths cents.

Amount raised for bishops' support, $1,273 79. Average per member, five and one-fifth cents.

Amount raised for presiding elders' support, $6,199 43. Average per member, twenty-five cts.

Amount raised for pastors' support, $35,679 31. Average per member, $1 44.

Whole amount raised for general purposes, $49,364 42. Average per member, $1 99.

Average amount paid presiding elders, $688 82. Greatest amount paid to any, $1,243 09; least, $140 75. Four received over the average; five under.

Average amount paid pastors in the regular work, $429 89, less, by $258 93, than the presiding elders' average. Pastors receiving over the average, 32; under, 51. Over the presiding elders' average, 16; under, 67. Presiding elders receiving less than pastors' average, 4. Largest amount paid to any pastor, $1,800; least, $31 50.

Average receipts in the district that paid the largest to support of the ministry, including presiding elder, $786 49, being $2 88 per member.

Average receipts in the one that paid least, $165 55, being 65 cents per member.

Largest per cent. on the "quarterage" paid in the district received by any presiding elder, 20½; least, 12. Of the others, one received 19½ per cent., one 16½, one 14½, two 14, one 13, one 12½.

The presiding elders received, on the whole amount of "quarterage," 14½ per cent.

Ten pastors received less than $100 each. Their aggregate receipts were $638 90; average, $63 89. Ten others received $800 and upward each. Their aggregate was $11,309 94, or 31½ per cent. on the entire amount paid for the support of the pastorate; average receipts, $1,130 99.

Two pastors together received more than the aggregate of thirty others, while none of the thirty received over $200.

Other important facts might be brought forward from these tables, but I am drawing too largely upon your columns. Many a homily might be written upon them. But I will dismiss them with two remarks.

1. The figures show a decrease of 254 white and 1,474 colored members. I wish to call attention to one fact in this showing, and that is the inaccuracy of this whole statistical statement of membership. This is easily shown, thus: The aggregate membership, white and colored, in 1867 was set down at 30,799—see minutes for 1867. Add the accessions of 1868, which are 3,554, and we have 32,213. This, less the numbers expelled, removed and died during 1868, which are 1,524, is 30,689. This last ought to express the aggregate this year, which would be an increase of 1,618. But the statistics make the aggregate 29,071, giving a decrease of 1,728, an error by 3,346. I take the aggregate of white and colored as data, because there is no discrimination made between them in the statement of accessions, expulsions, etc.—an oversight which will doubtless be corrected hereafter. This error runs through the whole statistics of membership. My purpose in noticing the above error is twofold: First, to show that there is no ground to support any certain conclusion as to the loss or gain of members last year. Friends need not be discouraged: foes need not be jubilant. Second, to impress, if possible, upon the preachers the importance of greater accuracy in making their statistics. The inference is strongly supported that either last year or the year before there was a great deal of guessing done.

2. Whatever the inaccuracy as regards the relative number of members may be for the two years, it does not affect materially the above financial showing. This showing speaks volumes. A church professing to shape her polity in accordance with the great commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach my Gospel to every creature," responds in a gift to this end, for a whole year, throughout an entire Conference, of one and three-fifths cents per member! This while China, with her teeming millions, is stretching out her hands to us for the bread of life! But Brother Home Evangelist replies: "We must first supply our own poor." Aye; but when will an annual contribution of eleven and one-half cents per member do that? The truth is, as the statistics show, those who pay nothing to foreign missions pay little or nothing to the domestic field, and run their pastor's support down to a ruinous minimum. But I cannot enlarge. I wish some one more competent would take up this analysis and make its figures burn conviction into the heart of every preacher and member in the Montgomery Conference.

Socks and Sirup.—A Better Way.

MR. EDITOR: You and your Tennessee brother seem to think that it is due your people to give them credit for their virtue in bestowing extra donations.

'Tis true it would be a very nice thing to receive handsome presents of almost anything, much less a whole half barrel of delicious sirup, or even a good supply of socks, though they were woolen; but we think our people have hit on the more excellent way.

Now there are a great variety of sirups. There is the golden, the cooler, the sugar house, and a great many even prefer the reboiled. But your people send you sirup, and never consult your taste in the matter, and you must bow and smile, and receive and eat it with the usual ecstacies. "How delicious! Isn't it nice!" though it may not be just what you prefer. The same may be said of the socks. Some may prefer woolen, some cotton, and it may be some prefer none at all. Yet you must receive them with the same blandishments, and wear them, though they may be anything else than what you prefer, unless you do as I did on one occasion, when presented with a pair of pantaloons that made my legs look naturally less than they were—deposit them in the first thick bushes that you come to by the way. Now my people, just before I left for the last Annual Conference, wishing to give me a suit of clothes extra, did not buy or select them, and thereby substitute their taste for mine, but gave me the cash, that I might consult my own taste or that of my wife in style and quality. Don't you think that a better way?

MANSFIELD.

MANSFIELD, Feb. 22, 1869.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

COLUMBUS, MISS., March 1, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: The minutes of the Mobile Conference show a large decrease in the membership of the church the past year. This is owing entirely to the want of full returns. There are thirteen circuits not reported, which, I have no doubt, will average two hundred members each. These, added to the number reported, would show an increase in the white membership. For instance, the Columbus district foots up two thousand and thirteen members and twenty-one local preachers, with five circuits not reported.

Now my knowledge of these circuits justifies me in saying that their aggregate membership sums up at least one thousand or twelve hundred, with twenty-three or twenty-four local preachers.

If the secretary, as has been our practice, had filled these blanks with the figures of the preceding year, it would have shown quite a different result.

I entered upon my work at this place immediately after Conference, but owing to the extremely cold weather, and having no arrangements for warming our new house of worship, our public exercises have not been as well attended as they would have been under different circumstances. Our prayer meetings are increasing in numbers and in religious interest.

Our Sunday school is thoroughly organized, with an efficient corps of superintendents and teachers. We have lately had an addition of seventy new scholars. I have commenced holding special services with the children once a month, and it promises well.

Rev. J. F. Tarrant has taken charge of the Female Institute, in this place, under very flattering auspices. He is "the right man in the right place." He will do well.

I shall soon make a thorough canvass for new subscribers to the ADVOCATE.

Wishing you well, I am, as ever, your's,

THOS. J. RAMSEY.

CLASS MEETINGS.

MR. EDITOR: I am glad to know that the preachers and people are waking up to the importance of a revival of class meetings. I read an article in the ADVOCATE of last week, headed "News from the Churches," from the Gadsden circuit, Montgomery Conference. It has the ring of the genuine metal. Preacher and people have gone to work together to rebuild the temple of Methodism. If the preachers will do their duty, and organize classes where they have been discontinued, and urge on the people the necessity of attending their class meetings, this time-honored and God-blessed institution will be revived. O that it might be, as in the past! May God bless Brothers Stimpson and Brindley.

But there are others at work. In conversation with a preacher of the Mobile Conference, a few days ago, he told me that he had class meetings at nearly every appointment on his circuit; and in talking with another, who has charge of a station where class meetings had been abandoned, he told me that he had organized two, both well attended, and the people glad to have them revived. I inquired of a brother class leader yesterday what they were doing in the way of class meetings at their church, and he told me instead of two, "as was the case last year," they had nine regularly organized classes. So the work goes on.

Mr. Editor, class meetings are the backbone of Methodism, and may I not add, the life-blood of the church.

A CLASS LEADER.

MARCH 2, 1869.

IT is said that General Garibaldi speaks about fourteen different languages. Being asked to write something for a little boy's scrap-book, he instantly composed some verses in Greek. He has been seen, within the last few days, composing verses in ancient and modern Greek, Spanish, Portuguese, French and Italian, always at the request of different friends. English is the last language he has acquired, having learned it in America in 1850 and 1851.

Statistics of University Attendance in Germany and German-Speaking Countries.

The New York Methodist says: Some of the German universities have been celebrating their fourth centennial anniversary, and yet young America has gotten the start of them—if not, the difference is only one of weeks—in publishing a common organ. The Academische Zeitschrift was commenced last year, and is edited by a permanent committee of students in Leipzig. Thus far the sheet exhibits a little editorial verdancy, which will naturally grow less, if only the publication can find support, by a little farther practice. The best thing we have thus far seen in it is its statistical table of university attendance for the summer term of 1868. We give a recapitulation, simplified and corrected as far as material has come to hand, to apply to the present winter term of 1868-9:

UNIVERSITIES.	No. of students in attendance.	No. of professors and other instructors.	No. of students to each instructor.
Vienna	3074	190	16.1
Berlin	2997	178	16.83
Prague	1412	93	15.5
Leipzig	1315	122	11
Munich	1217	124	9.8
Bonn	939	102	9.2
Breslau	923	89	10.4

East Tennessee Radical Methodism Waning.

The ministers and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in this field, have had a long and very trying conflict with the hired missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal Church North; but the victory is now turning extensively and beautifully in favor of the true and original Methodist Church of the South.

The unfair means used to influence our ministers and members to join them, and the very cruel and unjust measures adopted to intimidate and drive us from the country, are now roacting upon their own heads with tremendous power.—Public sentiment is setting against them.

Many of the sober and right-thinking men of this region are not willing any longer to remain in a church, the leaders of which will take and hold churches and parsonages which do not belong to them, turning the rightful owners out of doors; for in many instances they have locked and barred the doors against the very men and their families whose money built the houses—as in Athens, Knoxville, Jonesboro, Kingston and many other places. Their whining, prating and disgusting gasconade on the subject of loyalty can no longer blind the people against the injustice and meanness of their conduct toward the ministers and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the States South.

The people in many localities can no longer be kept in a church, by the presence and influence of which the lawless and cruel mob has been set upon peaceable and law-abiding ministers, for no other offense than exercising their right to preach the Gospel of peace and salvation to those who might choose to hear them. It is the inalienable right of every American citizen to form what church relations he may choose, and to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience; but the influence of many of the leaders of the Methodist Episcopal Church North, in East Tennessee, has been exerted in every possible way to deprive peaceable citizens and ministers of that right, in this free land, and in time of peace. No wonder that honest and good men should leave a church that has pursued such a course. There is one whole county from which the ministers of the Church South have been mobbed for nearly three years in succession; so that one entire denomination of Christians, in that county, is deprived of the right and privilege of hearing the Gospel from their own ministers, and of worshiping God according to the dictates of their own conscience. And that is the county in which the reverend extra loyal and liberty-loving Spencer Henry lives, by whose articles in the Knoxville Whig he sought to enlighten the public mind—in one of which he gives the important information, "if the preachers of the Church South will 'let them alone,' that they will not be disturbed." No minister of the Church South ever went to Blount county but for the purpose of preaching the Gospel peaceably to his own people—but that they were not allowed to do. Now, what does the reverend gentleman mean by "letting them alone?" He means, if the preachers of the great Methodist Episcopal Church, in the fifteen States South, will never again come into his county to preach the Gospel to their own people, that they will not be disturbed—that is to say, that the Southern Methodist preachers will not be mobbed in Blount county, for trying to preach the Gospel, if they will all stay away from there.

Is it not strange, Mr Editor, that people will be leaving a church whose loyal ministry teach such sentiments of Christian liberality? It was in that county, not far from Morganton, where young Neal was almost murdered in cold blood, for quietly riding along the public highway to his appointment, to preach the Gospel to his own people on the holy Sabbath. It was the soil of Blount county that was stained with the blood of that prudent and pious young minister, who was forced from his horse, dragged into the distant woods, tied to a tree, and beaten by two men at once, until his back was cut all to pieces, while he was in a gore of blood from head to foot—the beating continued until his back was cut into a jelly—all sensation gone, and life nearly destroyed—the rest of the defenders of the Methodist Episcopal Church standing round with pistols in hand, one of which had already been tried upon the head of the young man, cutting a great gash to the bone. This horrible, outrageous and terrible infliction was perpetrated in the interests and for the benefit of the Northern Methodist Church, in Blount county, where Mr. Henry is a leading and very influential man in his church. The Rev. J. Brillhardt was ridden upon a rail, and his life, with that of other ministers, threatened; and the Rev. C. Long and J. G. Swisher were driven before a mob fifteen miles, and made to carry poles upon their shoulders through the town of Athens, as a public indignity; and for the benefit of the same branch of Zion in McMinn and Meigs counties; and to feast the pious eyes of the Rev. P. E. and stationed preacher then in Athens, provided they got to see the sight. * * * * *

The following extract from a letter written by one of their own men, in East Tennessee, will show how men are coming to themselves. He says: "I connected myself with the Holston Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church North, of which I am sorry and ashamed. It is true, I have learned some useful lessons—I have found out what political preachers are, carpet baggers and scalawags. I am making my arrangements to get out of this ecclesiastico-politico, negro-equality organization; not to mention church and parsonage stealing mohocracy. I did wrong to leave the Church South; but I have learned much—have taken many notes by the way, and have seen some very ugly things." No doubt others feel just as this man does, and they will have the same sort of courage, we hope, to come out of that sinking ship called the "Methodist Episcopal Church;" for to-day there are about it, in this field, all the signs of a waning cause. It never can prosper in the South; while the Methodist Episcopal Church South is certain to be in all the future what it has ever been in the past—the original and principal Methodist Church in the States South.—Corr. of Nashville Christian Advocate.

ACCORDING to the decision of the Court of Arches, in England, lighted candles on the holy table are lawful only when they are needed for light, so that all that is now necessary is to darken the chancel for that purpose. The priest no longer elevates the elements above his head, which is declared to be unlawful; but he lowers his head down to the level of the table, and thus brings it beneath the elements. Besides this, he elevates the elements not, indeed, above his head, but to a level with the top of his head. It is said that more than two thousand English clergymen, members of the Church Union, sympathize with and support Mr. Mackonochie.

State of Roman Society at the Birth of Christ.

In the age of Augustus began that 'long slow agony,' that melancholy process of a society gradually going to pieces under the dissolving influence of its own vices, which lasted almost without interruption till nothing was left for Rome except the fire and sword of barbaric invasion. She saw not only her glories but also her virtues 'star by star expire.' The old heroism, the old beliefs, the old manliness and simplicity, were dead and gone; they had been succeeded by prostration and superstition, by luxury and lust.

'There is the moral of all human tales,
'Tis but the same rehearsal of the past,
First freedom, and then glory; when that fails,
Wealth, vice, corruption—barbarism at last;
And history, with all her volumes vast,
Hath but one page; 'tis better written here
Where gorgeous tyranny hath thus amassed
All treasures, all delights, that eye or ear,
Heart, soul could seek, tongue ask.'

The mere elements of society at Rome during this period were very unpromising. It was a mixture of extremes. There was no middle class. At the head of it was an emperor, often deified in his lifetime, and separated from even the noblest of the senators by a distance of immeasurable superiority. He was, in the startling language of Gibbon, at once 'a priest, an atheist and a god.'* Surrounding his person and forming his court were usually those of the nobility who were the most absolutely degraded by their vices, their flatteries, or their abject subservience. But even these men were not commonly the repositories of political power. The people of the greatest influence were the freedmen of the emperors—men who had been slaves, Egyptians and Bithynians who had come to Rome with bored ears and with chalk on their naked feet to show that they were for sale, or who had bowled 'sea-urchins all alive' in the Velabrum or the Saburra—who had acquired enormous wealth by means often the most unscrupulous and the most degraded, and whose insolence and baseness had kept pace with their rise to power. Such a man was the Felix before whom St. Paul was tried, and such was his brother Pallas,† whose golden statue might have been seen among the household gods of the senator, afterward the emperor, Vitellius. Another of them might often have been observed parading the streets between two consuls. Imagine an Edward II endowed with absolute and unquestioned powers of tyranny—imagine some pestilent Piers Gaveston, or Hugh de le Spenser exercising over nobles and people a hideous despotism of the back stairs—and you have some faint picture of the government of Rome under some of the twelve Cæsars. What the barber Olivier le Diable was under Louis XI, what Mesdames du Barri and Pompadour were under Louis XV, what the infamous Earl of Somerset was under James I, what George Villiers became under Charles I, will furnish us with a faint analogy of the far more exaggerated and detestable position held by the freedman Glabrio under Domitian, by the actor Tigellinus under Nero, by Pallas and Narcissus under Claudius, by the obscure knight Sejanus under the iron tyranny of the gloomy Tiberius.

It was an age of the most enormous wealth existing side by side with the most abject poverty.—Around the splendid palaces wandered hundreds of mendicants, who made of their mendicity a horrible trade, and even went so far as to steal or mutilate infants in order to move compassion by their hideous maladies. This class was increased by the exposure of children, and by that overgrown accumulation of landed property which drove the poor from their native fields. It was increased also by the ambitious attempt of people whose means were moderate to imitate the enormous display of the numerous millionaires. The great Roman conquests in the East, the plunder of the ancient kingdoms of Antiochus, of Attalus, of Mithridates, had caused a turbid stream of wealth to flow into the sober current of Roman life. One reads with silent astonishment of the sums expended by wealthy Romans on their magnificence of their pleasures. And as commerce was considered derogatory to rank and position, and was therefore pursued by men who had no character to lose, these overgrown fortunes were often acquired by wretches of the meanest stamp—by slaves brought from over the sea, who had to conceal the bolos bored in their ears,‡ or even by malefactors who had, to obliterate, by artificial means, the three letters§ which had been branded by the executioner on their foreheads. But many of the richest men in Rome, who had not sprung from this convict origin, were fully as well deserving of the same disgraceful stigma. Their houses were built, their coffers were replenished, from the drained resources of exhausted provinciols. Every young man of active ambition or noble birth, whose resources had been impoverished by debauchery and extravagance, had but to borrow fresh sums in order to give magnificent gladiatorial shows, and then, if he could once obtain an ædileship, and mount to the higher offices of the State, he would in time become the procurator or proconsul of a province, which he might pillage almost at his will. Enter the house of a Felix or a Verres. Those splendid pillars of mottled green marble were dug by the forced labor of Phrygians from the quarries of Synnada; that embossed silver, those murrhine vases, those jewelled cups, those master pieces of antique sculpture, have all been torn from the homes or the temples of Sicily or Greece. Countries were pillaged and nations crushed that an Apicius might dissolve pearls† in the wine he drank, or that Lollia Paulina might gleam in a second-best dress of emeralds and pearls which had cost 40,000,000 sesterces, or more than £32,000.‡

Each of these 'gorgeous criminals' lived in the midst of a humble crowd of flatterers, parasites, clients, dependants and slaves. Among the throng that at early morning jostled each other in the marble atrium were to be found a motley and heterogeneous set of men. Slaves of every age and nation—Germans, Egyptians, Gauls, Goths, Syrians, Britons, Moors, pampered and consequential freedmen, impudent confidential servants, greedy buffoons, who lived by making bad jokes at other people's tables; Dacian gladiators, with whom fighting was a trade; philosophers, whose chief claim to reputation was the length of their beards; supple Greeklings of the Tartuffe species, ready to flatter and lie with consummate skill, and spreading their vile character like a pollution wherever they went: and among all these a number of poor but honest clients, forced quietly to put up with a thousand forms of contumely§ and insult, and living in discontented idleness on the sportula or daily largesse which was administered by the grudging liberality of their haughty patrons. The stout old Roman Burgher had well-nigh disappeared; the sturdy independence, the manly self reliance of an industrial population were all but unknown. The insolent loungers who bawled in the forum were often mere stepsons of Italy, who had been dragged thither in chains—the dregs of all nations, which had flowed into Rome as into a common sewer, bringing with them no heritage except the specialty of their national vices. Their two wants were bread and the shows of the circus; so long as the sportula of their patrons, the occasional donative of an emperor, and the ambition of political candidates supplied these wants, they lived in contented abasement, anxious neither for liberty nor for power.

It was an age at once of atheism and superstition. Strange to say, the two things usually go together. Just as Philippe Egalité, Duke of Orleans, disbelieved in God, and yet tried to conjecture his fate from the inspection of coffee-grounds at the bottom of a cup—just as Louis XI shrank from no perjury and no crime, and yet retained a profound reverence for a little leaden image which he carried in his cap—so the Romans under the Empire sneered at all the whole crowd of gods and goddesses whom their fathers had worshiped, but gave an implicit credence to sorcerers, astrologers, spirit-rappers, exorcists, and every species of impostor and quack.‖ The ceremonies of religion were performed with ritualistic splendor, but all belief in religion was dead and gone. 'That there are such things as ghosts and subterranean realms not even boys believe,' says Juvenal, 'except those who are still too young to pay a farthing for a bath.'¶ Nothing can exceed the cool impertinence with which the poet Martial prefers the favor of Domitian to that of the great Jupiter of the capitol. Seneca, in his lost book 'Against Superstitions,'* openly sneered at the old mythological legends of gods married and gods unmarried, and at the gods Panic, and Paleness, and at Cloacina, the goddess of sewers, and at other deities whose cruelty and license would have been infamous even in mankind. And yet the priests, and Salii, and Flamens, and Augurs continued to fulfill their solemn functions, and the highest title of the emperor himself was that of Pontifex Maximus, or chief priest, which he claimed as the recognized head of the national religion. 'The common worship was regarded,' says Gibbon, 'by the people as equally true, by the philosophers as equally false, and by the magistrates as equally useful.' And this famous remark is little more than a translation from Seneca, who, after exposing the futility of the popular beliefs, adds: 'And yet the wise man will observe them all; not as pleasing to the gods, but as commanded by the laws. We shall so adore all that ignoble crowd of gods which long superstition has heaped together in a long period of years, as to remember that their worship has more to do with custom than with reality.' 'Because he was an illustrious senator of the Roman people,' observes St. Augustine, who has preserved for us this fragment, 'he worshiped what he blamed, he did what he refuted, he adored that with which he found fault.' Could anything be more hollow and heartless than this? Is there anything which is more certain to sap the very foundations of morality than the public maintenance of a creed which has long ceased to command the assent, and even the respect, of its recognized defenders? Seneca, indeed, and a few enlightened philosophers, might have taken refuge from the superstitions which they abandoned in a truer and purer form of faith. 'Accordingly, says Lactantius, one of the Christian fathers, 'he has said many things like ourselves concerning God.'† He utters what Tertullian finely calls 'the testimony of a mind naturally Christian.' But, meanwhile, what became of the common multitude? They, too, like their superiors, learnt to disbelieve or to question the power of the ancient deities; but, as the mind absolutely requires some religion on which to rest, they gave their real devotion to all kinds of strange and foreign deities—to Isis and Osiris, and the dog Anubis, to Chaldæan magicians, to Jewish exorcisers, to Greek quacks, and to the wretched vagabond priests of Cybele, who infested all the streets with their Oriental dances and tinkling tambourines. The visitor to the ruins of Pompeii may still see in her temple the statue of Isis, through whose open lips the gaping worshipers heard the murmured answers they came to seek. No doubt they believed as firmly that the image spoke as our forefathers believed that their miraculous Madonnas nodded and winked. But time has exposed the cheat. By the ruined shrine the worshiper may now see the secret steps by which the priest got to the back of the statue, and the pipe entering the back of its head through which he whispered the answers of the oracle.—Rev. F. W. Farrar in Seekers After God.

In 1841 Jethro Wood, a wealthy Quaker, invented the first cast iron plow, and after several years spent in alterations, neglecting his other business, succeeded in producing an implement which astonished his friends who had gathered, at his request, to witness the production of the "Whittling Yankee," as he was termed by his jeering neighbors. He established a manufactory for plows, but could sell none, although he constantly proved, in trials, that he could plow deeper and better, with half the team, than with any other plow to be found. He was liberal in giving away his plows, and vainly strove to introduce them, until money and health failed. The son followed in his father's steps, and endeavored vainly to establish the instrument which has revolutionized the greatest interest of this country; and both died without having received enough from their invention to give them a fair burial.

No Pushing to Jesus.—A Christian mother was once shewing her little girl, about five years old, a picture presenting Jesus holding an infant in his arms, while the mothers were crowding their children toward him. "There, Carrie," said her mother, "this is what I would have done with you if I had been there."

"I wouldn't be pushed to Jesus," said little Carrie, with beautiful and touching earnestness; "I'd go to him without pushing."

'To the sound
Of fifes and drums they danced, or in the shade
Sang Cæsar great and terrible in war,
Immortal Cæsar! 'Lo, a god! a god!'
He cleaves the yielding skies!' Cæsar meanwhile
Gathers the ocean pebbles, or the gum
Enraged pursues; or at his lonely meal
Starves a wide province; tastes, dislikes, and flings
To dogs and sycophants. 'A god, a god!'
The flowery shades and shrines obscene return.'

ROMISH MARIOLATRY.

MARY AS ASSOCIATE REDEEMER.

The Virgin Mary's relation to our salvation is not limited by Roman Catholics to mere intercession. Boldly unscriptural as is the assertion that "none are saved but by recourse to her," yet is this true indeed compared with the reckless blasphemy found in their standard devotional works.

As has been already said in these articles, "The Glories of Mary" has the emphatic approbation of that church, "having been duly examined and hereby approved" by "† John, Archbishop of New York." In the introduction the author tells us that "as all graces are dispensed by the hand of Mary alone, and as all who are saved are saved solely by means of this divine mother, it may be said, as a necessary consequence, that the salvation of all depends upon preaching Mary and confidence in her intercession." This has at least the merit of clearness. But there is a claim laying back of this and from which this logically springs, even that she is associate Redeemer; and therefore, of right a Mediatrix and dispenser of grace. Read the following from pp. 185-6: "St. Bernard says, that as a man and a woman have co-operated for our ruin, so it was fit that another man and another woman should co-operate for our restoration; and these were Jesus and his mother Mary. Doubtless, said the saint, Jesus Christ alone was all sufficient for our redemption; yet it was more fitting that each sex should take part in our redemption, when both took part in our corruption. For this reason blessed Albertus Magnus calls Mary the co-operatrix with Christ in our redemption; "Adjutrix Redemptionis." And she herself revealed to St. Bridget, that as Adam and Eve sold the world for one apple, so her son and herself with one heart redeemed the world. God could, indeed, as St. Anselm asserts, create the world from nothing; but when it was lost by sin, he would not redeem it without the co-operation of Mary. The position of associate Redeemer is not claimed for her merely as a grace bestowed by God, nor yet as an extravagancy growing out of her having been the mother of Christ's humanity, but it is soundly asserted as belonging to her of her own pure merit by means of suffering and sacrifice.

In the Advocate for December 2 may be found an extract from page 43 of this book, which tells us how Mary "offered to the eternal Father her well beloved Son for our salvation;" and how though "Jesus in dying for the redemption of the world wished to be alone, yet when God saw the great desire of Mary to devote herself also to the salvation of men, he ordained that by the sacrifice and offering of the life of this same Jesus, she might co-operate with him in the work of our salvation."

Doubtless the majority of Bible readers, unblest with the revelations of St. Bridget—I mention her because she is the chief oracle—have to the present been blind enough to regard the suffering of Christ as wholly incomparable. As they have meditated on all but infinite guilt of earth's unnumbered millions; as they, in fancy, see midnight at noonday, and feeling the tremulous shudder of earth, hear that deep, loud wail of Eloi! Eloi! they may have exclaimed from profoundest conviction, only Deity incarnate could be such a sin-bearer! But, according to Romanism, this is all a mistake. Mary suffered exactly what Jesus suffered! and, indeed, I am not sure but that it is here claimed she suffered more. Read pp. 523-5. St. Antoninus says, the blessed Virgin suffered in spirit all that her son suffered in body; yea, the sight of the sufferings of her son brought more grief to her heart than if she had endured them all in her own person. * * * * He in the flesh, she in the heart suffered, writes St. Amadeus. And St. Bonaventure remarks that these wounds, which were scattered over the body of Jesus, were all united in the heart of Mary. * * * * And Richard remarking on the words of the Redeemer, which he spoke by the mouth of Isaias: "I have trodden the wine press alone," etc., adds: "O, Lord, thou dost rightly say that in the work of human redemption thou didst suffer alone, and there was no man who could pity thee sufficiently; but there was a woman with thee, thy own mother, who suffered in her heart whatever thou didst suffer in thy body. But all this is saying only too little of the sorrows of Mary; for, as I have before said, she suffered more in seeing her beloved Jesus suffer, than if in her own person she had endured all the tortures and the death of her son."

"St. Anselm affirms, that if God, by a special miracle, had not preserved the life of Mary, her grief would have been sufficient to cause her death every moment of her life. And St. Bernardine, of Sienna, even says, that the grief of Mary was so great that, if it were divided among all men, it would be enough to cause their immediate death."

These wild romancings of reputed saints must not be taken for harmless hyperboles. It is by this means Romanists lift Mary to a co-ordinate share with Christ in man's redemption. She suffered as much as he, indeed much more; hence, she merited as much as he. It may be objected that our author speaks only of Mary sharing in Christ's physical sufferings. I answer, he nowhere mentions any other sufferings except he implies more by the word "passion," but, if he does, here also he unites Mary with Christ. The following taken from page 458 is explicit: "St. Arnold Carnotensis says: In the death of Jesus, Mary united her will to that of her son in such a manner that both offered the same sacrifice; and, therefore, the holy abbot says, that thus the son and the mother effected the human redemption, obtaining salvation for men. * * * * Indeed, the death of Jesus was more than enough to save the world, and also an infinity of worlds; but this good mother wished, for the love she bore us, likewise to aid the cause of our salvation with the merits of the sorrows which she offered for us on Calvary," 532. Some saints, says the angelic doctor—St. Thomas—have so much grace that not only is it enough to save themselves, but also to save many others, not, however, all men; only to Jesus Christ and Mary was given so great a grace that it was sufficient to save all men. If any one had enough for the salvation of all, that would be the greatest; and this was Jesus Christ, and the blessed virgin. Thus St. Thomas writes. Hence, what St John said of Jesus—'And of his fullness we all have received'—the saints say of Mary," 387.

Were it not for fear lest I should weary the reader by so often repeating, in substance, the same things, I could indefinitely multiply quotations similar to the above, for hundreds of them lie before me. It is heart-sickening to read such vile blasphemies; but one more will be given this week. On page 379 they tell us: "Mary is mediatrix of grace by way of simple intercession and of merit de congruo, [that is, as associate,] she having offered to God, as the theologians say with St. Bonaventure, her merits for the salvation of all men; and God, through grace, has accepted them in union with the merits of Jesus Christ. Hence, Arnold Carnotensis says: She effected our salvation in common with Christ. And Richard of St. Victor, also: She desired, sought, and obtained salvation for all; nay, more, the salvation of all was effected through her.

With profound deference I would suggest to "John, Archbishop of New York," or, if necessary, to "his holiness" of the keys, whether, for the sake of consistency, it would not be well for them to order a slight change in the song of the glorified. It is cruelly ungrateful in the redeemed to sing merely of "the Lamb," if Mary was associate Redeemer. I admit, to introduce her name might slightly mar the symphony, but what of that? Is not discord better than ingratitude? Be consistent.

HOPE FOR THE DEVILS.

Yes, hope for the devils! Hear it: "St. Bridget heard one day Jesus Christ saying to his mother, that she could obtain the divine favor for Lucifer if he would humble himself so far as to ask her help." Page 135. There is the possibility, but here is the certainty, see page 382: "Mary is the mediatrix of men, some will say, but can she be called also the mediatrix of angels? Many theologians are of opinion that Jesus Christ obtained by his merits the grace of perseverance also for angels; so that as Jesus Christ was their mediator de condigno, Mary may also be called their mediatrix de congruo. At least having merited to be chosen for the mother of the Messias, she merited for the angels the restoration of their seats which had been lost by the demons. Then, at least, she merited for them this accidental glory; hence, Richard of St. Victor says: Every centure by her is restored, the ruin of the angels by her is repaired, and human nature is reconciled."—Correspondent of Western Christian Advocate.

A favorite play with Dr. Whately was penciling a little tale on paper, and then making his right hand neighbor read and repeat it in a whisper to the next man, and so on, till every man round the room had done the same. But the last man was always required to write what he had heard, and the matter was then compared with the original, retained by his grace. In many instances the matter was hardly recognizable, and Dr. Whately would draw an obvious moral. But the cream of the fun lay in his efforts to ascertain where the alterations took place. His analytical powers of detection proved, as usual, accurate, and the interpolators were playfully pilloried. The play is called "Russian Scandal."

THE TELEGRAPH.

The proposition to give the control of the telegraph into the hands of the government, to be managed in connection with the post office, on a similar plan, has drawn general attention to the growth of the telegraph business, and the extension of lines over all parts of the country, which is one of the most characteristic and interesting indications of material progress at present apparent. The telegraph itself is but a thing of yesterday, yet it has completely changed our methods of doing business, and our knowledge and appreciation of the living world about us. But especially since the success of the Atlantic cable has the business arisen in interest and importance. An article in the Telegrapher gives a summary of the progress of the past year, which it justly pronounces very satisfactory.

"The Atlantic cable has worked regularly, and with constantly increasing patronage. The charges have been largely reduced, and it is daily coming into more general use. The cable of 1866 parted, but no especial difficulty except that arising from violent storms was found in recovering and repairing it. It has been fully demonstrated that ocean telegraph can be repaired with as much certainty as land lines. The Franco-American Cable Company has made a successful beginning. Its capital is secured, and the cable is being manufactured in London. The Great Eastern is now being fitted up for it. The coming summer, in all probability, will see this new line in successful operation. The cable of the International Ocean Telegraph Company, from Punta Rosa to Cuba, has worked well throughout the year, and has proved remunerative. A conference of telegraph managers, held at Vienna, made very important arrangements for facilitating and cheapening telegraphic communication. Telegraphic lines have been steadily extended and more generally used in Europe. The English Parliament, after long discussion, has determined that the government shall assume control of the national telegraph lines. In this country the progress of the telegraph during the past year has been very great, and the patronage bestowed upon it by the public has been largely augmented. The annual financial statement of the Western Union Telegraph Company shows the year to have been a very prosperous one. Notwithstanding a large reduction of tolls on several of the most important routes, its receipts and profits have largely increased, and its stockholders have received a generous dividend. Its facilities have been greatly increased, and the condition of its wires much improved. The lines which compete with the Western Union Company have been rapidly extending during the year, and now reach many important points which a year ago they did not. In the Dominion of Canada a new company has been organized, called the Dominion Telegraph Company. This company is intended to compete with the old established Montreal Telegraph Company, and the result has already been a very material reduction of tariff by the latter, in advance of competition."

Captain Ericsson's plans for utilizing the heat of the sun are attracting much attention. His experiments show that one hundred square feet of surface exposed to the sun's rays will produce heat sufficient to exceed one horse power in practical work. It probably is not many years before, for stationary labor, fuel will be discarded as a source of heat for manufactories, and solar heat will take its place. There is no practical difficulty in storing up this heat so as to use the accumulation on cloudy days. We may yet see it employed even in winter to warm our houses. The other great wasted sources of power are the winds and tides. The motion of a windmill could be made to warm a house; in fact, every dairymaid knows that the movement of the dasher raises the temperature of the cream in the churn; still, the great irregularity of this source of heat will be likely to prevent its employment until either fuel be more expensive or more convenient methods are devised for storing the surplus energy of windy days.

The directors of the London Missionary Society say that for many years the Papists have endeavored to secure a firm footing among our missions in the South Sea Islands. These efforts have been put forth in Tahiti, in Samoa, and in the Loyalty Islands. But, wherever they have contended with the truth on equal terms, their victories have been but few. In Tahiti and Samoa the immense majority of the converts cling to the word of God; and even in the Loyalties it is only unscrupulous violence which has enabled them to make any progress.

San Francisco has strawberries and fresh salmon the year round.

THE GENERAL BOOK AGENT.

We call special attention to the propositions of Dr. A. H. Redford, the agent of our Publishing House at Nashville. By accepting any one of them several good things will be accomplished, but not the least will be the paying of the debt which at present stands in the way of the greatest success.

The New Orleans Publishing House of the M. E. Church South.

The Rev. R. J. Harp, agent, is getting in a beautiful stock of books, stationery, etc. And we are glad to state that the business of the house steadily increases. While the rivers are up, this is a good time for the preachers and churches to supply themselves with books and Sunday school libraries. Read the advertisement in to-day's paper. Send your orders and the cash. The war and the army worm, not to mention other destructives, must have exhausted many a farm house of good reading books. Now that you have money, provide for the young people and yourself something to read.

GERMAN NEWS.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me to give you the following item of good news. Through the instrumentality of the Evangelical Apologist I succeeded in securing from our three German Sunday schools of this city, for Brother Lambuth's heathen orphan children, whom he has taken into his school with a view to their Christianization, the sum of $27, which I forwarded to-day to Brother Smithson, in Baltimore. The method I pursued in collecting this money was, that I inserted in the Apologist the initials of the name of every child that had contributed twenty-five cents. I also succeeded, during the last month, in reducing the old debt on Dryades street German church to the amount of $650. Our German work is very prosperous.

STUMBLING BLOCKS.

The world is admonished against the sin of offending the disciples of Christ. The stumbling blocks in the Christian's path are to come from this quarter. The world is of persons rather than things.—"That man by whom the offence cometh." There are other enemies to the believer's security, but this has received special emphasis from the Great Teacher. There are warnings against the wiles of the devil, the deceitfulness of sin, and the inbred corruption of the heart. But the world, as the cause of seducing the children of God and leading them to destruction, is solemnly rebuked and warned. The safety of his "little ones" the Master seeks to guard by setting forth distinctly to unbelievers the greatness of the crime, and the terrible punishment which shall follow. Worldly people are meant when the Saviour exclaims: "Woe unto the world because of offences."

Instructive as it is to the Christian, and calculated to put him on his guard against this danger, it is a most alarming message to any who may be practically ranged in opposition to the Gospel. Many who oppose and hinder those who are bent upon the salvation of their souls, would pause did they know that their peculiar sin is so plainly described and so fearfully denounced. There is something inconceivably diabolical in the set purpose of leading a converted soul back into sin, and finally to eternal death. The enmity that could crucify the Lord, can, however, do this. The malign purpose may be referred to Christ and his Gospel, but the fatal consequences fall upon those who are made to stumble. Persecution in different forms still exists, masked under various social disguises, and consisting in the abuse and perversion of authority and influence. There is hardly any circle of society, or any path of industry, where the faithful disciple of Jesus is not met by the most persistent opposition in the shape of ridicule or contemptuous treatment. In the domestic relations the Christian's foes are often "they of his own household." The persecuting world comes in the nearest relationships of life, where its power is greatest, and where its existence is most effectually concealed. A wife or a child is sometimes found battling alone against every hindrance which ungodly relatives can devise, and is at length constrained to surrender the faith for the sake of peace at home.

The hate of the worldly heart to God displays itself in this determined and malicious disposition to oppose and persecute. It is one of the ways in which believers are made to fall. Another phase of the subject may be seen in the enticements with which worldly people seek to move spiritual Christians from their steadfastness.—They beset them with invitations to places of sinful amusements, and endeavor by a social compulsion to force the believer to commit himself in their games and revels. Many worldly people act in these matters as if they were specially commissioned by the devil to drum up recruits for his service. We have been amazed at the zeal and industry displayed in endeavors to seduce young Christians from the path of piety, and to lead them to the ball room, the theater, or the card table. These are the "offences," the stumbling blocks, which are put in the Christian's path by the lovers of pleasure and the devotees of fashion. Spirituality and consistent living are scouted as Puritanical and Methodistic, as unreasonable and absurd, and as a wrong to ourselves and society. The world of pleasure is painted in the gorgeous and attractive colors of the highest art, and its dangers are skillfully concealed from those who are persuaded to look upon the glowing scene.

We do not say that the motives of this enticement are consciously bad, or malignant, in all instances. Sinners may sometimes really commiserate the condition of those who find their highest joy in the services of religion. With no apprehension of spiritual things, it may seem a strange thing and a grievous wrong that they "run not with them to the same excess of riot." In many cases the effort to lead the Christian into these forbidden paths is incited by the wish to justify what is at least doubtful to the sinner himself. These considerations may be taken for what they are worth, but there is generally a deeper cause and a worse one for this aspect of worldly offences. It is the same enmity against God which crops out in this peculiar form. The claw is in its scabbard of velvet, and the asp is harbored in a vase of flowers; but the one is there in readiness for the fatal spring, and the other is preparing for the final stroke.

And in how many more ways the men and women of the world attempt to offend believers, and cause them to fall, we have not space at present to notice. There is here a lesson of caution to Christians. The world is very near and intimate in the social, business, and domestic relations; and from this embodiment of the world, associated with authority, friendship and affection, come those offences which most imperil the soul. To meet them, all prudence, watchfulness and courage are required. The world of persons is more to be dreaded than the things of the world, and to be guarded with special care.

"Bid me of men beware,
And to my ways take heed,
Discern their every secret snare,
And circumspectly tread."

Young Christians especially must avoid those who, through friendly professions, would persuade them from strict religious living to venture upon the slippery paths of popular dissipation. They must learn to penetrate the obvious disguise and hypocrisy of even a religious profession when it is associated with enticements to worldliness. There is peculiar danger from those who join religious profession and the largest moral license, and who attempt to unite the sacraments of God with those of Satan.

The application of the subject to those who in any way are instrumental in leading Christ's little ones astray is awfully admonitory. The woe denounced is one of the most fearful which ever fell from the lips of Jesus—"Woe to that man by whom the offence cometh." The account which must be rendered by unbelieving parents who have put stumbling blocks in the way of their children, by husbands and wives who have opposed each other in serving God, and by friends who have used their influence to overcome the religious scruples of believers, is appalling. It is not a rare sin that we are now discussing, but one which taints the souls of thousands in Gospel lands, and which these thousands must meet in the judgment.

TITHES.

MR. EDITOR: Please insert the following acknowledgment:

Just received from a friend, who has for some years favored us in the same manner annually, but whose name I am not at liberty to give to any one, the sum of $50, a part of her individual income, to be applied as follows:

$10 to the bishops' fund.

$10 to the widows and orphans of deceased preachers of the Louisiana Conference.

$10 to the China mission.

CHURCH EXTENSION.—NOTICE.

The board of directors of the New Orleans Church Extension Association of the Methodist Episcopal Church South will meet on Wednesday next, March 17th, at seven o'clock P. M., in Carondelet street church, for the purpose of organizing the board and putting the association into full and active operation under the charter adopted.

A prompt and full attendance of the members of the board is important. By order:

H. F. GIVEN, President.
J. C. MILLER, Secretary.

CATHOLIC SCHOOL PETITION.

A petition was presented from quite a number of the directors of the Catholic common schools in the city, asking aid from the city—an average amount for each pupil—for children sent to said schools on account of conscientious scruples on the part of those who are equally taxpayers with those who send their children to public schools. The directors agree to make detailed regular reports to the superintendent of the public schools of all children who are unable to pay.

The subject was referred to a committee of three, comprising Messrs. Brady, Shields and Pesson. Mr. Brady wanted to be excused, because he had made up his mind. Mr. Prados also asked to be excused, and Mr. O'Brion, who was the last pitched upon, said he had been taught in the public schools, and he thought they were good enough schools. He did not see why parents should object to send their children to them. They could teach them their prayers at home and attend there to their religious education. Mr. Brady finally consented to serve.

We hope that the City Council will promptly answer to this petition that it is not in its province to support the schools of any religious denomination; that neither the government of the United States or of the States contemplate supporting by law and taxation any form of Christianity; but that it is directly in accord with the genius and Constitution of this country that the interests of the church should not be maintained by the State. The people do not pay taxes to build up churches or church schools. The State provides for the education of its children in such a way as to leave their religious training entirely to parents and guardians. Home influence and Sabbath school influence are quite sufficient to mold the moral and religious characters of youth, not to mention the more powerful teaching of the pulpits, and are means as accessible to one branch of the Christian church as to another. As to the "conscientious scruples" which move the petitioners, the State has its duties to perform, and cannot afford to delegate them to others. It consults the good of the whole, and believes that cannot be secured by leaving it to the consciences of religious corporations. Europe has already had a full test of this sort of "conscientious" care for the children of a State. The result has proved wholly unsatisfactory. The consequence is that Austria, Spain, Portugal and other of the large States of Europe, though largely Roman Catholic in faith, no longer trust the great interests of education to the conscience of that church.

This inadequacy of a Catholic conscience to educate the masses may be justly set forth in the present condition of the people of Italy. Of the 21,776,950 inhabitants of that State, there are still 16,999,651 who can neither read nor write. Only 1,214,938 children are in attendance in the schools. It has twenty-one universities, twenty-four lyceums—some of which date back to the twelfth century. We cite this State because the "conscience" which the petitioners urge is exactly that sort which has had in Italy its greatest vitality, being nearest to the center of Catholic Christianity.

Now, beside this we put the workings of the American school system—without a "conscience." In Indiana there are 415,796 children in the public schools, and in Illinois 826,820 children in the public schools. That would make for the two States 1,242,616 in attendance; that is 27,678 more than attend school in Italy. The population of these two States together is only 3,062,000; that of Italy is 21,776,950! Judging from this the State would do a very poor business to leave her children in the hands of "conscientious" Catholics for an education.

But we will take the best Roman Catholic State in the world, that is Austria, with 31,711,157 inhabitants, and will compare it with the three States of New York, Ohio and Pennsylvania, with only 9,133,000 inhabitants. Austria has 2,746,000 children in her primary schools; those three States alone have 2,443,350 pupils in their public schools. The people of this State place too high an estimate upon the importance of public education to give up their system for one which has worked so imperfectly elsewhere. It cannot consent to go back upon a mere denominational system of education. We suppose that this petition is another phase of that "unrelenting" opposition to the common school system which has been announced by the Catholic organ of this city.

THE PRESIDENT AND HIS FRIENDS.

General Grant's inaugural has generally been accepted as entirely original. It is decidedly in the bondholder's interest. It favors strongly the adoption of universal suffrage. Its allusions to our foreign relations are threatening. And it ignores the fact of Mr. Johnson's administration: "The country having just emerged from a great rebellion, many questions will come before it for settlement, in the next four years, which preceding administrations have never had to contend with." One naturally wonders what those questions are which have not come into view during the four years just past.

Immediately upon the inauguration comes the cabinet: quite a surprise to the country, the politicians, and, as it seems, to the gentlemen themselves who are nominated. The art of keeping his own counsel has been one secret of the General's success hitherto, and it was natural that he should rely upon it in his new position. It turns out, however, that political movements cannot proceed well upon that sort of inarticulate sagacity; for of the seven nominated it was immediately discovered that Mr. Stewart labors under constitutional disabilities, Mr. Washburne declined from ill health, and Mr. Borie begs to be relieved from the portfolio of the navy. These changes will necessitate others; and already Judge Hoar, it is stated, has been asked to resign the office of Attorney General. General Grant has sent in a message to Congress, asking for a joint resolution to relieve Mr. Stewart of his disabilities, but the Senate is evidently in no very plastic mood just now, and Mr. Stewart will have to resign. This is much of a boggle, and furnishes a strong illustration of the inconvenience of having to consult people. On the same day that the cabinet was nominated General Grant issued General Order No. 10, which sends General Hancock to Dacotah, General Sheridan to Louisiana, General Reynolds to Texas, and Major General Gillem to the fourth district, all which is accomplished without the slightest baulk. So much for the difference between military and civil methods.

Two or three things are noteworthy in the nominees. 1. They are individuals to whom the President is indebted for personal favors. Mr. Stewart gave him the Cooper Institute nomination, and paid him a very handsome sum for his house, on the day before his inauguration; Mr. Washburne was the first man to secure for him the appointment of lieutenant from the Governor of Illinois, and has been his very ardent supporter ever since; Mr. Borie presented him with a very fine house in Philadelphia, upon which stands a statue of the General himself. In all this the President enjoys a pleasure which Mr. Pitt said he had never had but once during the eighteen years of his premiership—that of appointing the person whom he wished. 2. The nominees are intensely anti-Southern. 3. They are not eminent as statesmen, or even as representative men of the Republican party. One or two inexperienced men might be used in such a position and worked in with five or six experienced counselors; but the general impression is that the whole of them bring but little individual strength to the government. They might make good aid-de-camps, and this may be about all the use the General intends to make of them.

The Republican party has been manifestly snubbed. Its great lights have not been consulted. The General says by this, very plainly, that he does not consider himself indebted to that party for his present position; which is about the truth. The Republicans took him up from necessity, and worked hard enough to convince themselves that he owed his election to their support. He adopts their principles but not them, their abstract theories but not their concrete division of office spoils. This is a virtuous view of things, but it will scarcely satisfy men who have gone through so much drudgery and paid out so much money for the public. The conscious merit of patriotism will not be accepted by State, county and ward politicians, as an adequate compensation for their self-denying toils, even though Congressmen themselves might ask no higher reward. The love for one's country cannot, in these days, exist long without something to feed upon. And office means something more than a vermilion button; this is not China. Right here, even over the carcass, the contests of the Senate, the House and the Executive have begun, and in them there may be hope for the South, if gracious and mighty. Providence can "make the wrath of man to praise him," and can restrain its remainder." We subjoin the latest news upon the cabinet situation.

The following message was received from the President:

"WASHINGTON, March 9, 1869.

"To the Senate of the United States:

"I have the honor to request permission to withdraw from the Senate the message requesting the passage of a joint resolution to relieve the Secretary of the Treasury from disabilities imposed by section eight of an act of Congress, approved September 2, 1789. U. S. GRANT."

Sumner moved to lay the message on the table, and that it be printed.

Sprague moved that the request be granted. Adopted. Adjourned.

Stewart has positively declined the appointment of Secretary of the Treasury. The document indicated last night, relative to the transfer of Stewart's business to trustees, was duly executed, but doubts and opposition still existing, Stewart withdrew, and Grant has accepted his resignation.

Hoar has accepted the attorney generalship, which shuts out Boutwell from the cabinet.

Borie, Washburne, Schofield and Creswell attended the cabinet meeting to day.

A NEW EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The Protestant Churchman states that—1. The Protestant Episcopal Church was placed by its General Convention in an attitude of hostility to Protestantism. 2. The articles of religion are no longer the accepted standards of the church. 3. The High Church majority is so overwhelming as to secure a permanent triumph to that party. 4. No reform can be looked for from the House of Bishops. 5. The love of ease and salaried honor, yearnings after the episcopacy, and the fear of man have reduced many evangelical standard-bearers to the miserable condition of train-bearers to the dominant party. 6. There is no unity of council in the evangelical party. 7. The Lord, by withholding the gracious influences of his Holy Spirit, has set his mark of disproval on our entire church. 8. Usage is counted of more value than truth; form is valued more than life.—Even evangelical men are more inclined to trace their ministry to fallable men than directly to the cause of God.

"These reasons," it is said, "have determined many clergymen and laymen, who have surveyed the ground and counted the cost, to restore the Protestant Episcopal Church to the condition in which Cranmer, Ridley, Bradford, Latimer and Hooper left it." We hope that our people will call to these facts the attention of those Episcopal bishops who go about in the States of Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama, asking Methodists, Presbyterians and other church members, "What has the church ever done that you left her?" always preceded by four questions: 1. Have you ever been a Methodist? 2. Did you first begin to preach as an Episcopalian? 3. Have you ever been converted? 4. Can you show me one place in the Bible where it says that "a bishop" ever ordained anybody? Give him plenty of time and stick to the word "bishop."

THE U. S. CHAPLAIN.

WASHINGTON, March 8, 1869.—Senate—In balloting for chaplain, first ballot: Rev. Dr Newman, 25; Rev. Mr. Chester, 10; Rev. Mr. Wetherington, 10; Rev. Mr. Gray, 7; Rev. Mr. Bates, 6; Rev. Mr. Nourse, 2; Rev. Mr. Kelly, 1. No choice.

Second ballot.—Rev. Dr. Newman, 35; Revs. Dr. Wetherington, 7; Rev. Dr. Chester, 7; Rev. Dr. Gray, 5; Rev. Dr. Nourse, 7. Newman elected.

During the contest Yates said he conceded the merits of the Rev. Dr. Newman as a political preacher were unsurpassed, but he thought it was time to have a little less politics and a little more religion in the prayers. They had politics enough in the Senate, without putting it into the prayers.

We shall certainly not be the last to congratulate the doctor on his success; and we will congratulate the whole country if he will take to the chaplaincy heartily—i. e., give up his State printing jobs here, and take himself and his traps off to Washington. That is a wider field than this. The $15,000 which the State paid him last year, and the $15,000 which it will have to pay this for his four hundred colored readers, will have prepared him for something larger, and such genius requires room. Mr. Yates made a great mistake when he supposed that the doctor would, as a chaplain, confine himself wholly to prayer, or to "politics" in prayer. He has not yet seen the latest style of chaplain.

The Suffrage Constitutional Amendment.

Both houses of Congress on Thursday last agreed upon proposing to the several State Legislatures an amendment to the Constitution in the following terms:

ARTICLE 15. The right of the citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

SECTION 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

The amendment will now go at once to the several Legislatures for approval.

This is the House bill. The Senate bill was defeated. And the extreme Radicals charge its defeat upon Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. They say it was moral cowardice. One earnest correspondent at Washington exclaims against Congress: "It declines to expel Georgia Representatives. It refuses to put in its amendments the right to hold office, because Ohio and Indiana and Illinois will vote against such a privilege. Shame on the States of Wade, Colfax and Lincoln! How can we expect Grant to utter grand words next Thursday from this platform when Congress utters such mean ones behind it?" There is some hope that this mania may be checked through the legislation of the States. Property qualifications and educational qualifications may yet be used to keep Chinese coolies, Digger Indians, negroes, and the skin covered tribes of Alaska from holding office.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

We have received from Messrs. J. B. Lippincott & Co., of Philadelphia, through the house of Mr. James A. Gresham, bookseller, No. 92 Camp street, the following works, all of which we noticed at length several weeks ago, having received them at that time through another house:

1. THE CLOSING SCENES OF THE LIFE OF CHRIST. 1869. By D. D. Buek, D. D.
2. THE OLD WORLD, PALESTINE, SYRIA AND ASIA MINOR. 1869. By Jacob R. Freese, M. D.
3. CASELLA, OR CHILDREN OF THE VALLEY. 1869. By Martha Farquharson.

EACH ant in an ant-hill knows his companions. Mr. Darwin several times carried ants from one hill to another, inhabited apparently by tens of thousands of ants; but the strangers were invariably detected and killed. Thinking that there might be a family odor by which they were recognized, he put some ants from a very large nest into a bottle strongly perfumed with assafœtida, and restored them after twenty-four hours. At first they were threatened by their companions, but soon recognized and allowed to pass.

THE only daughter of the Czar of Russia is to marry the King of Bavaria, and will leave the Catholic for the Greek Church. This will be the first instance in the Russian imperial family of such an exchange of faith.

MARRIED.

At the residence of the bride's father, Rev. Isaac Easterly, by Rev. J. Nicholson, on the 21st of February, Mr. WILLIAM G. READ to Miss SARAH M. EASTERLY, both of whom are deaf and dumb, educated at the asylum in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, and both are pious and much devoted to each other. All present were much interested in the novelty of the occasion. The different parts of the ceremony were read by the mutes while being said by the minister.

On Monday evening, March 1st, at the residence of the bride's parents, No. 443 Baronne street, by Rev. J. B. Walker, Mr. SAMUEL K. RUSS to Miss FLORENCE E. BOULLEMET, all of this city.

In Milton, Florida, at the residence of the bride, on the 25th of February, by Rev. J. A. Parker, Mr. JOHN MCMAHON to Mrs. SARAH J. FRANKLIN, all of Milton.

At the residence of the bride's father, near Shubuta, Mississippi, April 18, by Dr. T. S. West, Miss CARRY G. HEARD to Mr. T. A. LEDYARD, all of Clarke county.

On the 17th of February, 1869, at the residence of Mr. John Ewell, by Rev. J. S. Davis, Mr. W. J. GASSAWAY, of Texas, to Miss MARY E. LEWIS, of St. Landry, Louisiana.

On the 24th of February, at the residence of the bride's father, A. J. Teat, by P. A. Johnston, Mr. JOEL C. WILLIAMS to Miss MOLLIE TEAT, all of Atalla county, Mississippi.

By the same, on the 25th of February, at the residence of the bride's father, R. C. Colton, Mr. R. L. RANDLE to Miss ANNIE COLTON, all of Choctaw county, Mississippi.

On the 25th of February, at the residence of the bride's mother, Mr. T. R. CALDWELL to Miss MARY JOHNSON, all of Monroe county, Mississippi.

By Rev. J. L. Wright, February 25, 1869, Mr. WILLIAM B. MCCRARY to Miss F. M. DUCKWORTH, all of Morehouse parish, Louisiana.

On the 4th of February, 1869, at the residence of the bride's father, by Rev. J. W. Glenn, Mr. O. M. KIRKPATRICK to Miss W. E. HEARD, all of Lowndes county, Alabama.

N. B.—The bridegroom became a subscriber to the ADVOCATE.

OBITUARIES.

Miss MATTIE M. CAMACK was born February 6, 1839, was married to Dr. William M. Clement December 3, 1856, and died in the city of Selma, Alabama, of typhoid pneumonia, January 26, 1869.

Mrs. C. had been, for several years preceding and up to the time of her death, a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. She was the mother of six children, one of whom had preceded her to the better land. The death of her little Willie awakened in her new resolutions and greater spirituality after aspirations for those things which are above.

In all her deportment she was quiet and unobtrusive. In the closing scene of life's ever fitful fever, in its contests with the ogeneles of evil, she was not found unprepared for the great emergency of an exchange of the temporal for the eternal.

Her husband, with the intensest solicitude, questioned her upon her future prospects, and when he would state to her that he did not wish to excite any alarm about death, but that it would be a great source of satisfaction for him to know her frame of mind, she would reply that she was not excited in the least at the suggestion or thought of such a subject, and that she was resigned to the will of God, but that the thought of leaving behind her little children and being parted from the family was her only regret.

The writer also conversed and prayed with her, and he is free to confess that during a ministry of over twenty-five years, after having witnessed many persons die, he has never seen one exhibit more serenity, tranquility and resignation to the will of God in this solemn hour. When encircled by her weeping husband and dear little ones, in giving them her last farewell kisses and instructions, she spoke as calmly and quietly as if she were only going on a short journey. During her sickness of only six days, though at times she suffered much, not a word of murmuring or complaint ever escaped her lips.

In her life and death were exhibited the power of the cross of Christ to save from sin, the fear of death and of eternity. So peaceful was her transit that it recalled forcibly to the mind of the writer these beautiful words of the poet:

"Vital spark of heavenly flame,
Quit, oh! quit this mortal frame;
Trembling, hoping, lingering, flying,
O the pain, the bliss of dying.
Cease, fond nature, cease thy strife,
And let me languish into life."

And thus, on the evening of the above date, passed away from the troublous scenes of earth, and the evil to come, another of God's children to the pure realms of eternal day, where "none of the inhabitants" thereof "shall ever say, I am sick," there to await the coming of the loved ones she has left behind.

JAMES A. CLEMENT.

PAINT will never smart nor stain,
Paint will ease the greatest pain,
Paint will cure foul ulcers deep,
From them inflammation keep;
An invention that will last
When all liniments are past,
When all pills and powders fail,
PAIN PAINT will outlive them all.

The latest scientific discoveries prove that the principle of evaporation and absorption is the only method by which inflammation can be instantly removed. But the absorbents will not drink water readily, for the flesh is of an oily nature, and water rolls off. Hot liniments have utterly failed; for they always inflame and burn the flesh wherever applied, while oils or ointments clog the pores, and prevent the escape of morbid matter. But a preparation has been made and already tested on over five hundred thousand people, suffering all kinds of pain and disease that is possible to enumerate, and it acts like magic on each and every individual. It is limpid as water, and is as harmless; will not stain or smart, and so prepared that the absorbents drink it rapidly, and the evaporation that instantly arises through the million of pores is really marvelous. It is an invention hitherto unknown, but is as of much importance as the introduction of steam or the magnetic telegraph. For the drying up a single tear has more of lasting fame than shedding seas of gore. This article not only dispels all heat and fever, but evaporates out all impurity and morbid matter of the system or blood at any point wherever applied. This novelty is Dr. Wolcott's Pain Palut. His office, at No. 141 Chatham Square, New York, has a greater number of patients, with every type of disease, than any hospital in America or Europe. This fact alone enables him to give the best practical advice to those who suffer from any malady, disease or pain. It costs the patient nothing for advice; beside, all pain is instantly removed free of cost. Tens of thousands given up as hopeless are permanently cured and restored to the activity of life.

A large share of these applicants suffer with drug disease, and have had their whole system medicated and poisoned through and through with medicine. Dr. WOLCOTT condemns most emphatically all drug treatment, and proves practically that disease can be radically expelled from the system without dosing the stomach. The advent of Pain Palut overturns the old theory of cure; and medical practitioners are at their wits' end in beholding such undeniable and astonishing cures of those cases considered by themselves as utterly hopeless. Hundreds come over one thousand miles to obtain treatment and advice; many have been suffering for years who are unable, from sickness or poverty, to make the journey. To all such it will be more practicable to purchase his remedies and have them sent free of express charges. A pint of Pain Palut, double strength, will be sent for $5, a quart for $8, or a gallon for $20, on receipt of the money at No. 141 Chatham Square, New York, or one-half dozen pints of Wolcott's Anti-Bilator, for the cure of Catarrh, $6, with full directions and advice. Small bottles can be bought at all first class Drug Stores. Beware of all imitators who offer worthless compounds. Wolcott's signature is every where on white wrappers around each bottle of all his remedies.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

GEO. P. ROWELL & CO.,
ADVERTISING AGENTS,
No. 10 Park Row, New York.

WHAT ADVERTISERS SAY.

The firm, whose letter we print below, gave us in 1867 what was then the largest contract we had ever received for our "Lists of One Hundred Local Newspapers." The fact that they this year renew the order and increase the amount is the best argument we can give that these "Lists" are good advertising mediums.

LIPPINCOTT & BAKEWELL,
MANUFACTURERS OF,
AXES, SHOVELS, SAWS, ETC.,
No. 118 WATER STREET,
PITTSBURG, PA., Dec. 3, 1868.

MESSRS. GEO. P. ROWELL & CO.—Gentlemen: One year ago with much hesitation we gave you an advertisement for one of your Lists of One Hundred local papers; a very short time thereafter we unhesitatingly added two more Lists of One Hundred papers.

But a short time elapsed before we were inquired of on every side for "Colburn's Patent Red Jacket Ax," proving to us that your plan of Lists had reached the very parties to whom we wanted to introduce the new patent Ax.

The year having now nearly gone by, we cannot but believe your system of advertising by "Lists of Local Papers" is just the kind of advertising we want, and we to-day forward you an order still adding one more List of One Hundred papers, making the number now altogether four (4) Lists of One Hundred (100) local papers.

The more we talk with newspaper agents and editors' agents the more satisfied we are that the arrangement we have made with you is preferable to any we have ever heard of. The merit of the Ax itself has, of course, something to do with the great demand for it, but we are satisfied that by your system of advertising by "Lists" we have accomplished in one year what would have ordinarily taken us five years to accomplish. Respectfully,
LIPPINCOTT & BAKEWELL.

The National Publishing Company of Philadelphia have been among the largest advertisers in our "Lists of Local Country Newspapers." Their bills for these alone amount to not less than $20,000. The testimony of their letter may be taken as an answer to those who inquire if these "Lists" can really be good advertising mediums.

We have tried every possible mode of advertising, having dealt with the press direct, and through nearly every advertising agency in the country, and have no hesitation in saying that your Lists have paid us fifty per cent. better than any other way. Respectfully,

CHURCH OF THE STRANGERS, New York.—Visitors to the city of New York are informed that they will find divine service every Sunday, in the large Chapel of the University, Washington Square, at ten and a half A. M. and at seven and a half P. M. The evening service in summer is at eight o'clock. Waverley Place, immediately north of the New York Hotel, out of Broadway, runs west to Washington Square, on the east side of which is the University. The entrance to the church is the main door of the University. University Place cars run from the door of the Fifth Avenue Hotel to the door of the church. From the St. Nicholas and Metropolitan, take the cars corner of Broadway and Broome, leave at Waverley Place, and go west one block. At the Astor House take University Place cars, leave at Waverley Place, and go west one block. Strangers will find cordial welcome and polite attention.

The pastor is Rev. Dr. DEEMS, who devotes himself to the spiritual interests of strangers. If any be sick, let them address him a note by mail, as "Pastor of the Church of the Strangers, New York," and it will reach him. The ladies who compose the "Society of the Sisters of the Stranger" procure medical, legal and spiritual help for strangers in perplexity, distress or sickness. Address "Sisters of the Stranger," care Rev. Dr. Deems, New York.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE FLOWER SPIDER.

BY ALICE CARY.

You've read of a spider, I suppose,
Dear children, or been told,
That has a back as red as a rose,
And legs as yellow as gold.

Well, one of these fine creatures ran
In a bed of flowers, you see,
Until a drop of dew in the sun
Was hardly as bright as she.

Her two plump sides, they were besprent
With specks of all dies,
And little shimmering streaks were bent
Like rainbows round her eyes.

Well, when she saw her legs shine,
And her back as red as a rose,
She thought that she herself was fine
Because she had fun clothes!

Then wild she grew, like one possessed,
For she thought, upon my word,
That she wasn't a spider with the rest,
And set up for a bird!

Ay, for a humming bird at that!
And the summer day all through,
With her head in a tulip bell she sat,
The same as the hum birds do.

She had her little foolish day,
But her pride was doomed to fall,
And what do you think she had to pay
In the ending of it all?

Just this: on dew she could not sup,
And she could not sup on pride,
And so, with her head in the tulip cup,
She starved until she died!

For in despite of the golden legs,
And the back as red as a rose,
With what is hatched from the spider's eggs
The spider's nature goes!

—Children's Hour.

A spider that lives among flowers, and takes its color from them.

GOD'S NO.

'Mother, did God ever say no to you?'

Arthur had been sitting quietly by the window with his books in his hand—not reading but thinking very earnestly—for some minutes, when suddenly he startled his mother with that question.

Mrs. Morrow looked a little astonished at first, then a grave, sad smile came over her face, and then she answered, 'Yes, dear, a great many times.'

Arthur seemed only half satisfied. 'Why, mother, I don't see; how do you mean?'

'What made you ask the question, Arthur?'

'Why, you see, I was walking from school, to-day, and I came round by Dr. Edward's place to see the flowers; everybody said they looked so beautiful after the rain. And when I came up I found little Alice Reed standing close against the fence, with her curly head between the railings, looking at the flowers as if she were almost hungry for some of them. You know her, don't you, mother? Poor Mrs. Reed's little girl, who lives in the old tumble down house around the corner.'

'Yes.'

'Her father gets drunk so often, and don't do any work; they are very poor. Well, when I stopped and stood by her, she looked up at me and said "Oh, isn't it beautiful!" and her eyes shone so. Then, just for fun, I said, 'Alice, why don't you live in such a fine, big home, and have such fine flowers?' She shook her head and answered, 'Because God says no.' It sounded strange? I couldn't understand her at first, and she looked as if she felt perfectly willing to let other people have pretty things and do without herself. I have been thinking about it ever since; wasn't it queer for a little thing like her to say?'

'It is just what we all ought to learn to say, Arthur, and say with just that little girl's faith and quiet content. We should be much happier if we did. It is very hard sometimes, because we are apt to think we know what will make us happy, and to forget that God loves us so well, and always does what is best for us.'

Arthur went and sat down by the side of his mother and said: 'Mother, please tell me how God said 'no' to you.'

'He said it many times, my boy, before I learned that it was his tender, wise voice speaking for my good. I worried and was impatient at crosses and disappointments; but oh, how much brighter sorrow seemed when I once learned that God wrapped it as a covering around his love, that I might open wide the hands of faith and find my treasure!

'Once, Arthur, I had a little daughter of whom I was very proud; I said to myself, 'I will teach her everything good and noble; I will take such care of her; and by and by she will grow to be a comfort and a blessing companion to me,' but God said 'no.' He took away my darling, and disappointed my desires.

'The next time that God's no broke in upon my joy, was when your dear father died. I felt the sorrow coming, and I prayed that my boy might have a father spared to guide and to guide him as he grew to manhood. But God said 'no' again; and oh, it was hard at first to feel that it was the voice of Love speaking! It was so dark I could not see the wisdom and the mercy of such a trial, but God knows best.'

Arthur's head sank lower, and his tears fell fast as he listened.

'Again, I said to myself, 'We will not leave the old house, though there are only us two; we will keep the pleasant rooms and the beautiful grounds just the same; and as Arthur grows up he shall learn to love the trees which he planted and the vines which he trained. But God said 'no' to me. The handsome house had to be sold into other hands; and we came away from the place we loved so, to a more humble home. But God has been gracious to us; and we have been very happy here—you and I, Arthur. Poor Mrs. Reed and little Alice have wants and sorrows that we know nothing of.'

'But, mother, it seems to me that there are some people whom God never says 'no' to; at least they seem to have everything they want.'

'Ah, we cannot tell, my boy; only God himself can see into every heart and understand the secrets of every life. Sometimes his 'no' is spoken very low, and only one in all the world can hear it—and that may be one whom we count perfectly happy and wanting nothing.'

'Does God ever say 'no' to me, mother?'

'Yes, but sometimes you do not recognize it at his voice. God has been very good to you; but he has begun to speak his 'no' to you in slight things so as to prepare your faith and patience for the greater trials which must come in after life. Last week when you had planned a pleasant excursion with the boys—and were anticipating so much joy—it stormed. You only kept saying, 'It's too bad!—I don't see what it rained for just at this time!' and you wore so unhappy that it grieved me to see you. Now you should remember that it was the voice of a kind God, refusing you a pleasure because he knew it best that you should not have it; and you should have said calmly and contentedly, as little Alice did, 'God says no.''

'But, mother, it is so hard—don't you think it is—to be always contented with everything that comes?'

'Yes, Arthur, we are like little children who reach out and cry for pretty things which they cannot have because mamma says 'no.' We reach out our hands for some pleasure and we say, Oh, if I can only have that I shall be so happy. But God knows better. He puts out his hand and takes away the object we long for and his loving voice says 'no.' And oh, Arthur, if we could only learn to lay our heads upon his bosom—as a little child rests on his mother—and to feel peaceful and trustful, sure that all things will work together for our good—how much happier we should be!'

Arthur looked up into his mother's calm face, and felt that she, at least, had learned to cast all her care upon him who careth for us! And he resolved to try and learn the lesson too. Will you, my young friends? Youth is the time to begin; before the evil days come, anchor yourself fast to God by faith. Learn to feel that whatever God sends is the best for you, and what God takes away is best for you not to have. Remember that 'God in cursing giveth better gifts than man in benediction'—that God's no is more full of love and tender mercy than the sweetest blessings of the most generous earthly voice.—United Presbyterian.

SCIENTIFIC.

Manufacture of Paper from Okra.

We condense from the Mobile Weekly Register an account of some experiments which have been in progress during the last two or three weeks at the Chickasabogue Paper Mills, near Mobile, under the direct supervision of Dr. J. B. Read, well known as the inventor of the Reed Shell, which has rendered the Parrott gun so effective an engine of destruction in warfare. The inventive genius, energy and perseverance of the doctor were this time, however, directed to the "arts of peace."

The above journal asserts that previous experiments had demonstrated the fact that good brown paper could be made of okra, but it remained to show that this material could be bleached to sufficient whiteness to make it available for printing or book papers, and if so, at what cost in comparison with rag or other material.

The comparative cost was, perhaps, an unsettled question. The experiments were conducted under unfavorable circumstances. The material used was, for the most part, very inferior of its kind, and the orders for paper pressing on the mills, required that as little of the time of the employees, and as small a portion of the machinery as possible, should be yielded for the purpose; consequently most of the work was done without at all disturbing the regular operations of the mills. The experiments were concluded on Friday last, and the result was eminently gratifying to those engaged in them, and is of particular interest to the press, dealers in and manufacturers of paper generally, and to farmers and gardeners in the South within reasonable distance of paper mills. In the opinion of the experienced paper makers who watched the progress of the work from the cutting of the dry stalks of okra to the production of paper from the machine, the following points may be regarded as established:

1. Okra requires but little handling to prepare for boiling, is readily passed through the cutter, needs no sorting, and the entire plant is available from the root to the pod.

2. It is easily boiled if well cured, requires only lime to reduce it, and may be washed and beaten ready for the machine in about half the time required for preparing rag stock, thus largely increasing the productive capacity of the mill without additional machinery.

3. When properly boiled it yields readily to the action of chemicals and can be bleached with no greater expense than ordinary rags.

4. The pulp works as freely and smoothly on the machine as any other fiber—does not stick to metal or press rolls like straw or wood, even when working pure okra pulp. It dries readily and can be run safely at the highest speed of the machine.

5. The paper made from it is very strong, tough and elastic—better in these respects, when made entirely of okra, than either straw or wood pulp when mixed with fifty per cent. or more of rags. It has none of the brittleness and hardness so objectionable in straw papers, and may be subjected to strong friction by rubbing between the thumb and fingers, or between the hands, and will open out smoothly and soft as a glove.

6. It will make an excellent substitute to mix with other fibres in the beating engines, and is of itself a superior hard stock.

7. Whether worked pure or mixed with rags, it makes a paper entirely free from the objections justly raised by the printer against straw and wood papers.

8. It makes an excellent stock for fine wrapping paper, and imitation manilla paper, and even in its raw state, without boiling or bleaching, makes a strong article of common wrapping paper, suitable for grocers and hardware use—superior to any paper made of straw.—Scientific American.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Mechanical Ingenuity of Farmers.

One of the component parts of a good farmer is mechanical ingenuity. Some lose half a day's time for want of knowing how to repair a breakage which an ingenious person could do in five minutes. A team and two or three men are sometimes stopped a whole day at a critical season for want of a little mechanical skill. It is well for every farmer to have at hand the facilities for repairing. In addition to the more common tools, he should keep a supply of nails of different sizes, screws, bolts and nuts. Common cut nails are too brittle for repairing implements or for other similar purposes; but only the very best, and anneal them, and they will answer all the ordinary purposes of the best wrought nails. To anneal them, all that is necessary is to heat them red hot in a common fire and cool gradually. Let them cool, for instance, by remaining in the fire while it burns down and goes out. One such nail, well clinched, will be worth half a dozen unannealed. Nothing is more common than for a farmer to visit the blacksmith's shop to get a broken or lost bolt or rivet inserted, and often a single nut on a bolt. This must be paid for, and much time is lost. By providing a supply of bolts, nuts and rivets, much time and trouble may be saved. They may be purchased wholesale at a low rate. These should all be kept in shallow boxes, with compartments made for the purpose, furnished with a bow-handle for convenience in carrying them. One box with half a dozen divisions may be appropriated to nails of different sizes, and another, with as many compartments, to screws, bolts, rivets, etc. Every farmer should keep on hand a supply of copper wire and small pieces of sheet copper or copper straps. Copper wire is better than annealed iron wire. It is almost as flexible as twine, and may be bent and twisted as desired; and it will not rust. Copper straps nailed across or around a fracture or split in a wooden article will strengthen it in a thorough manner.—Rural Affairs.

A leading Madrid paper says a continuance of the Cuban struggle will ruin Spain, and suggests the concession of Cuban independence.

HOUSEKEEPER'S DEPARTMENT.

Bride Cake.—Presuming that some of our readers will occasionally have a wedding among them, and if so, it would be imperfect without a "wedding cake." Here is a good one. The cost, of course, would be no objection for "such an occasion."

Take butter, one and a half pounds; sugar, one and three-fourths pounds, half of which is to be Orleans sugar; eggs well beaten, two pounds; raisins, four pounds, having the seeds taken out and chopped; English currants having the grit picked out and nicely washed, five pounds; citron, cut fine, two pounds; sifted flour, two pounds; nutmegs, two in number, and mace as much in bulk; alcohol, one gill, in which a dozen or fifteen drops of oil of lemon have been put.

When ready to make your cake, weigh your butter and cut it in pieces, and put it where it will soften, but not melt. Next, stir the butter to a cream, and then add the sugar, and work till white. Next, beat the yolks of the eggs, and put them to the sugar and butter.

Meanwhile another person should beat the whites to a stiff froth and put them in.

Then add the spices and flour, and, last of all, the fruit, except the citron, which is to be put in about three layers, the bottom layer about one inch from the bottom, and the top one an inch from the top, and the other in the middle, smoothing the top of the cake by dipping a spoon or two of water upon it for that purpose. You can use three quart pans. It is impossible to give definite rules as to the time required in baking cake.

Try whether done by piercing it with a broom splinter, and if nothing adheres, it is done.

Baked Pudding.—The following is said to be one of the best puddings that ever was used in the Metropolitan Hotel of New York. Five table spoonfuls of corn starch to one quart of milk; dissolve the starch in a part of the milk, heat the remainder of the milk to nearly boiling; having salted it a little, then add the dissolved starch to the milk; boil three minutes, stirring it briskly; allow it to cool, and then thoroughly mix with it three eggs, well beaten, with three table spoonfuls of sugar; flavor to your taste, and bake it half an hour.

Cold Slaw.—Get a fresh cabbage, take off the outside leaves, cut it in half, take a knife and cut it fine, put in a dish, then put on the dressing prepared in the following manner: Beat up three eggs, add to them one gill of good vinegar and one gill of water; when it begins to thicken, stir in a piece of butter the size of a hickory nut, a teaspoonful of salt, and a large spoonful of white sugar; when cold, pour it over the cabbage and stir it together. Before sending to table, sprinkle with black pepper. For a small family, one half the above.

Frying of Oysters.—Take fifty large fresh oysters and dry them well, have six fresh eggs well beaten together with plenty of pepper and salt, have two pounds of good butter crackers pounded and well sifted; then dip one oyster at a time in the eggs, and roll them in the crackers, and lay them so they will dry, and if you do not have crumbs enough on, you can roll over again. Fry in good butter and fresh lard, half and half; quick fire; a light brown.

Everton Taffy.—First, melt in a shallow vessel a quarter of a pound of butter, and add to it one pound of brown sugar. Stir them together for fifteen minutes, or until a little of the mixture dropped into a basin of cold water will break clean between the teeth without sticking to them. Any flavoring that is desired, as lemon, pineapple or vanilla, should be added just before the cooking is complete. The taffy, when done, should be poured into a shallow dish which is buttered on the bottom and edges. Should you wish to break it into squares, draw a knife across it when partially cool.

Pie Crust Glaze.—Beat an egg well, and with a brush or bit of cloth wet the crust of the pie with the beaten egg, just before you put in the pie mixture. In making any pie which has a juicy mixture, the juice soaks into the crust, making it soggy and unfit to eat; the above will prevent this.

For pies which have a top crust also, wet the top with the same before baking, which gives it a beautiful yellow brown.

It gives beauty also to biscuit, ginger cakes, and is just the thing for rusk, by putting in a little sugar. Wood's Household Advocate.

The American Presbyterian recommends that culprits condemned to be hung should first have chloroform administered to them, since it is the purpose of punishment to remove the offender out of the way, and not to cause pain. It also suggests that it be introduced into schools when boys are to be flogged.

TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their Reputation is not of Mushroom growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better Draft, and will Draw well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of Filley's Hot Air Flue to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every Charter Oak guaranteed, or the money refunded.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of.....$10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of..... 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of..... 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of..... 25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Pinno Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sound ing-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

DARBY'S

PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

Letter from Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia:

CRAWFORDSVILLE, GA., Sept. 29, 1868.

Darby's Prophylactic Fluid is an article of intrinsic, but great value. Its domestic as well as medicinal uses are numerous, while its specialties are most wonderful. I have not been without it for ten years, and no head of a family who can afford to have it should be without it.

ALEX. H. STEPHENS.

The Wonderful Fluid—Medicine.

Letter from the Surgeon General of the late Confederate States:

RICHMOND, VA., Jan 14, 1869.

JOHN DARBY & Co., No. 160 William St., N. Y.—Gentlemen: I have received your letter of the 15th of December, 1868, calling my attention to your (Darby's Prophylactic) Fluid.

I most cheerfully state that the Fluid was furnished to and extensively used by the Surgeons in charge of General Hospitals in the Confederate service, with great benefit to the patients, all the surgeons making a favorable report. A great deal of it was used in the hospitals.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAM'L PRESTON MOORE, M. D.,

The Astonishing Disinfectant.

EMORY COLLEGE, OXFORD, GA., December 28, 1868.

PROF. DARBY—Dear Sir: Having not been engaged for many years in the active duties of the medical profession, I am only superficially acquainted with the claims of your Prophylactic Fluid, but am well acquainted with its chemical elements.

While, therefore, I cannot speak experimentally of the value of the compound, yet the disinfecting and Therapeutic properties of the agents employed in its composition, together with the well known reputation of its discoverer as a chemist, authorize me to regard its merits as of a high order. On the whole, it must be considered as a valuable contribution to the class of articles to which it belongs.

These views, I may add, are sustained by the testimony of many competent judges who have tested its properties.

Believe me, dear sir, your's respectfully,

A. MEANS, M. D., LL. D.

Cures Burns, Wounds, Sores, Etc.

ALABAMA INSANE HOSPITAL,
Tuscaloosa, December 22, 1868.

MESSRS. JOHN DARBY & Co., 160 William St., N. Y.—Gentlemen: I received your circulars of the 10th instant, asking an expression of opinion from me as to the merits of your Prophylactic Fluid. The preparation has been so generally used by the profession and public at large, and so universally esteemed, that it seems to me to need no further recommendation.

As a disinfectant, and terrestrial agent too, when indicated, it is not exceeded by any similar preparation. We use permanganate preparations very extensively in this Hospital, and could not do without them. I consider yours the best and most elegant preparation of the kind manufactured.

Respectfully your, etc.,

P. BRYCE, M. D.,
Sup't. and Phys'n Ala. Insane Hospital.

A Perfect Pain Killer.

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE,
Staunton, Va., Jan. 9, 1868.

PROF. DARBY: When I was President of the Lagrange Female College, of Georgia, I used your Prophylactic Fluid in the College with decided success. Both as a disinfectant and as a remedy for sores and burns, etc., it was efficacious and proved to be what it is represented. Every family and public institution ought to have it. I wish you great success in the sale of it.

WM. A. HARRIS, D. D.,
Pres. W. F. College, Staunton, Va.

Never was there a family medicine so highly recommended as this. Try it and you will never regret it.

Let every country merchant visiting New York this spring put this article on his list. But don't wait. Order it at once.

And so we might fill this entire paper with recommendations from the very best men in the country.

There is no question that this is a most wonderful and useful article as a disinfectant, and for wounds, sores, burns, poisons, colic, as a tooth wash, general purifier, etc.

Every Druggist or Country Merchant has it for sale.

THE THIRTY-FIRST ANNUAL Session of the

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE,

MACON, GEORGIA,

Begins on OCTOBER 5, 1868, under the direction of the following

FACULTY.

Rev J M Bonnell, D D, President.
Rev C W Smith, A M, Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy.
Rev W G Bass, A M, Professor of Natural Sciences.
C Schmitz, A M, Professor of Latin and Modern Languages.
Mrs A R Leak, Assistant in Literary Department.
Carl Hintz, Musical Director, (with ample assistance.)
Miss E T Crown, Teacher of Drawing and Painting.

CHARGES.—There are three terms in the scholastic year. For each term the charges, which are to be paid at the beginning of the term, are as follows:

Regular tuition, $30. Board including washing, fuel and lights, $75. Incidental fee charged to day scholars, $1.

The following are optional: French, $15; Instrumental Music, $25; use of Instrument, $15; Vocal Music in class, $2—not charged to those who take Instrumental Music; Drawing, $15; Painting, $20.

Pupils who take French may be excused from Latin without affecting their graduation.

Special advantages provided in the departments of French, Music and Painting. For further information address the President

J. M. BONNELL,
sep5 tf President.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills for all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money shall be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300. PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day-scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

HOMES IN BRITISH HONDURAS.

FREE FROM TAXATION.

THE PUTNAM IMMIGRATION ASSOCIATION (Limited) of Belize, British Honduras, has been founded, under the laws of that Colony, with a Capital Stock of $500,000, coin, in five thousand shares of $100 each.

The Association has purchased of the Colonial Government an area of about 500 square miles of territory, comprising some of the richest Sugar, Tobacco, Corn, Rice and Cacao Lands in the Colony.

The Association will sell to each family that will locate upon and occupy the land between this and the 12th of July next, 160 acres at 50 cents per acre, payable in Five Years from date of settlement, without Interest. The Association will donate to every Parent and Child of each family, who may be living on the land at the end of the second year from date of settlement, one share of the Association's Stock, the value of which will be greater than the price paid for the land.

An adult male member of each family who will locate, put up a cabin, and clear enough land to provision his family, will be recognized as a bona fide settler.

These Lands will produce from three to five hogsheads of Sugar per acre, without cultivation. Sugar boiling can be carried on during eight months of the year. Two crops of Tobacco, Corn, Rice, Plantains and many kinds of vegetables can be made in a year. The country is healthy, and white men can work to better advantage in the warm months than in the Southern States. These facts are demonstrated by the experience of 350 Southerners now settled in the Colony.

No family should go that has not means sufficient for its support for twelve months after locating on the land.

The steamship Mexico will leave New Orleans for Belize on the 20th of February, the steamship Trade Wind on the 21th of February, and make the trip in five or six days. First class passage, $40, greenbacks; second class, $25. The Trade Wind makes a monthly trip.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

T. K. PRICE, ESQ., Vendor of "Price's Patent Texas Tonic," or Vegetable Medicine:

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate use and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best recipe that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetables Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therfore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefitted.

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

We remain yours truly,

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Benners.

For further information apply for circular to

O. F. CASEY,

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has continued to exhibit a fair degree of animation. Country merchants have been busily engaged in replenishing their stocks or purchasing spring goods, and city dealers have come forward more freely. The movement in sugar has been resumed, at a lower range of prices. All other markets are reported dull and drooping, but in none of them the unfavorable reaction appears to have been as marked as here. Molasses has been in moderate request at about previous rates. We have but little movement to notice in Western produce. Provisions, in particular, have been dull and drooping, and pork has suffered a further decline. The supply of shipping corn has been too limited to afford any scope to buyers for export. There is a good demand and shippers are ready to take all that comes forward at fair prices.

We hear reiterated complaints from the country of the injurious effects of continued wet weather. In some districts up the Red river the corn will have to be replanted, and planters have been seriously retarded in preparing the ground, while the roads continue in the worst possible condition. Some parties attribute to these causes the falling off in our cotton receipts, but most others state that their correspondence indicates that the actual supply held back is limited.

The river remains about the same, being three feet two inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 5th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi ..... bales..	6815
Lake	272
Mobile	436
Florida	10
Total	7757

On Saturday the market opened with a good inquiry, but, owing to more stringent pretensions on the part of factors, nothing of any moment was done until toward noon, when parties came together freely on the basis of 27¼ to 27½c. for low middling, and 28¼ to 28½c. for middling, and the sales summed up 3,500 bales. On Monday the morning business was again on a limited scale, factors asking above the views of buyers, but subsequently the movement became more animated, and 3,150 bales changed hands at a decided improvement on the latter qualities, low middling closing at 27¼ to 27¾c., and middling at 28½c. On Tuesday the market opened under the depressing influence of less encouraging accounts from Liverpool, a decline in foreign exchange, and rainy weather, and continued extremely dull throughout the day, the business embracing only 900 bales, while prices were unsteady and easier, the figures paid showing a partial falling off of ⅛ to ¼c. At the same time the supply was limited, and it was manifest that orders of any considerable magnitude could hardly have been executed unless at about previous rates.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 7,550 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 682,628 bales, against 484,367 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 69,326 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 6,684 bales to France, a decrease of 209,094 to Great Britain, and of 13,778 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	24½ to 25
Good ordinary	26½ to 26¾
Low middling	27¼ to 27½
Middling	28¼ to 28½
Strict middling	28¾ to 29

Sugar.—We note some improvement since our last review. A rather better feeling has prevailed, and the market has shown some animation. The stock on the landing is large, and the assortment is good, offering unusual inducements to buyers. On Saturday and Monday some 500 hogsheads were sold on the basis of 8½ to 9¼c. per pound for inferior, 11½ to 12 5/16c. for common, 12¾ to 13¼c. for fair, 13¾ to 14¼c. for fully fair, 14½ to 14¾c. for prime, 15 to 15¼c. for choice, 16 to 16¼c. for yellow clarified, and 17 to 18c. for white clarified.

Flour.—The market has been in good supply since our last review.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

THE RECONSTRUCTED CABINET.

The following nominations have been made: Boutwell for the Treasury; Hamilton Fish, State Department; General Rawlins, War Department, and Washburne minister to France; A. K. Sharpo marshal District of Columbia, Cannon A. Newcomb marshal for Missouri, Frank Moore, of New York, assistant secretary of legation, Paris; Sidney A. Stockdale collector of internal revenue, Louisiana, vice General Steedman; Edward V. Kingsley, secretary of legation, Madrid, vice Horatio J. Perry; James Longstreet, surveyor of customs, New Orleans, vice E. T. Parker, resigned; John F. Casey, collector of customs, New Orleans.

General Halleck will probably be relieved by General Schofield.

THE GEORGIA LEGISLATURE.—RATIFICATION OF FIFTEENTH AMENDMENT.

ATLANTA, March 11.—The House passed the fifteenth amendment by a vote of 74 yeas to 69 nays.

Members opposing its adoption said the article destroyed rights exercised by States since the foundation of the government, and a concession by the people North and South that they have no right to determine the right of suffrage. They claim it a concession by Congress that the reconstruction acts are unconstitutional, and that it invests Congress with the right to impose suffrage of all men on the States, irrespective of color or race. They say that the fundamental principle of democracy is that negro suffrage is wrong, not from any ill will toward the negro, but because the Democratic party is a white man's party and represents the intelligence and virtue of the country; that Governor Bullock belongs to a class who desire elevation of the negro above the whites, as by that means alone they can secure power, and when the Republican convention met last May, they decided that negro suffrage should be imposed on the States which had seceded, but not on the loyal States, because unconstitutional.

The Republicans said the Democrats must settle the matter; that the pill looked bad, and it was bad, but when swallowed they would feel better.

The extreme Radicals and Democrats left the hall without voting.

WASHINGTON, March 13.—Dr. Sam Bard, of Atlanta, had an interview with Grant to day, and it is reported a highly satisfactory one.

The trustees of the Metropolitan Methodist church called on Grant today, and formally assured him that hereafter his pew would be reserved.

General Grant has domesticated his military family in the White House. Their duties are thus apportioned:

General Dent will have control of all arrangements for visiting the President, interviews, presentations, and the general charge of the reception room—transacting the business of all callers not absolutely necessary to be sent to the President.

General Badeau will attend, as heretofore, to the opening of the correspondence.

General Babcock will have charge of all applications for and matters pertaining to appointments to office. All such applications will be promptly referred to the several departments.

General Porter will have charge of the matter of making out appointments.

It will be recollected that President Grant, immediately upon his taking office as President, directed that certain pardons issued by President Johnson should be revoked or withheld from the persons intended to be pardoned in certain cases, in New York, Massachusetts and elsewhere. Attorney General Hoar has had this subject under consideration, and it is understood he decides that the revocation of the President will not stand in law; that the act of the executive was complete when the warrant of pardon was placed in the hands of the United States marshal or other officer, and that if the persons intended to be pardoned shall not be released, that upon habeas corpus the courts would release them.

The Navy Department has ordered two iron-clad vessels to repair to Key West and wait for further orders; also, part of the Pacific squadron ordered to Cuban waters to be in readiness for further orders.

For three or four weeks prior to the end of Mr. Johnson's term as President, agents of the Cuban revolutionists were here urging the late administration to recognize them as belligerents. They received no direct encouragement from Mr. Johnson, who, however, much as he may have favored the petition, was probably restrained from any action in the matter by Mr. Seward, who favored and advised the issuing of a proclamation forbidding the formation of armed expeditions and recruiting in the United States in aid of the Cuban revolutionists, this country being at peace with Spain, and Cuba being one of her dependencies. So the matter stood at the conclusion of Mr. Johnson's term.

Immediately upon the inauguration of General Grant as President, the agents of the Cuban insurgents renewed their efforts for recognition, and found favor and encouragement in both branches of Congress. These facts becoming known to the Spanish embassy here, and action being taken looking to this recognition in the form of a resolution in the House, remonstrance has been made by the Spanish minister to our government. In view of possible difficulties that may arise from this state of affairs, the government has to-day, through the Navy Department, ordered two iron-clad vessels to proceed at once to Key West, and a part of the Pacific squadron to proceed immediately to Cuban waters.—New Orleans Times.

MILITARY CLERKS.

The fact that General Grant carried with him into the White House his personal staff, is complained of as a stride of military power, having no precedent in the history of the country; but, as if this were not sufficiently startling, General Sherman has eclipsed it in the issuance of his order assuming command of the armies of the United States. He therein announces his staff to embrace the head of every bureau attached to the War Department: The adjutant general, inspector general, quartermaster general, commissary general, paymaster general, chief of engineers, chief of ordnance, and judge advocate general, all of whom, heretofore subordinates of the Secretary of War, a civil officer, are thus swallowed up into the military by being declared staff officers of the general commanding the army. This auxiety on the part of the new administration to intensify the military power, followed up as it has been by the appointment of only personal adherents to important offices, smacks so much of European usage as to give the more timid Republicans grounds for the betrayal of a little nervousness.—New Orleans Times.

WASHINGTON, March 16—By General Orders No. 18, issued to-day, by direction of President Grant, Sheridan is assigned to the command of the military division of Missouri; General Halleck to command the military division of the South, composed of the departments of the South and Louisiana, the fourth military district, and the States comprising the department of Cumberland; General Thomas to command the military division of the Pacific; General Schofield, the department of Missouri; General Howard to command the department of Louisiana—General Mower to continue in command until the arrival of Howard.

The department of Washington is merged into the department of the East, the first military district to be added to the military division of the Atlantic.

SECRETARY OF WAR.

Major General John A. Rawlins, who was confirmed yesterday by the Senate as Secretary of War, in place of General Schofield, is a native of Illinois, where he was born, in Jo Davies county, on February 18, 1831. His early years were passed on a farm. In 1854 he commenced the study of law, and in the following year was admitted to the bar and opened an office in Galena, Illinois. He was a Democrat in politics, and in 1860 was an elector on the Douglas ticket, and stumped the State for that candidate. He entered the army early in the war, and September 15, 1861, joined General Grant at Cairo as his assistant adjutant general, with the rank of captain. Since that time he has been a member of the military family of the General, with whom he has been on the most confidential terms. He was commissioned major from the date of the fall of Fort Donelson, received the rank of lieutenant colonel November 1, 1862, and that of brigadier general of volunteers August 11, 1863; February 24, 1865, he was raised to the rank of major general of volunteers by brevet, and March 30, 1865, was appointed Grant's chief of staff, with rank of brigadier general in the United States army, and soon after was breveted major general. As an army officer, General Rawlins has refrained from public expression of his political views, but he is claimed as a Democrat by his old friends in Illinois, and last fall his nomination was talked of as Democratic candidate for representative at large from that State, against General Logan, the Republican nominee.

BROWNLOW TAKING THE OATH.

When taking the oath Brownlow lay back in his chair, his head bent down, his face shriveled, ghastly and of unearthly hue, his hands clasped in bony, vice-like grasp, and his whole appearance indicative of great physical depression. As Mr. Colfax read the oath, the poor old parson raised his feeble arm, which shook with palsy and dropped every moment to his side. Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms Bassett went over and sustained his arm through the remainder of the ceremony, though the old man made one or two desperate efforts by himself to sustain the right arm by propping it with his left hand. After he had taken the oath, the parson stretched forth his hand for a glass of water, which shook wildly before it reached his lips. The ordeal, slight as it seemed, had completely exhausted him.

WASHINGTON, March 17.—Ex-Congressman Allison, of Pennsylvania, will be appointed register of the treasury, vice Jeffries.

Grant's family occupied the White House to-day.

Several State delegations called on Grant to-day regarding offices. All were referred, with very brief complimentary remarks, to the heads of the departments.

Boutwell and Delano are besieged by office seekers.

The law requiring autograph franks consumed much of the time of prominent officials of the departments. The law will be modified.

It is almost certain that Casey and Longstreet will be confirmed to-morrow.

Joubert and Dumas, colored, have no show for revenue offices.

Grant will persist in withholding nominations urged by members of Congress until the tenure of office law is repealed.

The House Committee on Foreign Affairs considered the Cuba and San Domingo questions to day. It was decided to call on the executive for recent information, and take no action until the information is received.

The President has nominated Mrs. Van Lew postmistress at Richmond.

The report that the Indians have captured General Custar lacks confirmation.

No important confirmations to-day.

It seems certain that negroes will represent the United States at Hayti and San Domingo, but will have no share in Federal offices South.

The fleet in Cuban waters will be reinforced.

It is the opinion of cabinet officers and sound lawyers generally, that the President may, in effect, remove officers during a session of Congress by sending to the Senate the nomination of a successor, and the latter confirming the same. This being the case, the President can proceed to nominate whenever he pleases without restraint.

INAUGURAL CONTRASTS.

We copy as follows from the Crescent:

When General Washington was inaugurated he declared thus:

"The magnitude and difficulty of the trust to which the voice of my country called me, being sufficient to awaken in the wisest and most experienced of her citizens a distrustful scrutiny into his qualifications, could not but overwhelm with despondence one who, inheriting inferior endowments from nature, and unpracticed in the duties of civil administration, ought to be peculiarly conscious of his own deficiencies."

And General Washington had been a member of the Continental Congress and had presided over the convention which framed the Constitution.

Mr. Adams said:

"On this subject it might better become me to be silent, or to speak with diffidence."

And Mr. Adams had passed his life in connection with civil affairs.

Mr. Jefferson said:

"I avail myself of the presence of that portion of my fellow-citizens which is here assembled to express my grateful thanks for the favor with which they have been pleased to look toward me, to declare a sincere consciousness that the task is above my talents, and that I approached it with those anxious and awful presentments which the greatness of the charge and the weakness of my powers so justly inspire."

And Mr. Jefferson was the greatest statesman of his age.

Mr. Madison thus expressed himself:

"I repair to the post assigned me with no other discouragement than what springs from my own inadequacy to its high duties. If I do not sink under the weight of this deep conviction, it is because," etc.

And Mr. Madison was a distinguished politician and statesman, and diplomatist, and had taken the most prominent part in framing the Constitution.

Mr. Monroe remarked:

"Conscious of my own deficiency, I cannot enter on these duties without great anxiety for the result."

And Mr. Monroe was recognized as a man who, from his long experience and his ripe political education, was eminently fit to be trusted with the conduct of public affairs.

General Grant, in his inaugural address delivered on the 4th of March, 1869, says:

"The responsibilities of the position I feel, but accept them without fear. The office has come to me unsought. I commence its duties untrammeled."

MY MOTHER.

BY MARY S. WALL.

When these two words, "my mother," are said it seems to me that a volume has been spoken. Words are too poor to express all that these words mean. "There is no disinterested love save that of a mother—none but is subject to change." To-night I would fain call up some things about my mother, but I think of so much that I wish to say that I do not know what to leave out or what to write.

Mrs. Martha Winans was the wife of a pioneer Methodist preacher—a woman who did her duty conscientiously and well. There are heroines who make a brave fight, whose names never appear on the page of history. My mother was such a heroine—one whose name will not swell the song of the bard or employ the pen of the panegyrist, yet it deserves a place on the "roll of honor" as belonging to one of "the helpers of the brethren."

Mrs. Winans was the youngest daughter of Captain Daniel Dubose, a revolutionary hero, of Darlington, South Carolina. Her father died before she could know his face. She was one of five sisters, of whom one died young. The Misses Dubose were proverbial for beauty, prudence and—pride. I do not know that they were so very proud, but they were fastidiously particular about their behavior, their dress and their associates. But they had the name of being "proud and pretty."

In the year 1811 a large company of persons determined to emigrate from South Carolina to the Mississippi Territory. Among them were my widowed grandmother and her young daughter Martha. They were under the care and protection of Mr. John G. Richardson, who had married Miss Margaret Dubose. He was a warm-hearted, energetic man, but one who lacked deliberation and caution. He had spent one year in Mississippi Territory, and was much enthused with the country, and seemed to think if the company could get there with their lives, their horses and their money, all would be well.

At Hawkins' agency, which, I think, was on the Georgia line, the emigrants were obliged to leave every wheeled vehicle; and, of course, many valuables and conveniences were left. The Indians then permitted no roads—only a "trail" through the "nation." So the company packed what they could on horses and mules, and struck into the "trail." In the company was an old hunter, who supplied the game. The emigrants had tents, but did not use them after the first week, but slept by their camp-fires, under the star-studded canopy of heaven. For six weeks the emigrants journeyed through the forests of Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi. There were quite a number of young persons in the company, and you may be sure that they enjoyed themselves as they rode, day after day, through the aisles of "God's great temple," with hearts free from care, stopping to gather flowers, singing, talking and laughing. I have heard my mother say that she would not have objected to having the journey continue forever. I have often envied the enjoyment of that six weeks' journey through God's own country, before the hand of man had been there. I should like such a journey now more than one on a railroad. These days everything is cut out by a pattern. People must eat alike, talk alike, and even look somewhat alike. I have often seen the noble old water oak, under which part of the company encamped on the first night after their arrival in the neighborhood of their territorial home, which was rich in nature's choicest gifts. But it was a new country, and to those used to the comforts and conveniences of the old States, this wild country must have seemed very strange. Just think of it! They had no chairs, no trunks, excepting such small ones as could come slung on a mule's back. What do modern young ladies think of that? I remember mamma said they had but one fork. Uncle Winter made one of cane. At Hawkins' agency the emigrants got some gourd seeds, which they planted in Mississippi's virgin soil. Soon there was a crop of gourds of every size and form. One tall gourd was scraped and cleaned for a churn, and served three families. One large round one was cut so that the piece cut out fitted back, as we see cheeses cut sometimes. This made a famous bandbox. A near neighbor got six plates, and divided with grandma. People were like friends in those forest homes. We cannot imagine what it was to be set down in the woods without the commonest comforts, with no store nearer than sixteen miles, and very little in the stores, for the embargo was laid soon after grandma came to the country, and goods were scarce and dear. Grandma, mamma, and her servant woman, would card and spin. Sometimes grandma would cry over her privations, and think that she would "go back to Carolina;" but her young daughter Martha would say: "Oh! no, let us not go back. Let us try to make the best of the move that we have made." I have seen some trunks that were purchased by the spinning and weaving of my grandma and my mother. Soon after these emigrants came to Mississippi the embargo was laid on our commerce. Soon came the war of 1812, and the Indian war.

Grandma was an old-fashioned Methodist, but her son-in-law, Colonel Richardson, was gay and worldly, and through his influence Martha Dubose mixed a great deal in worldly company, and joined in fashionable amusements. I have heard mamma say that often her heart has ached, when she was at a ball, to think of her mother. Miss Dubose was pretty, intelligent and tolerably "well off." Of course she did not want for suitors. I say intelligent: she had never been to boarding school, but I presume she had read more history and sensible books than almost any ten young ladies of this day. She could work samplers, embroider beautifully, stitch, net, and knit very nicely. I can remember a young and pretty mother, while my brother and sisters could only recall one whom sickness and suffering had made a physical wreck. Mamma had the only real auburn hair that I ever saw, and it curled naturally and beautifully. Her eyes were very dark, and her complexion white.

The emigrants had not been in Mississippi long before the itinerant Methodist preachers were on the ground. One of them was Richmond Vally, who was here only a short time, and another was Lewis Hobbs, who was called the "weeping preacher." He was a young man of a sweet spirit. Mrs. Richardson had a severe illness, and during her affliction gave her heart to God. Soon her husband and young sister were converted. Conversion meant a change in those days. No more horse races or balls for them then; but the class room, the prayer meeting and the house of God. Soon after Uncle John was converted he went off into "the service," and was absent at one time six months, in the Indian war, and he was at the battle of New Orleans. I have heard him say that when all the other soldiers were huzzahing, he and General Hampton rode slowly over the field of victory, and could not refrain from tears.

ROMAN ASHES.—Italy is said to have protested against the great war supplies being shipped from Toulon to Civita Vecchia, but France pays little regard to such a complaint. If they are sent they must be required, and mean, sooner or later, to be employed. At Rome the carnival was not so gay as in other years; Mars predominates more than Momus at present in Europe, and when that Befana shall be laid, cheerfulness may reign. The pope, in celebrating the distribution of the "Ashes" to the cardinals and other persons of distinction on Ash Wednesday, appeared in excellent health; his sonorous voice was clear as a bell, especially when he uttered the Memento quia pulvis es et quia in pulverem reverteris. Next June, Pio Nino will complete the twenty-fourth year of his pontificate, and there is the Roman saying, that no pope has ever reigned twenty-five since St. Peter. His holiness is alive to this truth, and pushes forward with a last energy the preparations for the Ecumenical Council. This will take place in a portion of the St. Peter's, which will be fitted up in wooden stalls of eleven rows to accommodate nine hundred bishops, etc., in addition to other places being reserved for the representatives of the Catholic powers. At one extremity will be erected the pope's throne, having on his right the cardinals and on his left the patriarchs. Latin will be the only language spoken, but as each nation pronounces its "quantities" unlike, so will each nation have its own stenographers accordingly. The board and lodging of the bishops will prove a great strain on the papal purse, and many of the Roman princes are going to place their palaces at the disposal of his holiness' guests, as they did in 1867. It is gratifying also to know that during lent the papal army will not relax its exercises in the Remington rifle drill.

SPURGEON'S Baptist Pastors' College has received two hundred and eighty-five students for training, besides four hundred and sixty members of its evening classes. Of its students, one hundred and seventy-eight have left to settle in the ministry, all but eleven of whom are still in the work. Its students have founded forty-three new churches, and built twenty-two new chapels. Last session it had eighty-two students, besides one hundred and seventy-four in the evening classes.

A PROFESSOR in Utrecht has invented an instrument by means of which he undertakes to measure with the greatest accuracy the interval between an impression on the senses and its acknowledgment by some action of the will. Truly a wonderful instrument, quite worthy to have been invented by a Laputan instead of a Dutchman.

Come to me, soft-eyed sleep,
With your ermine-sandaled feet;
From the pain from my troubled brow
With your kisses cool and sweet;
Lull me with slumbrous song,
Song of your clime—the Blest,
While on my heavy eyelids
Your dewy fingers rest.

Come with your native flowers,
Heartsease and lotis bloom,
And wrap my weary sense
In the cloud of their perfume;
For thought's strange whispers tire me
With their constant dull repeat—
Fret me, like low waves throbbing
With endless, endless beat.

THE COLORED WORK.

Mr. Editor: I desire, through the Advocate, to make a modest suggestion to the presiding elders of the Mobile Conference. Hope they will not consider it presumptuous in me to do so. The concern I manifested at our late Conference to have one or more superintendents appointed to look after the religious welfare of our colored brethren in the bounds of the Conference, and carry forward to completion the wise recommendations of the last General Conference respecting them, was in good faith. I felt for their condition in my very heart. I would have gone even further than I did, but found I was being placed in a false position. It seemed to some of my brethren that, having served in the capacity of superintendent of the colored charges on the Columbus district the previous year, I was seeking a continuance of the same work. This does me injustice. As a Methodist preacher I never did, never expect to, seek or choose my work. Nothing could have induced me to accept the appointment but an unselfish desire to serve that unfortunate race. Since Conference I have been pained to witness their disappointment at the action of that body in this matter; and really it looked to me that this sacred interest was weighed against a few dollars and cents. And yet I am unwilling to believe that we, who have gloried in our concern for the soul of the slave, bestowed many thousands of treasure, and offered our lives in unhealthy places to bring them to Christ, could be influenced by any such consideration. Surely setting the negro free did not deprive him of his soul or lessen the obligations of the church to labor for his salvation. At any rate, just at this point the whole subject was laid on the table—I fear unfortunately. The future will show.

Now for my suggestion to the presiding elders. By the action of the Conference this great interest was confided to you. Can you attend to it? Is your district small enough to make one round of quarterly meetings for the whites and another for the blacks? The question answers itself. Will you hold a quarterly meeting for the whites and blacks at the same time and place? This is simply impossible. The negro will not attend. He knows it is his quarterly meeting only in a remote secondary sense, and will not be satisfied with it. If he should attend, can you serve him as he should be served? Will you have time to hold a quarterly conference with them? Can you give them a love feast? Will you be able to give them the Lord's supper and administer baptism? Simply impossible. If you have not, you will find it so.

Now I suggest, as the best that can be done under the circumstances, that you look out some experienced local minister on your district—doubtless one can be found on every district—to act as superintendent or presiding elder of the colored people, to travel over the district, form pastoral charges where none exist and supply them, hold quarterly meetings for them, give them the ordinances of the church, and carry forward the work of organization. Some time during the year hold a camp meeting with them. Most of the official will attend. Examine into the administration of the superintendent. Approve what is right and veto what may be wrong. In this way the colored people will have some one to whom they can look, whom they can claim as their leader. There is a charm in this, and they need and deserve such attention and oversight. My excellent presiding elder regards the plan with favor, and I think will soon have a superintendent traveling over his district. I offered myself to him for this work at my first quarterly meeting, if he would supply my place, but he declined. But how are these superintendents to be supported? Take a collection at all the colored quarterly meetings for them. The negroes will pay something. Let them look for their reward at the resurrection of the just.

Brethren, look after these poor sheep. Many have no shepherd, and are scattered and demoralized. They know not what to do, and are in the condition of a poor stray, ready to take up with any one who will offer them a few blades, or shed the light of an approving smile upon their dark faces.

I am sorry to see that the Montgomery Conference adopted the same course the Mobile Conference did. I know not what effect our example had upon them.—South Georgia has moved in the right direction in this matter.—Bishop Pierce has secured the services of that veteran man of God, Samuel Anthony, to superintend the colored work in the bounds of the Conference. The Conference reports twelve thousand members, and if true to themselves the day is not distant when they can report forty thousand.

Very truly and fraternally,
Yours, etc.,
W. Murrah.

SPEAK AS THE ORACLES OF GOD.

Mr. Editor: Allow me to call attention to the following words of our Saviour in his sermon on the Mount: "Whosoever, therefore, shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven; but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 5: 19.

On this passage Whedon says: "Our Lord is here laying down principles affecting the teachers whom he is to send forth. If to violate, with purpose, a known law of God is a dangerous sin, how much deeper the danger of teaching others to sin! Many of the best commentators understand this as signifying that he shall be excluded. Yet such, surely, is not its exact meaning. Clearly to be least in the kingdom of heaven is far less than shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven. Our Lord's phrase here is adopted by him for the purpose of the antithesis—the violation of the least shall himself be least. Such mercy is shown to the case of erring man, in whom mistake may mingle in the interpretation of God's laws, even when he would be a wise teacher, that our Lord uses a sentence which may imply, and yet does not absolutely express exclusion. Such a man's reward is terribly cut down; he is scarce, if at all, saved. Nothing but a state of repentance for all sin, known or unknown, can avail him. The true observer and teacher of the law, in all its completeness, shall be a star of brightest luster in the firmament of heaven."

How this should stir up the pure mind of every minister of the Gospel by way of remembrance! It is no light or trivial matter to mistake in the interpretation of God's word. Many sincere souls look up to their pastor for instruction. They watch his habits, and listen to his public and private discourses, and rest satisfied with these, without searching the Scriptures for themselves. To "do and teach" these commandments perfectly is, therefore, of the highest importance.

Here we are reminded of the admonitions of Paul to Timothy: "Be thou an example of the believers in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity. Give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine. Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophesy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery. Meditate on these things; give thyself wholly to them, that they, profiting, may appear to all. Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them, for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee."—I Tim., 4: 12–16.

THE CHINA MISSION.

To the Preachers of the Mississippi Conference:

Brethren—On page 24 of the minutes of our last session you will find the following: "It was resolved that collections for the benefit of Brother Lambuth, our missionary to China, be taken up during the ensuing Conference year, and that all money raised for foreign missions in this Conference, not otherwise directed by the donors, shall be applied to his use, the same to be forwarded through Rev. H. H. Montgomery."

On page 28 it is stated: "The months of March and October were agreed upon as suitable times for raising missionary collections."

It is desired by the Board of Foreign Missions that the Mississippi Conference will raise money sufficient to support Brother Lambuth in his field of mission work this year. Brother Smithson urges us to do this, that the funds raised in other Conferences may be applied toward the liquidation of the old debt, and the Indian Mission Conference.

If the two Georgia Conferences will support Brother Allen, cannot Mississippi support Brother Lambuth? If we try we can. But we must not postpone collections till the month of October if we hope to succeed. We ought, during the spring months, to call on the people for contributions for Brother Lambuth. He has gone into regular itinerating in China, on a four weeks' circuit, which embraces some five or six of the large cities of China and several villages. His traveling expenses will amount to nearly twenty dollars per month, as he travels principally by boat on the canals. He does colporteur work, as well as preaching, and has thus to travel so as to carry books and tracts. His family, too, needs support, and they will need it every day, to enable them to live, till October. Remember that, brethren, and begin at once—if you have not already begun—to take up the collections, and forward to me soon. I would like to remit to Brother Lambuth soon. He needs help, and the people will give if you will ask them. They will support you more liberally if you call on them to help him.

Dr. Marshall is in readiness to help in this work by bringing the claims of Brother Lambuth before the people and taking up collections, if you will but give him a call to come to your assistance, so far as he may be able to visit different places, and I hope you will write him immediately. And if he cannot come to your work, act well your part and get the money.

Where convenient, send to me by express or post office order, to Canton, Mississippi.

Yours in the work,
H. H. Montgomery,
Special Treasurer.

Tobacco and Ministerial Conscience.

Mr. Editor: It has always been a matter of great wonder to many thoughtful persons how good men could reconcile the use of tobacco with a good conscience. The grounds of this wonder are various, viz: The habit involves a useless expenditure of money, that every thoughtful man must admit to be morally wrong. This is the Lord's money, and it is spent for that which is much worse than useless. What would be thought by the Christians who use this article of a member of the church who should take the amount of their tobacco bill and deliberately throw it in the fire, and thus deprive the poor and the cause of God of its use. And yet that would be decidedly Christian, compared with the use they make of the amount. I would not ask the church for more money for the next ten years, to give the heathen the Gospel and the Bible, than the amount its members smoke and chew, while the heathen did without God!

Its use fosters and perpetuates a most sensual, unmanly and unchristian appetite. Why does our Discipline guard us against a "needless self-indulgence?" Because its framers believed it to be wrong and unchristian. What could be such an indulgence if the use of tobacco is not? Every man who indulges in this habit without compulsion must feel his self-respect lowered by the fact; and candid men, and nearly all in candid moments, are free to confess it. And what a loss of conscious integrity and power must the minister sustain who attempts to warn and remonstrate with sinners for indulging and living in sin, while he is in this condemnation. Any sinner could close his mouth most effectually who would retort upon him: "Physician, heal thyself."

But this is not the worst feature of the case. There are many professing Christians, and not a few ministers, who are destroying their health and shortening their days—really committing suicide—by their indulgence in this most unfortunate habit. How will such appear in the presence of God?

My thoughts have been directed to this subject now by two cases of ministerial conscience that have come to my knowledge recently, though presenting different "developments."

A minister of our Conference, who indulges freely in "the weed," has a very superior and a very pious daughter, her piety taking on that type that holds that "whatsoever ye do, in word or deed," we are to "do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." She can't see that her father smokes or chews "in the name of the Lord Jesus." Her conscience is troubled upon the subject, and she pleads with him, on religious grounds, to give up the practice. Now how do you think he puts her off and defends himself? Why he says: "My daughter, I am not sanctified, or I should not do it! I have been in that state of grace, but am not now." Pregnant confession! Can a sanctified man indulge in this habit? Let some sanctified one answer.

The other case presents a different phase. An excellent Christian lady discovered that her son had commenced to chew. She remonstrated with him, and he plead the example of an excellent minister in justification. This fact coming to the knowledge of the minister, his conscience was naturally stirred, and he wrote as follows: "I felt mortified to learn that I had taken to the use of tobacco, and that my example has had some influence with him. I am sorry that this is so. Tell him that I look upon the practice as sinful—as belonging to the class of sins which embraces drinking, opium eating, and all forms of needless self-indulgence; that I regard it as a violation of good taste, which is certainly one department of morals; and it is inconsistent with that economy which becomes us these times, and as the children of God, who must give an account of every cent he has given us. * * I regard it as wrong because no one can use it without giving the influence of his example to its use. I regard it morally as bad as drinking whisky, though it is not so great a social evil. I understand that he pleads the example of Brother R. also. Now tell him that I know Brother R. is under conviction on this subject. * * Tell J. also that some men use it and do not think it is wrong; but a great many who use it do feel condemned for it, especially the preachers."

It should be stated, in extenuation of this good brother's course, that he took to this practice to relieve disease from which he was suffering. I wish he could find some less objectionable remedy.

Mr. Editor, what do you think of the revelations he makes as to the state of preachers' consciences?—"Feel condemned," and yet continue! They do not confess thus to us when we talk to them. May the Good One help their consciences more and more, for the church needs their example and that money for the cause.

Alabama.

Military Rule in Jefferson, Texas.

Mr. Editor: If you will give me some space in your most excellent and very truthful paper, I will give the public a true history of an affair which concerns this community no little; and like difficulties may occur in other places, and like oppression may follow.

We had a man in our community for nearly ten years, by the name of G. W. Smith. He was a negro-ite in full—that is to say, they, the negroes, were his associates, day and night. The Radicals would not have him in their families. He lived with the negroes, was elected to the convention of this State by them, and returned to them from the convention. He was warned not to return to this place, not because he was a Radical, but because he had time after time threatened the community with violence. But he returned, and soon after his return his carpet bag was taken by some one, nobody knows who, and afterwards put where he could get it, minus his journal and some photographs. A body of soldiers, under authority, was directed to one man's house to make search for the lost property. It was not found. He said it was not worth five hundred dollars to him, but he would make it cost Jefferson five thousand.

The man's house was once searched; and now the threats of Smith caused him to become uneasy, for fear the notorious characters would come and abuse himself and family. So three men started to spend the night with him. As they went they were fired into, two of them being severely wounded. Smith was arrested and put in jail—for he said he fired the first gun—with three negroes. This was on Saturday night. On Sunday night the jail was stormed by a number of men. Smith was killed in the jail. The negroes were carried to the edge of town and killed.

At the time this was done there was a Federal force here, say of about forty men and officers. At Marshall, only sixteen miles off, was a larger force. When the killing was done the Federal commander was at the jail with his men. The mayor, marshal and police were at the same place. The military surrendered to the mob; then the mayor. Then a pistol was presented at the head of the marshal, and he ordered the key to be produced, which was done in quick time. Then followed what has already been stated. The mob was in thick mask. I am told not one of them could be recognized.

A time elapsed, and a military commander came in with a larger force, and soon began making arrests. Some of the best men of our city were taken—the merchant from his desk, the mechanic from his shop, the husband from his wife, the father from his children. Others have taken refuge in the distance rather than await the time of the United States authorities. I think they now have about twenty-five men in their hands, of all classes—the old, young, good, bad, black and white. Some of them have now been confined about four months—crowded together like sheep for the slaughter—thrown into cells dug in the ground and covered over, with but little pure air or light, and no comforts such as their friends would send them from without. The families of many of these men were dependent upon them for their daily bread. Now they are left to the charity of the world. The cry of the helpless child does not affect the tyrant's heart nor loose his grasp. Many of the prisoners can prove point blank that they were at home with their families when the killing occurred. But it does no good.—Charges are not preferred, nor intimation given when a trial will take place. Petition after petition has gone forth, but no relief. Only a few days ago the ministers of the Christian churches sent a petition to General Buell for General Canby asking for an early trial or hearing of the manner and conversation of Buell caused them to withdraw the document. Now what shall we do? Let our friends suffer on? To whom can we appeal? God, in pity, look on us!

You may go to Webster or Walker, and look for the meaning of the words despot, tyrant, and all kindred words, and learn but little about it. To know their meaning you must have the monster with you. We have him in the person of the authority here. The very ground appears tainted under his feet, and in his presence you feel as if you were at the mouth of corruption itself. The cry of the helpless is sweet music to his ear, and the groans of the tortured are his delight. Liberty is not dying with us. It is dead, twice dead, and now lies a mangled corpse in our streets and in our houses. The good mourn over it in silence, and the tyrant publicly rejoice. Gloom has settled over all our people.

Is there no help in Israel for the widow's son?

Yours in fact, Truth.

PULPIT ENGLISH.

The phrases, 'in our midst,' 'in your midst,' instead of 'in the midst of you,' etc., have been formed by the pulpit upon a large portion of the community, including the secular press. But they are not to be found in the English Bible; they are, says the last edition of Webster, 'contrary to the genius of the language, as well as opposed to the practice of our best and most accurate writers, and should therefore be abandoned.' Another barbarism which I have heard abundantly from theological students and preachers is the provincial English, Irish, Scotch and Southern practice of interchanging 'will' and 'would' with 'shall' and 'should' in connection with pronouns of the first person, after the style of the drowning Frenchman. 'I will drown and nobody shall help me.' Now it may be excusable for an ignorant domestic to inquire, 'Will I set the table now, ma'am?' and to add, 'If I do I will have time to go out.' But it is a confusion of speech hardly worthy of the educated ministers who annoy us with it thus: 'I will be under the necessity;' 'if we do not believe we will never reach heaven;' 'we may be assured we will find it true;' 'I would in vain attempt to express my emotions;' 'we ought to know that we would be ruined,' etc. There is a common and gross inaccuracy in the use of 'but that' and 'but' for a simple 'that.' Thus, 'who can doubt but that he will hear our prayer,' or, 'we cannot doubt but he will do so;' when the speaker means the very different thing, 'we cannot doubt that he will.' The word 'but' is very often misused in another way after 'can;' thus, 'he can but save,' etc. We sometimes hear the misuse of the commercial word 'balance' in the discussion A wrong collocation of 'only' is a frequent confusion—'he can only save,' for 'he only can save.' 'Being done' is frequently heard instead of 'doing.' Some preachers—though they are few—indulge in the bad taste of frequently reminding the members of the congregation of their respective sex, by addressing them as 'brethren and sisters,' or adding the words 'and women' to general expositions concerning 'men;' and I have heard ministers endeavor to improve on Scripture by a similar impertinence, in the prayer that we may grow up 'into the stature of perfect men and women in Christ Jesus.'—Bartlett.

NUMBER TWO.

It was an age of boundless luxury—an age in which women recklessly vied with one another in the race of splendor and extravagance, and in which men plunged headlong, without a single scruple of conscience, and with every possible resource at their command, into the pursuit of pleasure. There was no form of luxury, there was no refinement of vice invented by any foreign nation, which had not been eagerly adopted by the Roman patricians. 'The softness of Sybaris, the manners of Rhodes and Antioch, and of perfumed, drunken, flower-crowned Miletus,' were all to be found at Rome. There was no more of the ancient Roman severity and dignity and self-respect. The descendants of Æmilius and Gracchus—even generals and consuls and prætors—mixed familiarly with the lowest canaille of Rome in their vilest and most squalid purlieus of shameless vice. They fought as amateur gladiators in the arena. They drove as competing charioteers on the race course. They even condescended to appear as actors on the stage. They devoted themselves with such frantic eagerness to the excitement of gambling, that we read of their staking hundreds of pounds on a single throw of the dice, when they could not even restore the pawned tunics to their shivering slaves. Under the cold marble statues, or amid the waxen likenesses of their famous stately ancestors, they turned night into day with long and foolish orgies, and exhausted land and sea with the demands of their gluttony. 'Woe to that city,' says an ancient proverb, 'in which a fish costs more than an ox;' and this exactly describes the state of Rome. A banquet would sometimes cost the price of an estate; shellfish were brought from remote and unknown shores, birds from Parthia and the banks of the Phasis; single dishes were made of the brains of the peacocks and the tongues of nightingales and flamingoes. Apicius, after squandering nearly a million of money in the pleasures of the table, committed suicide, Seneca tells us, because he found that he had only £80,000 left. Cowley speaks of > 'Vitellius' table, which did hold

> As many creatures as the ark of old.'

'They eat,' said Seneca, 'and then they vomit; they vomit, and then they eat.' But even in this matter we cannot tell anything like the worst facts about

> 'Their sumptuous gintoolos and gorgeous feasts
> On citron tables and Atlantic stone,
> Their wines of Setia, Cales and Falerne,
> Chios and Crete, and how they quaff to gold,
> Crystal and murrhine cups, embossed with gems
> And studs of pearl.'*

Still less can we pretend to describe the unblushing and unutterable degradation of this period as it is revealed to us by the poets and the satirists. 'All things,' says Seneca, 'are full of iniquity and vice; more crime is committed than can be remedied by restraint. We struggle in a huge contest of criminality: daily the passion for sin is greater, the shame in committing it is less. * * * Wickedness is no longer committed in secret: it flaunts before our eyes, and has been sent forth so openly into public sight, and has prevailed so completely in the breast of all, that innocence is not rare, but non existent.'

And it was an age of deep sadness. That it should have been so is an instructive and solemn lesson. In proportion to the luxury of the age were its misery and its exhaustion. The mad pursuit of pleasure was the death and degradation of all true happiness. Suicide—suicide out of pure ennui and discontent at a life overflowing with every possible means of indulgence—was extraordinarily prevalent. The Stoic philosophy, especially as we see it represented in the tragedies attributed to Seneca, rang with the glorification of it. Men ran to death because their mode of life had left them no other refuge. They died because it seemed so tedious and so superfluous to be seeing and doing and saying the same things over and over again; and because they had exhausted the very possibility of the only pleasures of which they had left themselves capable. The satirical epigram of Destouches—

> 'Ci-git Jean Rosidf, ecuyer,
> Qui se pendit pour se desennuyer,' was literally and strictly true of many Romans during this epoch. Marcellinus, a young and wealthy noble, starved himself, and then had himself suffocated in a warm bath, merely because he was attacked with a perfectly curable illness. The philosophy which alone professed itself able to heal men's sorrows applauded the supposed courage of a voluntary death, and it was of too abstract, too fantastic, and too purely theoretical a character to furnish them with any real or lasting consolations. No sentiment caused more surprise to the Roman world than the famous one preserved in the fragment of Mæcenas—

> 'Debilem facito mann,
> Debilem pede, coxa,
> Tuber adstrue gibberum,
> Labricos quate dentes;
> Vita dum superest bene est:
> Hanc mihi vel acuta
> Si sedeam cruce sustine;'

which may be paraphrased—

> 'Numb my hands with palsy,
> Rack my feet with gout,
> Hunch my back and shoulder,
> Let my teeth fall out;
> Still, if life be granted,
> I prefer the loss:
> Save my life, and give me
> Anguish on the cross.'

Seneca, in his 101st Letter, calls this 'a most disgraceful and most contemptible wish;' but it may be paralleled out of Euripedes, and still more closely out of Homer. 'Talk not,' says the shade of Achilles to Ulysses in the Odyssey—

> "Talk not of reigning in this dolorous gloom,
> Nor think vain lies,' he cried, 'can ease my doom.
> Better by far laboriously to bear
> A weight of woes, and breathe the vital air,
> Slave to the meanest hind that begs his bread,
> Than reign the sceptred monarch of the dead.'

But this falsehood of extremes was one of the sad outcomes of the popular Paganism. Either, like the natural savage, they dreaded death with an intensity of terror, or, when their crimes and sorrows had made life unsupportable, they slank to it as a refuge, with a cowardice which vaunted itself as courage.

And it was an age of cruelty. The shows of gladiators, the sanguinary combats of wild beasts, the not unfrequent spectacle of savage tortures and capital punishments, the occasional sight of innocent martyrs burning to death in their shirts of pitchy fire, must have hardened and imbruted the public sensibility. The immense prevalence of slavery tended still more inevitably to the general corruption. 'Lust,' as usual, was 'hard by hate.' One hears with perfect amazement of the number of slaves in the wealthy houses. A thousand slaves was no extravagant number, and the vast majority of them were idle, uneducated and corrupt. Treated as little better than animals, they lost much of the dignity of men. Their masters possessed over them the power of life and death, and it is shocking to read of the cruelty with which they were often treated. An accidental murmur, a cough, a sneeze, was punished with rods. Mute, motionless, fasting, the slaves had to stand by while their masters supped. A brutal and stupid barbarity often turned a house into the shambles of an executioner, sounding with scourges, chains and yells.* One evening the Emperor Augustus was supping at the house of Vedius Pollio, when one of the slaves, who was carrying a crystal goblet, slipped down, and broke it. Transported with rage, Vedius at once ordered the slave to be seized, and plunged into the fish-pond as food to the lampreys. The boy escaped from the hands of his fellow-slaves, and fled to Cæsar's feet to implore, not that his life should be spared—a pardon which he neither expected nor hoped—but that he might die by a mode of death less horrible than being devoured by fishes. Common as it was to torment slaves, and to put them to death, Augustus, to his honor be it spoken, was horrified by the cruelty of Vedius, and commanded both that the slave should be set free, that every crystal vase in the house of Vedius should be broken in his presence, and that the fish-pond should be filled up. Even women inflicted upon their female slaves punishments of the most cruel atrocity for faults of the most venial character. A brooch wrongly placed, a tress of hair ill-arranged, and the enraged matron orders her slaves to be lashed and crucified. If her milder husband interferes, she not only justifies the cruelty, but asks in amazement: 'What! is a slave so much of a human being?' No wonder that there was a proverb, 'As many slaves, so many foes.' No wonder that many masters lived in perpetual fear, and that 'the tyrant's devilish plea, necessity,' might be urged in favor of that odious law which enacted that, if a master was murdered by an unknown hand, the whole body of his slaves should suffer death—a law which more than once was carried into effect under the reigns of the emperors. Slavery, as we see in the case of Sparta and many other nations, always involves in its own retribution. The class of free peasant proprietors gradually disappears. Long before this time Tib. Gracchus, in coming home from Sardinia, had observed that there was scarcely a single freeman to be seen in the fields. The slaves were infinitely more numerous than their owners. Hence arose the constant dread of servile insurrections; the constant hatred of a slave population to which any conspirator or revolutionist might successfully appeal; and the constant insecurity of life, which must have struck terror into many hearts.

Such is but a faint and broad outline of some of the features of Seneca's age; and we shall be unjust if we do not admit that much at least of the life he lived, and nearly all the sentiments he uttered, gain much in grandeur and purity from the contrast they offer to the common life of

> 'That people victor once, now vile and base,
> Deservedly made vassal, who, of ce just,
> Frugal, and mild, and temperate, conquered well,
> But govern ill the nations under yoke,
> Pealing their provinces, exhausted all
> By lust and rapine; first ambitious grown
> Of triumph that insulting vanity;
> Then cruel, by their sports to blood inured
> Of fighting beasts and men to beasts exposed,
> Luxurious by their wealth, and greedier still,
> And fro the daily scene effeminate.
> What wise and valiant man would seek to free
> These thus degenerate, by themselves enslaved;
> Or could of inward slaves make outward free?'
> MILTON, Paradise Regained, iv. 132–145.

* Compare the lines in Dyer's little-remembered Ruins of Rome:

> 'The citron board, the bowl enbossed with gems,
> * * * * whate'er is known
> Of rarest acquisition; Tyrian garbs,
> Neptunian Albion's high testaceous food,
> And flavored Chian wines, with incense fumed
> To slake patrician thirst: for these their rights
> In the vile streets they prostitute for sale,
> Their ancient rights, their dignities, their laws,
> Their native glorious freedom.'

CHANGES IN JAPAN.

The new government of Japan has inaugurated many changes in the imperial regime, administrative, legislative and religious. These and other changes are so vast that those Japanese who have been in Europe and America while they were coming to pass, on their return to their native land, have written to their friends whom they left behind, saying that if those who still are pursuing their studies abroad, were to go home, they would scarcely know their own country. Mind, in that country, is not torpid and listless as to the progress which the world abroad is making.

* * * * *

The war is ended, and the young Emperor or Mikado is now the sole head of the government. He has made Yedo his eastern capital, and has, under the guidance of those princes who espoused his cause, ordained and established a new system of government, which deprives him of the legislative power, and confers it upon an elective parliament, consisting of two houses, in the lower of which something of the popular element is introduced; so that the Mikado is now at the head of a constitutional monarchy in embryo. This alone is enough to show that the Japanese are a progressive people, and can make long and rapid strides forward. All this has taken place in less than two years. We rejoice at these evidences of life in the nation, but are still more glad to notice other changes, of a religious nature.

For full thirteen hundred years Buddhism has prevailed over Japan, having come in by way of the Corean peninsula, and thither from China. Since 1604 the laws of the Shogoons (commonly called Taikuns by foreigners) made it obligatory upon all natives of the country to have their names registered in some Buddhist temple. Gongensama, the first of the late house of Shogoons, adopted this expedient in order to prevent any of his subjects from becoming proselytes to the Romanist religion. The nobles and literati of Japan, however, were few of them Buddhists. They were Confucianists. The law above mentioned was not enacted on account of the devotion of Gongensama to the Buddhist faith, but as a mere political expedient. A religion which has so long prevailed among the majority of the people, one would hardly expect to see set aside in a day. But strange as it may appear, this has been done by imperial authority.

In November, 1868, the young Mikado went up from Miyako, the ancient capital, to Yedo, to establish himself there for a time, and to make that city his so called eastern capital. At that time a strange thing took place. An imperial order, issued before he started on this journey of some five hundred miles overland, requiring all Buddhist images or idols to be covered up on the route of his progress. This at first seemed unaccountable. But by a letter lately received from a missionary in Japan, I learn that since the Mikado's residence at Yedo took place, the government has by authority of parliament ruled out Buddhism, as the national religion, altogether. The government now professes adherence only to Shindoism, a religion that is indigenous to Japan, and prevailed there long before Buddhism came in from Corea and China. It is not an idolatrous religion in one respect, namely, it has no idols. The believers in Shindoism worship innumerous gods, without the aid of images. Their Pantheon is said to include eight hundred thousand deities.

Now this movement shows two things conclusively. First, that the rulers of the country do not believe in Buddhism, and secondly, that they are ashamed to have it maintained by the new government, lest they should be thought its adherents. They, unfortunately, are afraid of Christianity, because they have generally no knowledge of its true character, object and effects. They have been prejudiced against it by what their forefathers saw of Romanism, as taught by the Jesuits and Franciscans, and exemplified in the lives of those Portuguese adventurers who resorted to Japan in former times for purposes of trade. They fear the political effect if it be permitted to enter Japan. Their prejudices and fears, lest by coming in it should set up the pope's imperium in their imperio, are as strong as ever. But few, comparatively, of the ruling class in Japan have learned to distinguish between Protestantism and Romanism, though (blessed be God) the number of these is increasing.

The labors of the small number of Protestant missionaries in that country have caused some of those now in power, not only to believe, but to profess faith in Jesus. There are more Romanist missionaries than Protestants there, and yet the truth, in its simplicity and purity, has been making headway among the Japanese.

The consequence is, that the Shindoists are anxious to know more of the Bible, and are trying to make the two systems, Christianity and Shindoism, conform to each other. My informant writes under date of December 18, 1868: "I have a book written for this purpose, by a venerable man of Satsma, at Miyako. He is also in correspondence with me, and Mr. Verbeck, (i. e., with the Protestant missionaries, at both Nagaski and Yokohama,) on religious matters."

This man, I am informed by a Japanese now in America, is one of the most distinguished poets of Japan. Thus, it is easy to see that the thoughts of the leading men of the country are earnestly turned to the subject of religion. In this state of things, it is obvious that the most pressing want of that people is the Bible in their own tongue. Not one book of it has yet been published in the Japanese language, and but a very small part is translated. Yonder, across the Pacific, is a great nation, calling to us by most significant signs and tokens for the bread of life and the word of God. Who will give it to them? Thousands of Buddhist temples, occupying the most charming sites in all the land, will now go to decay, for want of worshipers to support them, and thousands of Buddhist priests will gradually find that their occupation is gone. Their connection with the State being sundered, they will no longer have it in their power to hinder the spread of the truth as it is in Jesus. Was there ever a fairer or more inviting field for the Christian to enter with the Gospel of Christ?—Correspondent of North-western Christian Advocate.

Thomas Jackson, of the British Wesleyan Conference.

At the late opening of the new Wesleyan Theological Institution at Headingly Mr. Jackson was called out on the platform, and made the speech which we give below. We are quite sure we shall gratify thousands of our readers by printing it entire.

You have placed me, Mr. President, in a state of embarrassment. I did not come for the purpose of making a speech; my days for making speeches are past and gone. But having an invitation to come here, I felt that I could not resist the invitation, (hear, hear,) thinking I should like to see the commencement of another Methodist institution before I go the way of all the earth. The institutions of Methodism have been dear to my heart through a long life. To find these institutions increasing is my delight and my joy.

I thought, also, that by coming here I should see a few old friends, (hear,) it may be for the last time. The Lord's will be done in that respect. I can say with respect to them, and those that are gone before, "Joyful to meet, yet willing to part," when such may be the will of the great Master. I am often reminded in my intercourse with my friends in different places that I am an old man; often reminded that I belong to a former generation. Be it so. Be it so. My contemporaries as Methodist preachers are all gone; all gone, with one solitary exception.

I sometimes meet with a suggestion which startles me, and which I am not prepared to receive; that is, that the generation who have disappeared are now regarded as having entertained thoughts, and habits, and principles of action which are now regarded as obsolete, and that I am now surrounded by a generation which see much more correctly than my contemporaries did, and can see much more extensively into the future. I very much doubt that. (Laughter and cheers.) May I mention a few names? (Hear, hear, and cheers.) May I mention a few names belonging to my generation? There are a few of them I can scarcely pronounce without tears. There is John Hannah, (applause,) who was a youth in his teens in the city of Lincoln when I was there traveling in my fourth year; as fine a specimen of evangelical preaching and truly genial Christian spirit as any of us have ever witnessed. Are his views and habits to be superseded and forgotten? (Cries of no, no.) There is John Scott. Aye, if the voice and physical powers of John Scott had been equal to his intellect, he would have been one of the most popular preachers of his age; a man of powerful intellect, great kindness of heart, and more than ordinary practical wisdom. I miss that man. (Applause.) There is Robert Newton. (Hear, hear, and cheers.) I distinctly recollect Robert Newton when he came into his first circuit, a fine, tall, graceful young man, having great fluency of speech and largeness of heart, such as characterized him to the end of his glorious life. Is the missionary zeal of that man to be forgotten? (Repeated cries of no, no.) There is Jabez Bunting, (cheers,) one of the best preachers in England for many years, and as a practical administrator second only to John Wesley. One of my contemporaries was Richard Watson. (Applause.) Do we forget him, and think that his views are obsolete? A man concerning whom Robert Hall said after hearing him preach, "He does not move in the old ordinary rut; he goes into regions of thought where scarcely ever a human being has trodden before." Am I surrounded by a generation of men greater than Richard Watson? (A laugh.) There was Adam Clarke (cheers) and Joseph Benson, (renewed cheers,) two men for pulpit powers perhaps unsurpassed since the Apostle Paul was in this world; and what they were as interpreters of the Scriptures we know very well.

If you would hear with me I would go on a little further. (Cries of go on, go on.) I was not a Methodist preacher when John Fletcher visited the Leeds Conference in 1784, but I was a living inhabitant of this world of ours when John Fletcher preached that wonderful sermon before the preachers of the Leeds Conference about the old prophet that came from Bethel bearing testimony against the idolatry of Jeroboam, and Jeroboam said, "Lay hold upon him!" when, lo! the king's hand was dried up, and the king stood as an object of pity to the assembled multitude, and he had to ask the old prophet to pray for him, that his hand might be restored. Fletcher said: "Live in the Spirit; preach the truth, the truth as it is in Jesus, and in the spirit of our great Master, and every hand that is stretched out against you will be dried up in like manner. Here is encouragement for you to serve the same God. But beware of being Antinomians, of being disobedient to the Lord. See that you persevere in your work, and in your steady adherence to the instructions you have received from your great Master." (Applause.)

Sir, I was a living inhabitant of this world when Charles Wesley went to heaven in 1788, and when a good old Methodist woman said, "Who will poet for you now?" (Laughter and cheers.) Sir, I ask, Have we men in the present day equal to Charles Wesley as hymn writers? Then there is John Wesley, father of us all—a man never to be thought of without feelings of gratitude to God, who gave us such an instrument. (Hear, hear.) Are we really surrounded by a generation of men who think these men obsolete to their views and principles of action? I have tried in my humble manner to tread in the footsteps of these great men—at a great distance, however—during the sixty four years in which I have been I Methodist preacher, and He who made me knows it has been my earnest desire to tread in the footsteps of those men, and to be actuated by the same spirit which actuated them.

I am about to leave the world. I am anxious for nothing, so far as this world is concerned, but the perpetuity of the work of God, the spirituality of the work with which we are intrusted. O! what is preaching, what is oratory, what is anything but spiritual religion? What is the use of preaching unless we get people converted, brought into liberty, to walk in liberty, and then after a life of purity die in the Lord? What has the world equal to this? I wrote a letter to the Conference. (Hear, hear.) I thought as an old man, standing on the borders of two worlds, I might take the liberty of doing that. My great business was to promote the work of God; to ask, What is it to us what party is uppermost in the State if our preaching be trite and unimpressive, and our hearers remain unconverted, and the members of our societies have nothing but a form of godliness, and die at last without knowing whither they are going? I did in that letter refer to other subjects, but that was the subject most prominent. As to the rest, I need not say anything about it. I can only say this, that I have been almost slain in consequence of the misconstructions put upon it.

I am about to leave you. God grant that his spirit may be poured out upon the Methodist preachers, and O, may the present generation of men surpass the men of the former! O, may the men you raise up in this place, Mr. Lomas, and Mr. Farrar, and Mr. Hellier, be better than the men whose names I have mentioned. A great deal will depend upon the material you have to work upon, but we rely upon you that you will do the best you can. But a converting ministry we must have.

It is a dangerous thing to call upon an old man to speak. (A laugh.) I beg your pardon. God bless you all! I trust to have the happiness of meeting you in the paradise of God, where so many of our blessed members of society and Methodist preachers have gone before. (Loud and prolonged applause.)

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

GADSDEN, ALA., March 3, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: I send you seven names for the ADVOCATE.

Bishop McTyeire, by request, made a station of this place, and appointed me to it. We have a strong society, and a flourishing Sunday school, numbering about one hundred. General Turrentine, a dear lover of Sunday schools, has been our superintendent for twenty years, and though he is very old, he never fails to meet the little ones on the Lord's day. They all love him. May he live long to bless the world, and would to God we had scores of just such men everywhere.

I have received seventeen by certificate since I came, and others will join us soon. The prospect of a good revival is flattering. Many souls here are without God. We believe many of them will be converted this year. O! that the moving fire of heaven may be in our bones. O! for a holy ministry and people in all these lands. O! for a mighty work of God among us in 1869. Brethren, be zealous. The signs of religious prosperity are good. God is getting ready to take the world, and the world is rapidly getting ready for him to take it, and he will take it in a hurry when he gets everything under good headway. It may be our privilege to see the exiled sons of Judah receive the long-despised Redeemer, and hear them tell with wonderful power and success the sweet story of the cross, and hear of their rebuilding the temple in more than its ancient splendor.

Our first quarterly meeting was pleasant and profitable. Dr. Slaughter, our presiding elder, works admirably. He moves in the presiding elder's path as if he had trod it often before.

My people are now building a first class frame church house, 70 by 44, in the latest style of church architecture. The young men are going to furnish us a clock for the spire. It will be one hundred and twenty-two feet from the ground.

All are interested in the building of the house. Gadsden is a beautiful town of about one thousand inhabitants, and is growing rapidly. It is the best market in north Alabama, right on the Coosa river, has stage and steamboat facilities, and is only two and a half miles from the celebrated "Black Creek Falls," which is a wonderful scene of nature. The water falls over a huge rock, arched about one hundred feet. It is a summer retreat for scores of persons every year. They breathe the pure mountain air, and drink of the mineral waters near by. It is the place for sick persons. In addition to the present accommodations there, other houses will be fitted up. We want the Conference here next year, if we can get it. Believe we will. You must make it convenient to come up. Know you will be delighted, for we have a noble hearted people, and everything to make one happy in deed and in truth.

Traveling facilities are improving here. A railway is projected from Atlanta, Georgia, to this point. The Alabama and Chattanooga road will either pass here, or four miles off. Both of these roads will, no doubt, be completed soon, as men of means and energy have them in hand.

COCOANUTS FROM HONDURAS.

The last trip of the steamer brings us a present from Rev. L. Pearce—a barrel of fresh cocoanuts. Brother Pearce is back on business for a month or two, and made his appearance in our office, looking browned and well.

We do not care to dwell on this barrel of tropical wealth, as the Tennessee brethren seem to take these things so hard, and have not yet recovered from the barrel of oranges, or that of sugar, or that of sirup! But we will say to our young readers that the barrel contains seventy-eight nuts. Each one contains milk, and is covered with a sort of reddish hair, looking much like the head of a young monkey, and slightly suggests the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution as proposed. There are the eyes, and almost a nose! By studying this expression we solved the great problem of "how the milk got in the cocoanut;" and give the result, viz.: In the same way that it comes out. We intend to look further into this matter.

The cocoanut tree grows upon the sea beach in the poorest of soils; it bears in about seven years, and each crop yields say fifty nuts. They are used in place of milk when in a green state, when ripe make excellent pies, puddings, etc., and when grated over oranges a delightful dessert, called ambrosia; their oil is used for cooking. We are a little particular, because it might constitute a style of "quarterage," even preferable to "socks." A few receipts as to the best way of making cocoanut puddings would be in admirable place just now.

ROMISH INTOLERANCE.

The Spanish priesthood is just now giving some very strong proofs of their impatience of every other church. One would suppose, to hear the stress put upon "conscientious scruples" by Catholic priests in this country, and by those Catholic laymen who have petitioned for a division of the school fund in this city, that they, being disposed to respect the religious scruples of others, could therefore urge their own; that in all matters of conscience they were willing "to live and let live." The facts are, however, that they tolerate nothing where they have power. In Rome there is not one Protestant school or one Protestant place of worship. Even the services at the private houses of the English and American ministers have been prohibited. In Spain the Cardinal, Archbishop of Valladolid, in a recent pastoral, says:

"There is another thing they wish with criminal intent to plant. It is called religious liberty, whose legitimate and natural manifestation consists in wishing to bring to Spain all the false religions in the world, and which are the enemies of the only true one there can be, which this magnanimous nation loves and venerates. And, as this diversity of false religions fortunately has no followers amongst ourselves, it has been necessary to take the resolution, as extravagant as impious, to try to create some. They have begun to carry into effect this infamous resolution in this noble and religious city of Valladolid, where some heretics have established themselves, who dedicate themselves to distribute tracts and pamphlets, to expose books, and to sell mutilated and corrupt Bibles."

The newspapers under the immediate control of the priests have threatened with violence all who permit religious services in their houses, or rent them for that purpose. A single item of news, because it is published as something wonderful, shows how undisturbed has hitherto been this reign of religious intolerance:

"On February 3d the city government of Madrid sold seventeen thousand feet of land on the Promenade de Bilbao, for the construction of a Protestant church. Work has been begun on it by the authority of the Cortes. It is said that a commission from the city government assisted at the laying of the corner-stone."

This impatience of all interference is the characteristic of superstition. Christianity can afford to be placed side by side with any and all systems of religion. Truth courts comparison with falsehood. It "comes to the light," knowing that only error loves darkness.—Every church without a Bible is a superstition; and every man who denounces the word of God—that is, the Old and New Testaments—to the people, and discourages their use and study by the people, "loves darkness rather than light."

It is upon this principle that the priests of this city are threatening all their church members who send children to the common schools. The windows of our school houses are too open, and the light pours in and emancipates too many of those children of Catholic immigrants "who have been all their lifetime subject to bondage." The little Catholic "creatures" "are delivered from the bondage of corruption," as St. Paul expresses it, "into the glorious liberty of the children of God." On Sabbath before last the priest at the Jackson street church fulminated "the damnation of hell" against those of his flock who should patronize the city schools—"he would not grant them absolution!" This is at present their general style of treating the school question indoors. Now, if eternal damnation is the consequence of this public school system, and an "unrelenting war" is waged by priests and laymen in and out of their Catholic churches against the city schools, why do Catholics consent to sit in the School Board, and what does the City Council mean by putting this important interest in the hands of its avowed enemies?

The fact is, those people hate the public schools because they hate religious liberty; that is, the liberty of "the truth." A gentleman, now in this city, Mr. Carey, has but recently returned from Guatemala. While there his son and his niece died. Being a Protestant, he was not permitted even to bury them within the town limits of Santa Thomas, but was compelled to take them far out in the woods and there bury them.

The work of religious toleration is going on bravely in Austria. While the people in Spain are throwing off the manacles of priestly despotism, the government itself in Austria has taken the work in hand. Yes, that Austria which for centuries has been the stronghold of Romanism is now of its own accord taking off its yoke, and securing to the people liberty of conscience. The pope has uttered an allocution against the Reichstradt; but like a toothless lion he can but growl. The government holds right on—it yields nothing. We quote from an exchange a statement of the Catholic situation in that country:

"The new laws completing the recent Liberal legislation with regard to civil marriage are another step toward the complete separation of the church from the State in Austria. The clergy keeps up its hostility, and the government replies by repressive measures. A church party paper, the Friend of the People, has been seized for publishing a letter from the pope condemning the new institutions of the empire. This rigorous act produced a profound sensation, and is without precedent in the Hapsburg annals since the reign of the Emperor Joseph II. Some time ago the Archbishop of Schwarzenburg was convicted of disturbing public order by a pastoral letter of his, in which he enjoined the faithful of his diocese to disobey the civil law respecting marriage. The case came before the Supreme Court of Prague, which has made a formal decision against the claims of the archbishop; and the clerical party, and the pope himself, who instigates the claims of his agents, are once more defeated."

PUBLIC GAMBLING.

Every new symptom of the corruption of the times is matter of profound grief to all reflecting men. Of late public attention has been fixed mainly upon judges, legislators and councilmen, upon what may be reckoned as "wickedness in high places." The lower styles of vice, such as the lottery, the drinking saloon and the secret haunt of gamblers, have been overshadowed by the stupendous proportions of robberies accomplished under the forms of law. The country is waking up to the fact that the legislation of the day is not merely an expression of the vice of the people, but it has itself become the most baleful fountain and cause of evil. Our last State Legislature passed a law licensing gambling houses. A large house fronting on St. Charles street was, on last Wednesday night, filled with men engaged in gambling; the lower floor and apparently the whole house taken up in the same business; a dense crowd of men and youths going in and out, seeking to appease at these sources their deadly thirst for gold. Alas! they go as sheep to the slaughter.

We know of no greater proof of increasing wickedness than this unblushing trade. So long as men are inclined to hide their vicious practices from the gaze of their fellows, they in so far evidence some remaining sense of virtue. But when they are encouraged by the highest authority of the State to overstep all moral restraint, to defy the opinion of the good, to abandon all shame and, in open day, assume the desperate fortunes and character of a gambler, it would seem as if the mouth of hell had been opened by law.

NEW BIBLES.

The Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in this city, 112 Camp street, has just received a fine stock of Bibles, pocket and other—some as low as sixty cents, with flexible bindings.

THE Naturalist mentions the remarkable instinct of an opossum which was overtaken by a freshet, and sought refuge on a post of a fence that projected above the waters. It might easily have swum to land, but evidently knew that the fourteen young which were found in its pouch must have been drowned in the attempt. It was nearly starved when captured.

THE FAT IN THE FIRE.

The telegraph, during the past week, has sent a sharp pain through the myriad breasts of Northern Methodism. Probably there is not a "circuit rider" of all its revolving itinerancy who has not unconsciously slackened or spurred his steed as he read the announcement that General Grant and family walked into the Metropolitan Memorial Methodist church at Washington, but finding no special sitting provided for him, walked out again! "What on earth!" Yes, my friend, you may well say that, and we agree with you.—What on earth were those trustees about! There goes, at one sweep, all the long line of well concerted schemes which might have secured the whole influence and favor of the President! Sic transit! Alas! alas!

This Metropolitan church has been built with exceeding care—a sort of composite of earth and heaven in its style—having the corner stone laid, the windows named, and the board of trustees constituted with an especial eye to one's country, and dedicated to God in the immediate presence of General Grant, Mr. Colfax and the Chief Justice. It was thought to be no mean link between Church and State. Now the President has turned his back on it and walked out! Poor mortals that we are, on what a slender thread—! "But what did the parson do? Didn't he apologize? Didn't he tell the general that it was a mistake, an oversight or something of the kind?" Of course he did. He told the President that he was very sorry for it. But still it did not stop him. He walked out! The parson apologized very handsomely, and in much grief and gentleness of spirit; but the general heeded it not. He made no reply, but the whole concern walked out!

Can our readers fully enter into this agony of religious flunkydom? Toadyism has culminated. Its highest ascent is in the pulpit of the world-renowned Metropolitan Memorial M. E. This grand edifice costs $250,000, collected from all the faithful. It has panels in the pulpit from Gethsemane, pillars in the pulpit of wood from Mount Olivet, a keystone in the arch of the pulpit taken from the foundations of Solomon's Temple—all costly contributions to its magnificent grandeur; yet a flunky in the pulpit will henceforth be the chief ground of its fame.

A later telegram states that the trustees of the church have waited upon the President and assured him that a seat was now all duly fitted up, etc. Well, it may be right enough that in a church of that composite order there should be a seat set apart for the chief magistrate. Every one to his taste. We do not object to that specially; but we do hope, for the sake of Christ and the dignity of the Gospel, if by accident the President's pew door should be locked or the pew filled, and the general should ever again walk out, that the preacher will bow submissively and silently to the inscrutable providence, and not be again guilty of a folly that will take his name and the Metropolitan down to indignant centuries.

New Orleans School of Medicine.

The annual commencement of this school took place at the Lyceum Hall on Tuesday last. It was opened by an overture from "William Tell," by the orchestra of the French Opera House, under the direction of Mr. Carlo Patti. We never heard anything finer in the way of music from an orchestra. It was as far as we were able to go. Everything beyond that, in the way of harmonious sound, is so much lost on us.

The Rev. Dr. Palmer offered the opening prayer. The degree of M. D. was conferred by Dr. Brickell upon the following gentlemen:

In Medicine.—John B. Armstrong, La.; R. W. Burns, Texas; Hiram K. Butler, Miss.; John C. Brown, La.; W. S. Buck, Miss.; G. C. Bordis, La.; E. J. Berjot, La.; J. E. Bain, La.; J. D. Calhoun, La; P. H. Candler, La.; Benjamin Dabney, Miss.; W. A. Davis, La.; A. G. Ervin, Ala.; Alf. S. Gates, La.; Uriah M. Gilder, Texas; F. M. Gullege, Miss.; N. M. Hebert, La.; R. B. Hines, Texas; J. L. Hansford, Texas; A. G. Harper, La.; C. T. Hines, La.; J. E. Morris, La.; E. A. Melon, La.; Robert J. Mainegra, La.; William M. Mayfield, Texas; R. Roberts, La.; T. M. Stone, Texas; G. T. Trezevant, La.; H. L. Tato, Texas; J. S. Tipton, La.; J. H. P. Wise, La.

In Pharmacy.—W. C. Harrison, La.; F. A. Baehler, La.

After the conferring of degrees Dr. Samuel Logan delivered a very long valedictory address to the class. Dr. Alfred S. Gates responded for the graduating class.

Benediction by Rev. Dr. Lewis. The audience on the occasion was a full one.

REPUBLICANS AND THE CABINET

The admiration conceived by the Republicans for General Grant's cabinet No. 1 is not unlike the owl's description of her young ones. The New York Methodist says:—"Whether these secretaries are the men for the work, time only can show; but the principle of selection is a sound one, and gives the country unbounded satisfaction." The Independent takes a running start of a column of biting criticism upon the ex-President, and exclaims:—"Are we actually rid of this 'body of death!'" and says the sudden change from the old executive to the new is so great that, like the Scotch woman in the ditty, he is

"Downright dizzy wi' the thought."

We suspect, however, that this bewildering joy at the official transition expired with the announcement of the new cabinet. Mr. Johnson as "a body of death" serves the artistic purpose of bringing out in better relief a very dull figure; but we doubt if the day is very distant when the "frogs" will pray Jupiter to give them back their log. As a specimen of how to make the best of a bad bargain, the following passage from the Independent is a study:

The cabinet as first drafted struck us with no surprise; for, as Grant himself was never identified with any great principles of politics or reform, we did not expect him to surround himself with a coterie of representative thinkers. Not one of the great heroes of the long warfare against slavery was asked to the council board. Gladstone remembered John Bright, but Grant forgot Charles Sumner. The American cabinet, compared with the English, seems like a country school house by the side of a university. But just as the Republic owes more to modest schools than to learned colleges, so we do not mourn that the cabinet is common-place and second rate, rather than brilliant or profound. We have great faith in ordinary men. It is of such that democracies are always made. It is by such that they must generally be governed. If the Republic cannot be successfully administered by mediocre men, then democratic institutions are a failure. The law of 1789, which makes Mr. A. T. Stewart ineligible, is laudable in purpose, but needs change of terms. For instance, had this law been enforced during the war, no person in the Treasury Department could have aided the government by investing his private means in the seven-thirty bonds; but it was esteemed a patriotic duty by office-holders to invest their salaries in these bonds. Did not Secretaries Chase, Fessenden and McCulloch so invest? No doubt of it. Moreover, if a Secretary of Treasury must not own a ship, why may he own a factory, or mill, or farm? But, though the law stands unchanged, we can prosper without Mr. Stewart's help. Indeed, had he not amassed so great a private fortune, we might more readily believe him competent to be a public financier. Money-making is one thing, statesmanship another. Chatham, the first financier of England, and Hamilton, his great peer in America, never either of them gave an hour's thought during their lives to making themselves rich. Mr. Boutwell, who now seems likely to be Mr. Stewart's successor, has the signal qualification of being as poor as a church mouse. He is as honest a man as walks the earth. The Treasury will be under a grand guardian. The nation's money bags will be safe.

THE College Courant states, as an example of the extreme accuracy of astronomical observations, that the average difference of two sets of observations on the position of a long list of stars, made at Greenwich and Paris, amounted to only .007 of a single second. A recent study of the proper motion of the star 70 Opphinchi proves its distance to be one million two hundred and seventy three thousand times as great as our distance from the sun. It takes light over twenty years to traverse this distance.

BALTIMORE CONFERENCE.

We extract from the Richmond Christian Advocate a few items of the session of this body.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

BALTIMORE, March 6, 1869.

I have only time to send you a hurried letter. On arriving here this morning I found the Baltimore Conference in session, and making fine progress under the presidency of Bishop Wightman. The attendance of ministers, delegates and visitors is very large.

Bishops Early and Doggett are here, and Drs. Green and McFerrin, of Nashville; Dr. Linn, of Louisville; Dr. Cunnyngham, of Holston; Dr. Starke, editor of the Home Monthly; Dr. Moran, of North Carolina; and from Virginia quite a number, including Dr. Duncan, Brethers Rowzie, Cowles, Peterson, Lenney and others. The bishops are looking well, and the members of the Conference particularly so.

The best feeling prevails, and all seem to be in fine spirits in reference to the prospects of our church in this section. The accounts given by the presiding elders are highly gratifying, and evince the determination of the people to sustain church that casts aside politics devotes itself to the work of preaching Christ and him crucified.

The collections for the superannuated were amply sufficient to give a dividend of one hundred per cent. The Conference resolved to forego all claim to their part of the Conference fund unjustly withheld from them by the bogus Baltimore Conference. They have thus surrendered about forty thousand dollars, and the moral force of this act must tell powerfully against those who have refused to divide the money raised by the joint exertions of the two bodies.

The missionary meeting will be held this evening. The speakers announced are Dr. Henderson, of Kentucky; Dr. McFerrin, and Rev. P. A. Peterson. The meeting will take place at Trinity church. In this connection I have learned that Dr. Munsey will retire from the regular pastoral work, and take the missionary secretaryship.

We may now hope that under his powerful appeals the church will be aroused to an effort worthy of her strength and resources in this great field.

I am much gratified to say that the Committee on Education and Literary Institutions have resolved to report to the Conference in favor of raising their proportion of the endowment of Randolph Macon College; and it is hoped we shall be able to get an efficient agent.

The college may look for an increase of students from this section the next summer and fall.

The Fifteenth Amendment not Likely to Pass.

The Northern Christian Advocate says:

The Democratic members of the Indiana Legislature have resigned, thus breaking the quorum and compelling an untimely adjournment of the body. We are greatly mistaken if this act will not meet the public condemnation it so richly deserves. Governor Baker has promptly issued writs for new elections in the vacated districts and will reassemble the Legislature in April. Not a man of the revolutionists should be returned. We think this act is rendered more censurable by the reason assigned for it, viz: to defeat the fifteenth constitutional amendment providing for equal suffrage throughout the country. If we mistake not, the Indiana Democrats have overdone the matter, and insured the adoption of the article.

This gives us an idea of the real sentiment of Northern men upon negro enfranchisement. The Democrats are again out as candidates before the people, with the avowed intention of again resigning if necessary to defeat the amendment.

WE ARE glad to learn that the Chattanooga Railroad Company are showing practical signs of an earnest purpose. One of their contractors, Mr. Bartholomew Collins, has already completed five miles of the roadbed, which is cleared one hundred feet it width, and is ready for the reception of the cross-ties. He has one camp of three hundred men on Mauuel's plantation, about five miles beyond the Pontchartrain Railroad, and another camp of two hundred men at Michoud's plantation, still further on. Such evidences of enterprise are vitalizing and truly encouraging. Every completed mile of railroad and every new facility offered to commerce brings us nearer and nearer to "the good time coming."—New Orleans Times.

THERE is said to be an oak tree in the Holy Land, still living, that was planted by Abraham. It is to be set up at a Russian monastery, in Jerusalem.

THE CHIBOUK'S HALO.

We commend the following passage, taken from the letters of R. A Holland in the Episcopal Methodist, to those super-strict anti-tobacco conferences of Ohio that refuse to ordain any man who smokes out of Palestine. What say you, gentlemen, to one of these Oriental whifs?

A halt, a long breath, a deliberate descent from the saddle, a brief consultation and complacent self-gratulation on the completion of the day's journey, and we followed our horses and mules into the court of a tavern kept by a Russian, and there leaving the quadrupeds, ascended a flight of stairs to the roof. We were welcomed and conducted to our rooms by the proprietor, a clever fellow for such an out-of-the-way position. The rooms opened on the roof. Refreshed by a friendly lounge on bunks considerably inferior in comfortableness spring mattresses or feather-beds, we met in the dinner room, and, with mirthful chat and unfastidious appetite, partook our first Palestinean meal. And then, that smoke after dinner out under the stars—what a solace for sore limbs! what a feast for fancy! I shall never forget it. Needlessly noted in my diary; I cannot to this moment light my pipe without reading by the fitful glow its record printed in italics on a dog-eared leaf of memory's volume.

I have smoked Kilkiekinic, flavored with fig leaves, in the soft summer moonlight of a Georgia plantation; I have smoked genuine Havana, rolled into dainty cigars, while bounding over the phosphorescent billows of the Atlantic; I have smoked Timbak beneath a spangled attic sky in sight of the Acropolis and Hymettus celebrated in song; I have smoked Latakiah on the deck of a Nile boat, while the heavens seemed a vast papyrus written over with the astral hieroglyphics of God; I have smoked Stamboul's favorite weed, seated on the highest rock of Philæ's mythologic isle, as the moonbeams glorified its obelisks, corridors, ruined temples and heaps of rubbish, into an unearthly spectacle, and conjured by their wizard spell the ghost of Osiris from its sepulchre to parade with primeval pomp of priestly procession amid the desolations of Time, that dreadful iconoclast; but, for all the ingredients that lawfully enter into the composition of a truly delicious smoke, properly tuned nerves, healthy circulation, a mind ready like a steed to chase every butterfly that flies, and all the fields of association over which it may flutter, and a fair outer world to give exhilaration to the chase—for all these qualities, pre-eminently dear to recollection is the smoke of glorious Jebeile, on the tavern terrace, in the town of Nicodemus, the Arimathea of Joseph, while the lamps girdling the balcony of the minaret on the other side of the street were shining for Rhamadan's feast; while the Illah el Allah of the muezzin was summoning the faithful to prayer; while the stars were telling their strange stories of creation and redemption, of patriarchs, judges, kings, prophets and apostles—of Christ and his crucifixion, of Jerusalem and its destruction, of the Crusades and their romance; stories more thrillingly eloquent than if spoken by articulate voices or chanted in recitative numbers. There, for the first time, did I feel that I was in the Holy Land—did my spirit-senses awake to commune with the spirit-scenery and spirit-denizens of the country. I took a long walk adown the highway of the past, far back beyond generation after generation, into the forests of obscure antiquity; and as I walked I was accosted by characters of whom I had read, and saw events whose importance cannot be circumscribed by time. I shook hands with Paul; I sat at supper with the Saviour; I listened to David making music for eternity; I applauded the victory of Joshua, at Bethhoron; I leaned over the sleeper of Luz, but such a celestial smile irradiated his face that I dared not disturb him; and I shared the pastoral cheer of Abraham with his angel guests.

I gazed at the stars through wreaths of magic smoke, and they came nearer and nearer, until it seemed I could almost talk to them—until I scarcely know whether I were in the body or out of the body, on the earth below or in heaven above. The smoke ceased to woo the stars; the stars grew cold, and receded, and filmed out of sight; my eyelids grew heavy, my chibouk fell from my unconscious hand, and I started at the noise, rubbed my face, stretched, yawned, picked up my chibouk, and went to bed.

Several years ago Dr. Trumbull, of Santiago, offered through the public prints of Chili to pay $500 whenever the clergy would publish a cheap copy of the Bible, even with the Roman Catholic notes, such as are found in the expensive $12 Bible. This offer has never been accepted.

Sir Alexander Grant, who has lately returned from Bombay, to become principal of the University of Edinburg, said in a late address that, when he looked back at the progress made during the last half century in the intellectual elevation of the natives of India, it seemed extraordinary that so much had been done, and yet comparatively so little.

"The missionary societies had been the pioneers; they had led the way, government had followed with a timidity which was altogether natural and excusable. Government dreaded to take any initiative steps in the education of the people, for fear of exciting a thousand suspicions against themselves. The missionary societies had then stepped forward to the work; they had shown the possibility of educating the people, had shown the people the advantages of education, and ultimately they had shown that the people wished to be educated and could safely be educated. When this condition of things arrived, the government had followed it up and covered the country with schools and inspectors, and gave grants. But in doing that the government still confined itself, as in policy it was perhaps bound to do, to secular instruction; but it must be said that, although called secular instruction, it was imbued with a spirit of Christianity which was already producing marked results in the way of thinking of the natives, and the missionary societies had been left entire liberty to accept in their schools the principles of our holy religion in full purity. But this action on the part of government had been until quite recently entirely confined to boys; but, in the same way in which the

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

A TALK WITH THE BABY.

BY EMILY HUNTINGTON MILLER.

Baby, baby! come sit on my knee,
Nobody's waking but you and me;
Cat and kitten are fast asleep,
But still my wearisome watch I keep;
Rocking the cradle to and fro,
Singing merrily, singing low,
All the rhymes that ever were sung
Since long ago, when the world was young.
Ten o'clock! do you mean to stay
Broad awake till the peep of day?

Baby! now, there is no one near,
Whisper a secret in my ear;
How did you learn the wondrous speech
All our wisdom could never teach!
What is the meaning of all your words,
Soft as the twitter of rustling birds?
Nobody knows what schemes may wait
Hidden away in your nodding pate;
Dear little dreamer, tell me true,
What are you planning to be and do?

Baby, baby! your fingers white,
Reach for the big, round moon at night;
Strive in their eager grasp to hold,
Wandering rays of the sunshine's gold;
When shall we ever make you know
How, in the sun, the blossoms blow?
How the winds run on fairy feet
Over the fields of bending wheat?
How, in the world, so strange and new,
All things beautiful wait for you,
Leading you on, by your clasping hand,
Out of your rosy baby-land?

Baby, baby! the world is wide,
Snares and danger on every side;
What will you do when the mother's love
Cannot shelter her tender dove?
Ah! you are sleeping on my breast,
Nothing troubles your quiet rest;
Safe in the arms that fold you here,
Never a thought have you of fear;
Over us both is One who keeps
Watch while his children wake or sleep.

—Little Corporal.

LITTLE CAPTAIN TROTT.

It has become fashionable to write sketches of the lives of really existing worthies, who are at present acting their parts with more or less success on the stage of this mortal life. Among them all there is none who, as we think, exerts a more perceptible influence, makes more commotion, more confusion, more comfort, more perplexity, more laughing, and more crying than our sprightly, ingenious, omnipresent, ever-acting little friend, Captain Trott.

His title indicates that he is in a position of responsibility and command. Nobody would infer this, from his short body, his dumpy little hands, and his square, padding little feet, his curly head, his ivory fine complexion, and his rather singular modes of treating the English language; yet, should the question be put at this moment by the electric telegraph, to the million families of our land, "Who governs and rules you?" the reply would come back, as with the voice of many waters, "Little Trott." Little Trott has more influence at this hour in these United States than General Grant himself.

In giving a sketch of his personal appearance, we are embarrassed by the remembrance of the overweening admiration he always contrives to excite in the breasts of the feminine part of creation. A million women, we do believe, at this very hour, if we should draw his picture, would be ready to tear our eyes out for the injustice done him. That the picture of our little Trott, forsooth? What is the woman thinking of? She does not know, she never can know, she had no senses to perceive, half how beautiful he is! So say all the mothers; and the grandmothers double say it, and are ready to shoot you if you doubt it; and the aunties and sisters reiterate it; and even the papas—who, as heads of the women and lords of creation, are supposed to take more sensible and impartial views of matters and things—go hook and line, bob and sinker into the general current. The papas are, if anything, even sillier and more beside themselves with admiration than the mammas. Trott is, in their eyes, a miracle of nature. They gaze at him with round eyes of wonder; they are really ashamed of themselves for their inebriate state of admiration, and endeavor to draw over it a veil of reticent gravity; but it leaks out of every cranny, and oozes out of every pore, that the man is, as our negro friends say, "done gone over" in admiration of little Trott. His administration, therefore, is a highly popular one, and we run some risk in instituting anything like a criticism upon it. There is, of course, as in all popular governments, an opposition party, composed principally of older brothers and sisters, crabbed old bachelors, and serious-minded maiden ladies, who feel it their duty, with varying success, to keep up a protest against Trott's proceedings, and to call on his besotted admirers to be on their guard against his wiles, and even go so far as to prophesy that, if not well looked after, he may one day ruin the country. Under these circumstances, it is a delicate matter to deliver our opinion of Trott, but we shall endeavor to do it with impartial justice. We shall speak our honest opinion of his accomplishments, his virtues, and his vices, be the consequences what they may.

And first we think that nobody can refuse to Captain Trott the award of industry and energy.

He is energy itself. He believes in early rising, and, like all others who practice this severe virtue, is of opinion that it is a sin for anybody to sleep after he is awake. Therefore he commences to whistle and crow, and pick open the eyes of papa and mamma with his fat fingers, long before "Aurora crimsons the east," as the poet says. For those hapless sinners who love the dear iniquity of morning naps Trott has no more mercy than a modern reformer, and, like a modern reformer, he makes no exceptions for circumstances. If he is wide awake and refreshed, it makes no difference to him that mamma was up half a dozen times the night before to warm his milk and perform other handmaid offices for his lordship; or that papa was late at his office and did not get asleep till twelve o'clock. Up they must get; laziness is not to be indulged; morning naps are an abomination to his soul; and he wants his breakfast at the quickest conceivable moment, that he may enter on the duty of the day.

This duty may be briefly defined as the process of cultivating the heavenly virtue of patience in the mind of his mother and of the family and the community generally. He commences the serious avocations of the day after a shower of kisses, adorned by fleeting dimples and sparkling glances. While mamma is hastily dressing, he slyly upsets the wash-pitcher on the carpet, and sits a pleased spectator of the instant running and fussing which is the result. If there is a box of charcoal tooth-powder within reach, he now contrives to force that open and scatter its contents over his nightgown and the carpet, thus still further increasing the confusion. If he is scolded, he immediately falls on his mother's neck, and smothers her with sooty kisses. While taking his bath, he insists on sucking the sponge, and splashing the water all over his mother's neat morning wrapper. If this process is stopped, he shows the strength of his lungs in violent protests, which so alarm the poor woman for the character of the family, that she is forced to compromise with him by letting him have a bright pincushion, or her darling gold watch, or some other generally forbidden object, to console him. This, of course, he splashes into the water forthwith, and fights her if she attempts to take it away; for Trott is a genuine Red Republican in the doctrine of his own right to have his own way. Then he follows her up through the day, knowing exactly when and where to put himself in her way, in fulfillment of his important mission of perfecting her in patience. If she be going up stairs with baby in her arms, Trott catches her about the knees, or hangs on to her gown behind, with most persistent affection.

In the kitchen, if she be superintending verdant Erin in the preparation of some mysterious dish, Trott must be there, and Trott must help. With infinite fussing and tiptoe efforts, he pulls over on his head a pan of syrup—and the consequences of this movement all our female friends see without words.

Is there company to dinner, and no dessert, and stupid Biddy utterly unable to compass the difficulties of a boiled custard, then mamma is to the fore, and Trott also. Just at the critical moment—the moment of projection—a loud scream from Trott announces that he has fallen head-first into the rain water butt! The custard is spoiled, but the precious darling Trott is saved, and wiped up, and comes out, fresh and glowing, to proclaim to his delighted admirers that he still lives.

Thus much on Trott's energy and industry; but who shall describe the boundless versatility of his genius? Versatility is Trott's forte. In one single day he will bring to pass a greater variety of operations than are even thought of in Congress—much as they may do there—and he is so persevering and industrious about it!

He has been known, while mamma is busy over some bit of fine work at her sewing machine, to pad into the pantry and contrive machinery for escalading the flour barrel, which has enabled him at last to plump himself fairly into the soft, downy interior, which he can now throw up over his head in chuckling transport, powdering his curls till he looks like a cherub upon a Louis Quatorze china teacup. Taken out, while his mother is looking for fresh clothes in the drawer, he hastens to plunge his head into the washbowl, to clean it. He besets pussy, who runs at the very sight of him. He has often tried to perform surgical operations on her eyes with mamma's scissors; but pussy, having no soul to save, has no interest in being made perfect through suffering, and therefore gives him a wide berth. Nevertheless, Trott sometimes catches her asleep, and once put her head downward into a large stone water jar, before she had really got enough awake to comprehend the situation. Her tail, convulsively waving as a signal of distress, alone called attention to the case, and deprived her of the honor of an obituary notice. But, mind you, had puss died, what mamma and grandma and auntie would not have taken Trott's part against all the pusses in the world? "Poor little fellow! he must do something;" and "After all, the cat wasn't much of a miser; served her right; and wasn't it cunning of him?" And, my dear friend, if Trott some day, when you are snoozing after dinner, should take a fancy to serve you as Jael did Sisera, your fate would scarcely excite any other comment. The "poor dear little fellow" would still be the hero of the house, and you the sinner, who had no business to put yourself in his way. This last sentence was interpolated here by my crabbed bachelor uncle, Mr. Herod Killchild, who cannot, of course, be considered as dispassionate authority. In fact, an open fend rages between Uncle Herod and Trott; and he only holds his position in the family circle, because the women folks are quick-witted enough to perceive that, after all, he is in his heart as silly about Trott as any of them. He has more than once been detected watching the little captain's antics over the top of his newspaper, and slyly snickering to himself as he followed his operations, while at the same moment his mouth was ostensibly full of cursing and bitterness. Once, when Trott was very, very sick indeed, Uncle Herod lost his rest nights—he declared it was only indigestion; his eyes watered—he declared that it was only a severe cold. But all these symptoms marvelously disappeared when Trott, as his manner is, suddenly got well and came out good as new and tenfold more busy and noisy than ever. Then Uncle Herod remarked dryly that "he had hoped to be rid of that torment," and mamma laughed. Who minds Uncle Herod? We have spoken of Trott's industry, energy and versatility; we must speak also of his perseverance.

This is undeniably a great virtue, as all my readers who have ever written in old-fashioned copy books will remember. Trott's persistence and determination to carry his points and have his own way are traits that must excite the respect of the beholder.

When he has a point to carry, it must be a wise mamma, and a still wiser papa, that can withstand him, for his ways and wiles are past finding out. He tries all means and measures—kissing, cajoling, coaxing; and, these proving ineffectual, storming, crying, threatening, fighting fate with both of his chubby fists, and squaring off at the powers that be with a valor worthy of a soldier.

There are the best hopes of the little captain, if he keeps up equal courage and vigor, some future day, when he shall lead the armies of the Republic.

If, however, Trott is routed, as sometimes occurs, it is to be said to his credit that he displays great magnanimity. He will come up and kiss and be friends, after a severe skirmish with papa, and own himself beaten in the handsomest manner.

But, like a true, cunning politician, when beaten, he does not give up. There is many a reserved wile under his mat of curls yet, and he still meditates some future victory; and, sooth to say, after a running fire of some weeks, Trott often carries his point, and establishes his right to take certain household liberties, in spite of the protest of the whole family republic.

"Well, what can you do with him? we can't be fighting him always," are the usual terms which announce the surrender.

And did not our Congress do about the same thing with President Johnson? The fact is, when you've got a chief magistrate, you can't fight him all the time, and Trott is the chief magistrate of the family state.

The opposition party in the government, consisting always of people who never had or are like to have Trotts of their own to take care of, are always largely blaming those who submit to him. They insist upon it that minute rules should be made, and Trott made to understand what is meant by the reign of law.

Law? We would like to see the code that could compass and forbid Trott's unheard-of inventions. He always surprises you by doing just the thing you never could have conceived of, and through it all his intentions are so excellent! He sees mamma rubbing her head with hair oil, and forthwith dips his hand in a varnish-pot and rubs his own mat of curls. He sees Biddy squeeze bluing into the rinsing-water, and, watching his opportunity, throws the bluing bag into the soup kettle. You have oil paints put away in a deep recess in the closet. Of course he goes straight to them, squeezes all the tubes together, and makes a pigment with which he anoints his face and hands, and the carpet, giving an entirely new view of a work of art. "Who would have thought, now, that he could have?" etc., is the usual refrain after these occurrences.

The maxim that "silence is golden" does not apply to Trott. Much as his noise may make mamma's head ache, it is nothing to the fearful apprehensions excited by his silence. If Trott is still ten minutes, or even five, look out for a catastrophe. He may be tasting bug poison, or clawing the canary bird out of the cage, or practicing writing on papa's last Art Union, or eating a whole box of pills, or picking mamma's calla bud, or, taken with a sudden fit of household usefulness, be washing the front of the bureau drawer with a ten dollar bill which he has picked out of it!

Sleep is usually considered a gracious state for Trott, but he has too intense a sense of his responsibility to lose much time in this way, especially if mamma is to have company to dinner, or has any very perplexing and trying bit of household work to do. Under these circumstances Trott never can sleep. He is intensely interested; he cannot let her go a moment.

There have been as many books written as there are stars in the skies concerning the vexed question of Trott's government, and concerning the constitutional limits of his rights and those of the older and bigger world.

And still that subject seems to be involved in mystery. Some few points only are clear—Trott must not be allowed to make a bonfire of the paternal mansion, or stick the scissors in his mother's eyes, or cut his own throat with his father's razor. Short of this "the constitutional limits," as we say, are very undefined. And if you undertake to restrict him much, you will have all the fathers and mothers in the land on your back, who with one voice insist that, though Trott may have his faults, like all things human, yet he is a jolly little fellow, and they prefer, on the whole, to let him do just about as he does do, and don't want any advice on that subject.

Of course, his administration bears hard on the minority, and it is sometimes a question whether anybody else in the house has any rights which Trott is bound to respect. So much the worse for the minority. We should like to know what they are going to do about it?

There is one comfort in this view of the subject. All the wonderful men of the world have been Trotts in their day; have badgered and tormented their mammas till they trained them up into a meetness for heaven, and then have come, in their turn, to be governed by other Trotts—for in this kingdom the king never dies, or, rather, to put it in a modern form, in this republic there is always a president.

Well, after all, our hearts are very soft toward the little deluding captain. The very thought that the house might some day be without his mischief and merriment, and the patter of his little stubbed feet, causes us a hard lump in our throats at once. No noise of misrule and merriment, however deafening, where Trott reigns triumphant, can be so dreadful as the silence in the house where he once has been, but is to be no more.

> "The mother in the sunshine sits
> Beside the cottage wall,
> And, slowly, slowly as she knits,
> Her quiet tears down fall.
> Her little hindering thing is gone,
> And undisturbed she may knit on."

When we think of those short little mounds in Greenwood and Mount Auburn, we go in for patient submission to Trott with all his faults, rather than the dismalness of being without him. His bold is on our heart-strings, and reign over us he must.

We are reminded, too, how, years and years ago, the Dearest, Wisest and Greatest that ever lived on earth took little Trott on his knee, and said, "Whosoever shall receive one of such children, in my name, receiveth me;" "for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Trott was doubtless as full of motion and mischief in those days as in these; but the divine eyes saw through it all, into that great mystery making little Trott the father of whatever is great and good in the future.—Atlantic Monthly.

At the second meeting of the Methodist pastors and laymen of New York, held February 16, in behalf of the movement to raise half a million of dollars for the evangelization of the city, $20,000 were subscribed in addition to the $100,000 subscribed at the previous meeting. A committee was appointed to make a permanent organization.

Not a bad wish was that of the little Quaker boy, about six years old, who, after the congregation had for a long time sat in silence, stood on his seat, and, folding his arms together, said: "I wish the Lord would make us all gooder, and gooder, and gooder, till there is no bad left."

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their Reputation is not of Mushroom growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better Draft, and will Draw well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE OF THE CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of Filley's Hot Air Flue to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every Charter Oak guaranteed, or the money refunded.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of.....$10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of.....15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of.....20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of.....25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, one English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments.

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

DARBY'S

PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

Letter from Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia:

CRAWFORDSVILLE, GA., Sept. 29, 1868.

Darby's Prophylactic Fluid is an article of little cost, but great value. Its domestic as well as medicinal uses are numerous, while its specialities are most wonderful. I have not been without it for ten years, and no head of a family who can afford to have it should be without it.

ALEX. H. STEPHENS.

The Wonderful Family Medicine.

Letter from the Surgeon General of the late Confederate States:

RICHMOND, VA., Jan. 14, 1869.

JOHN DARBY & Co., No. 160 William St., N. Y.—Gentlemen: I have received your letter of the 15th of December, 1866, calling my attention to your (Darby's Prophylactic) Fluid.

I most cheerfully state that the Fluid was furnished to and extensively used by the Surgeons in charge of General Hospitals in the Confederate service, with great benefit to the patients, all the surgeons making a favorable report. A great deal of it was used in the hospitals.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAM'L PRESTON MOORE, M. D.,

The Astonishing Disinfectant.

EMORY COLLEGE, OXFORD, GA., December 28, 1868.

PROF. DARBY—Dear Sir: Having not been engaged for many years in the active duties of the medical profession, I am only superficially acquainted with the claims of your Prophylactic Fluid, but am well acquainted with its chemical elements.

While, therefore, I cannot speak experimentally of the value of the compound, yet the disinfecting and Therapeutic properties, of the agents employed in its composition, together with the well known reputation of its discoverer as a chemist, authorize me to regard its merits as of a high order. On the whole, it must be considered as a valuable contribution to the class of articles to which it belongs.

These views, I may add, are sustained by the testimony of many competent judges who have tested its properties.

Believe me, dear sir, your's respectfully,

A. MEANS, M. D., LL. D.

Cures Burns, Wounds, Stings, Etc.

ALABAMA INSANE HOSPITAL, Tuscaloosa, December 22, 1868.

MESSRS. JOHN DARBY & Co., 160 William St., N. Y.—Gentlemen: I received your circulars of the 10th instant, asking an expression of opinion from me as to the merits of your Prophylactic Fluid. The preparation has been so generally used by the profession and public at large, and so universally esteemed, that it seems to me to need no further recommendation.

As a disinfectant, and remedial agent too, when indicated, it is not excelled by any similar preparation. We use permanganic preparations very extensively in this Hospital, and could not do without them. I consider yours the best and most elegant preparation of the kind manufactured.

Respectfully yours, etc.,

P. BRYCE, M. D.,

Supt. and Phys'n Ala. Insane Hospital.

A Perfect Pain Killer.

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE, Staunton, Va., Jan. 9, 1869.

PROF. DARBY: When I was President of the Lagrange Female College, of Georgia, I used your Prophylactic Fluid in the College with decided success. Both as a disinfectant and as a remedy for sores and burns, etc., it was efficacious and proved to be what it is represented. Every family and public institution ought to have it. I wish you great success in the sale of it.

WM. A. HARRIS, D. D.,

Pres. W. F. College, Staunton, Va.

Never was there a family medicine so highly recommended as this. Try it and you will never regret it.

Let every country merchant visiting New York this spring put this article on his list. But don't wait. Order it at once.

And so we might fill this entire paper with recommendations from the very best men in the country.

THE THIRTY-FIRST ANNUAL Session of the

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE,

MACON, GEORGIA,

Begins on OCTOBER 5, 1868, under the direction of the following

FACULTY.

Rev J M Bonnell, D D, President.
Rev G W Smith, A M, Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy.
Rev W C Bass, A M, Professor of Natural Science.
C Schwartz, A M, Professor of Latin and Modern Languages.
Mrs A R Leak, Assistant in Literary Department.
Carl Hintz, Musical Director, (with ample assistance.)
Mrs E T Crowe, Teacher of Drawing and Painting.

CHARGES—There are three terms in the scholastic year. For each term the charges, which are to be paid at the beginning of the term, are as follows:

Regular tuition, $30. Board including washing, fuel and lights, $75. Incidental fee charged to day scholars, $1.

The following are optional: French, $15; Instrumental Music, $25; use of instrument, $3; Vocal Music in class, $2—not charged to those who take Instrumental Music; Drawing, $15; Painting, $20.

Pupils who take French may be excused from Latin without affecting their graduation.

Special advantages provided in the departments of French, Music and Painting. For further information address the President.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION. — TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $360. PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

HOMES IN BRITISH HONDURAS.

FREE FROM TAXATION.

THE PUTNAM IMMIGRATION ASSOCIATION (Limited) of Belize, British Honduras, has been founded, under the laws of that Colony, with a Capital Stock of $500,000, coin, in five thousand shares of $100 each.

The Association has purchased of the Colonial Government an area of about 500 square miles of territory, comprising some of the choicest Sugar, Tobacco, Corn, Rice and Cattle lands in the Colony.

The Association will sell to each family that will locate upon and occupy the land between this and the 12th of July next, 160 acres at 50 cents per acre, payable in Five Years from date of settlement, without interest. The Association will donate to every Parent and Child of each family, who may be living on the land at the end of the second year from date of settlement, one Share of the Association's Stock, the value of which will be greater than the price paid for the land.

An adult male member of each family who will locate, put up a cabin, and clear enough land to provision his family, will be recognized as a bona fide settler.

These lands will produce from three to five hogsheads of Sugar per acre, without cultivation. Sugar boiling can be carried on during eight months of the year. Two crops of Tobacco, Corn, Rice, Plantains and many kinds of vegetables can be made in a year. The country is healthy, and white men can work to better advantage in the warm months than in the Southern States. These facts are demonstrated by the experience of 350 Southerners now settled in the Colony.

No family should go that has not means sufficient for its support for twelve months after locating on the land.

The steamship Mexico will leave New Orleans for Belize on the 20th of February; the steamship Trade Wind on the 24th of February, and make the trip in five or six days. First class passage, $40, greenbacks; second class, $25. The Trade Wind makes a monthly trip.

Communications should be addressed to the undersigned, care of B. L. MANN & Co., No. 83 Magazine street, New Orleans.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Ainham.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing, it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Benners.

For further information apply for circular to

SIGN OF THE BIG TEA POT.

I would respectfully announce to my friends and the public generally, both in the city and country, that after an association of over twenty years, under the name and style of Austin & Goodwyn, formerly corner of Customhouse and Front Levee, I have permanently located as above, and shall continue my old business of

MANUFACTURING TINWARE,

in all its branches, as heretofore, and in addition will endeavor to keep at all times a full and complete stock of the best, as well as the latest and most approved

COOKING STOVES.

The names of a few will suffice to give an idea of the great variety constantly kept on hand:

The Charter Oak,	The Good Samaritan,
The Revenue,	The Torchlight,
The American,	The Brilliant,
The Magnolia,	The Fashion,
The True Kentuckian,	The Farmer,
The Maid of Orleans,	The Southern States,
The Mutual Friend,	The Sunny South,

and many others, too numerous to mention, all of which will be sold at

for cash or approved city paper.

Being over grateful for the liberal patronage bestowed and confidence reposed in me during my former copartnership, I would most earnestly solicit a continuance of the same, and shall pledge myself to do my utmost to maintain the reputation of the old house.

Remember the Big Tea Pot,

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE, Staunton, Virginia.

The next session begins on the 21st day of SEPTEMBER, 1868, and closes on the 24th of June, 1869.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with a Faculty of twelve professors, teachers and matrons.

This is a Female College of the first rank; one of the most flourishing in the South; young ladies here from nearly all sections of Virginia and various Southern States. Method of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Health and comfort of pupils unsurpassed. Those from the Gulf States, especially, have greatly improved in health. No social disquietude. The population of this great Valley is nearly all white. This institution is an educational home for the daughters of the South.

Charges for the entire scholastic year, board and tuition, in collegiate course, embracing

Ancient Languages	$215 00
Music	50 00
French or one Modern Language	20 00

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

INTERVIEW OF CIVILIZED INDIANS WITH THE PRESIDENT.

We copy as follows from a dispatch dated Washington, March 15:

This afternoon a delegation of representative men of the Cherokee, Choctaw, Creek and Chickasaw Indians had an interview with the President. Over twenty persons were present, including Colonel Downing, chief; Judge Field and Colonel Adair, of the Cherokees; Governor Wright, of the Choctaws; Calbert Carter, chief of the Chickasaws; George W. Steadman, of the Creeks, and other prominent representatives of these tribes. Upon being introduced to the President, Governor Wright stated, in behalf of the civilized tribes of Indians, that they appeared before him to pay their respects and extend their congratulations to him. The administration, he said, was looked on with confidence, and they were highly gratified with the President's declaration in his inaugural that he would do whatever was for the best interest of the Indian tribes. The speaker, in behalf of the representation, presented to the President a memorial, stating substantially that agreements in treaty stipulations, to use their influence in behalf of the Plains Indians, and informed the President of their desire to accomplish a lasting peace between the government and the Indians, which they feel confident of accomplishing if upheld by the government in their efforts.

The President replied he was glad to be informed that they would aid the policy for peace between the whites and Indians, and would be glad of any measure which would accomplish that peace and tend to their civilization, or make them citizens of the government. He felt that the march of civilization would conduce to the civilization of the tribes now hostile to the government. Governor Wright thought if the Indians were brought to the borders of a civilized nation and settled there, the influences of civilization and Christianity would effect much good, and stop the shedding of blood, and, as the President suggested, ultimately make citizens of them. The delegates are fine, intelligent looking men. The interview was of a very pleasant character.

DEBATE ON THE BILL FOR THE DISESTABLISHMENT OF THE IRISH CHURCH.

We copy as follows from a London dispatch of the 18th:

In the House of Commons to-day the bill for the disestablishment of the Irish Church came up for its second reading. Disraeli addressed the House. He commenced by declaring, in the words of the right honorable gentleman who introduced the bill, that this question was one of the most gigantic which had ever been brought before the House, and its consideration demanded much self-control and mutual forbearance.

He proceeded to argue that the connection between the Church and the State was a necessary one. The former rendered the State religious, investing its authority with the highest authority. This scheme was likely to destroy religious freedom and toleration; it was a complete violation of the rights of private property, corporate and private property being intimately connected. All acts of spoliation were dangerous; hitherto they had been followed by civil war or something worse.

The former confiscation had only enriched the land owners. The strength of Ireland was in her connection with England. The majority of the Irish people were discontented. The settlement of the church question would be insufficient to quiet their discontent. The land question required settlement.

The details of this scheme were complicated and delusive. The present engagements of the government with the holders of vested interests ought to be paid as regularly and promptly as dividends. These engagements were compromised. There could be no security against further spoliation. It was directly opposed to the preamble of the bill.

Mr. Disraeli deprecated the action of the House of the present government as in antagonism to the former policy of the Whig party, whose aim was civil and religious freedom. In conclusion, he expressed the belief that the bill was most dangerous to the country, but he felt that he could depend upon the prudence and patriotism of Parliament. He then moved the bill be read a second time six months from to-day.

William H. Grogory, member for Galway, followed in reply. He taunted the last speaker with his inconsistency, and compared the speech he had just made with his former declarations that the Irish Church was a monstrous grievance to Ireland. Mr. Gregory, however, did not unreservedly support the bill. He thought an equitable division of the church property among the three religious parties preferable to the present scheme of distribution.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—The civil tenure bill, with modifications agreed upon in caucus this morning, was presented in the Senate to-day, and after a lengthy debate, was passed by a vote of 37 to 16. Seven Radicals refused to vote with the majority—Messrs. Fessenden, Fowler, Grimes, McDonald, Ross, Sprague and Warner. Mr. Cole refused to vote. The bill now goes to the House.

Mr. Lemms, envoy from the insurgents in Cuba, has arrived here, but no steps have been taken to present him to the State Department. Secretary Fish, in anticipation of the presentation of Mr. Lemms, called the President's attention to the fact, and it is understood he will not be received at present.

The government is informed that the revolution is not as formidable as supposed; also that the Spanish government is constantly sending troops and munitions of war with the determination to put down the rebellion.—New Orleans Times.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—Eighty-two miles will complete the Pacific railroad.

House.—The Senate caucus agreed to suspend the tenure of office law for four years.

It is reported that Grant accepts this solution, but the repealers are stubborn. The result is doubtful.

Omnibus bills, removing disabilities constructed on a partizan basis, will not pass. The opposition is thoroughly organized.

The dead lock will continue till some general amnesty bill is adopted.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—Evening. House.—Paine introduced a bill punishing civil or military officers having the power but failing to enforce the fourteenth amendment, with fine and imprisonment.

Butler reported the Mississippi bill. Beck moved to amend by giving the President power to appoint the provisional governor. Farnsworth gave notice that he would move to postpone till next session. Beck addressed the House in opposition to the bill, when the House adjourned, on motion of the Democrats, by a small majority. This is regarded as an unfavorable indication for the ultimate success of the bill.

Senate.—The Committee on Foreign Relations reported a bill ratifying the treaty of July 4, 1868, with Mexico, for the adjustment of claims.

The tenure of office amendment passed to the following effect: The President may suspend during recess and appoint another to perform the duties, reporting such suspension within thirty days after the next meeting of Congress and nominating a successor. If the Senate refuses to confirm the nomination, and also by vote disapproves of the suspension, the suspended officer, at the end of the session, shall resume his office. The President need give no reason for the suspension.

FURTHER PARTICULARS OF THE RUTH DISASTER.—We copy as follows from the Vicksburg Times of the 17th:

The officers, passengers and crew of the ill-fated Ruth arrived in the city by the steamers Calumet and Plain City, very early yesterday morning. The Ruth was scuttled and sunk as soon as possible after the fire obtained headway, and some portion of her cargo will be saved, though in so damaged a condition as to be almost valueless. None scarcely of the baggage was saved. Many of the passengers were coming South on pleasure excursions, and had valuable wardrobes, the entire baggage being variously estimated as worth from $75,000 to $100,000. One lady had jewelry lost to the value of $5,000. There were also on board and lost one hundred and thirty head of mules and other stock. The amount of insurance Captain Pegram was not able to give us, as she was insured by the company in St. Louis. A part of her freight list was eleven kegs of powder, which Captain Pegram had brought from the hold and thrown overboard; but for which presence of mind the damage and loss of life must have been terrible. Passengers and crew were loud in their praise of Captain Shumm Parisot, of the Calumet, and his officers, for their exceeding kindness, they refusing all remuneration for the services rendered, and providing as far as was in the boat's power for all the wants of the sufferers. Captain Pegram, also, on behalf of the passengers and crew, desires to return thanks to Colonel E. F. Ra worth, the efficient general superintendent of the Vicksburg and Meridian railroad, for securing a liberal reduction of the regular fare to St. Louis for a large number of people who wished to return home. A part of the passengers continued on to New Orleans by the steamers Dexter and Belle Lee, though the major part of them returned to St. Louis. She had about one hundred and twenty cabin passengers—a large number of whom were ladies—and near one hundred and twenty-five deckers, and not a life is known to have been lost. Protest was entered here before Esquire John B. Raymond. The Ruth came out in 1865, instead of 1864, as we published yesterday. The crew were paid off here yesterday, and passengers only charged fare to this port, the balance being refunded them.

THE STATE FAIR.

The Crescent says: Preparations are going on briskly for the Third Grand State Fair of the Mechanics' and Agricultural Association, to commence at the Fair Grounds on the 6th prox; and Mr. Homes, the secretary, with his assistants, are kept busily employed daily in issuing tickets to exhibitors. There is every promise that the coming occasion will be characterized by an eclat greater than that which has attended either of its predecessors, for the interest it excites among all branches of manufacturers, inventors, stock raisers, mechanics and agriculturists is apparent in the entries already made. The exhibitor, upon making his entry at the secretary's office, receives a ticket showing the department, class and article entered. This, when the article shall have been left by the exhibitor at the Fair Grounds, is attached to it, the owner receiving in return therefor a duplicate which he retains as a receipt for his property. Goods will be received on and after the 1st prox.

There is already great demand for the lease of the various booths and stands to be occupied as bar rooms, eating saloons, or soda and cake stands.

The following circular has been generally distributed about the city:

NEW ORLEANS, March 20, 1869.

In order to prevent confusion and to facilitate the business of the coming fair, the directors would earnestly urge all persons who intend to become exhibitors to immediately make their entries at the office of the association, in Mechanics' Institute.

It is the duty of all of our citizens, engaged in trade, mechanics or manufactures, to contribute to the success of this important State enterprise. The best way of accomplishing this object is to become exhibitors.

All sections of our country will be represented at this fair, through art, invention or industry; and it will not do for the citizens of New Orleans to fail in their duty in this matter.

Then let this little notice remind each good citizen of his duty and his interest, and thus determine him to practically aid the third grand State fair.

By order of the board.

I. N. MARKS, President.
L. HOMES, Secretary.

THE Karens are a wild people, formerly severely oppressed by the Burmans, and driven in consequence to secluded and remote places, off the rivers and lines of travel. They have no large towns, and originally had no books, no written language. But they had a most precious tradition, which prevented them from embracing the idolatrous practices of their Burman masters, and made their hearts very accessible to the Gospel when first presented to them by the white foreigner. By that tradition they were led to look forward to a time when white men from the west would bring to them books, and religion, and deliverance. Accordingly, during the first years of missionary effort among them, thousands became hopefully converted, and embraced the new religion with great joy. Since that time their language has been reduced to writing, the whole Bible has been translated, thousands of the young have been partially educated, and a training school for candidates for the ministry has been established.

GOOD LIVING.

The following interesting article is from the National Intelligencer:

It is a maxim in Paris, that one who invents a new dish deserves a title. It comes from the idea that both health and pleasure are consulted in ministering to the taste. Where is the use of the palate if it were not intended, in the economy of nature, that it should be utilized in a rational enjoyment of what is delicious, rather than what was denominated by one of old as "common and unclean?" The divine command, however, is authority against the specialty in folly of vegetarians, etc.

It is sometimes said in disparagement of good livers that they "live to eat;" while men who make famous mark day by day, in professional or business life, "eat to live." The phrases are more nearly convertible than they would first seem. Good, rich and nourishing food is now recognized as the best of restoratives for persons who are exhausted by labor—intellectual merely, or physical, or both combined—or by care of ill-health. Scientific theory has it, that the "bread, beef and beer" of John Bull has given him that average of superior physical power over people of other nations that is an established fact under a multitude of tests. Wellington always counted upon it in respect not only to required service in an entire campaign, but in hand to hand encounters. At the battle of Waterloo he spoke admiringly of the handling of the bayonet by the British for a short moment at a certain point of the great fight.

The day is gone past when men can felicitate themselves with the idea that it is a merit to pack their stomachs in haste, as they would a trunk, "with almost anything." A low habit of living, without healthful stimulative food or drink, as beer, light wines, tea and coffee, accompanied by protracted and intense labor of mind and body, the one or the other, or both, is the congenial state of preparation for diseases in the form of malignant humors, of low and putrid fevers, of coughs and colds, of premature rheumatic affections, etc. On the other hand, the man of labor, who lives generously besides having the temporary enjoyment of good eating, has length of days and comparative excellent health.

The habitual fox hunting gentlemen of England, who are so often all the day in the saddle, are distinguished for great longevity.—Those of mere leisure, who in the end suffer from gout, live long to have it. A physician of this city recently congratulated a friend on the shady side of life, who had had his first attack of gout, saying that it was a sign of long life. A distinguished medical authority of London was mentioned, who had written at treatise in which he asserted that the increasing mortality was caused by a low habit of life, and that the forefathers of the present generation arrived at great age from high living, though in the end gout might have ensued.

The golden mean is the true rule. If a man deprives himself all through life of what taste covets to a rational extent, it is a life of penance. Hunger is the best sauce, as appetite is what tests the quantity that is needed for the nourishment of the system.

Intense brain labor calls for much food to strengthen the vital functions. It is said, upon highest authority, that three or four hours of such work more exhausts the system of what chemically is part and parcel of it, and of nerve power, than more than double that number of hours of routine hand work, which makes little call upon mental faculties.

If it be said that laborers are obliged to live on very plain food, which they, of course, eat with a relish, accompanying it invariably with light wines, or beer, drunk as our laboring classes drink tea and coffee, which are decided stimulants (tea in strong form of preparation being so to a large extent, as well as very nourishing,) still it cannot be said that such classes are long-lived.

That "digestion may wait on appetite," there must be rest after eating. Hence the rule, universally among laborers now-a-days, to have an hour at dinner. Hence, also, convivialists sit long after dining. Nature dictates it. The blood tends from the extremities to the stomach after eating, because that is the organ which is performing required labor. Scientific investigations have shown in the cases of dissected animals that great activity after eating almost, if not quite, stops digestion. "Quick eat, quick work," is a vulgar and mercenary maxim. Conversation spices table enjoyment, whether at a lofty or humble board. There the family or friends are gathered, and good nature and feeling should invariably prevail.

The class of citizens who in all things live handsomely, that are able to do so, are good members of society. It should be remembered that what are termed luxuries, as used by the rich, in the multitudinous forms that are in themselves a wonder and a study to the thoughtful, give employment and support to artisans and laborers without number, some of whom, by superior skill and more persistent application, outstrip the rest, and come to consideration in the higher ranks of society.

Japan.—A Native Account of the Progress of Christianity.

The following translation of an account of the progress of the Roman Catholic and Protestant religions in Japan was made at the British embassy in that country from an official memorial presented to the government by the Japanese clergy:

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC RELIGION.—A Roman Catholic chapel has been erected by Frenchmen at Oura, in Nagasaki, and some five or six priests have come and taken up their residence there. They employ some twenty native men of letters, paying them one hundred to two hundred rios per annum, and, equipping them either as merchants or pilgrims, send them to the following places in Hizen, viz: Hirado, Shimabarra, Fukabori, Amakusa, and other places, where they make converts either by giving money to the poor, by performing miracles to those who love wonders, or by appealing to the passions of people (getting a number of men and women together secretly at midnight for purposes of enjoyment,) so that immediately some one hundred or two hundred people are converted, who no longer obey the Lord of the Soil, and even go so far as to disregard all the social amenities of mankind. A fearful state of things indeed.

A certain spy once going to the village of Urakami, and concealing himself under the veranda of a house, heard a priest of the false religion expounding as follows: "Those that become of my faith, and believe in what I preach, will ascend to heaven and enjoy everlasting happiness. The followers of Buddhism and Sintooism will be cast into hell, and be in everlasting misery. If one of a family embrace my faith, by his good work alone all will ascend to heaven." After this, in the midst of a ray of glorious light, a magnificent lofty palace appeared, and lovely beings were seen in sweet communion together. Consequently, the wish to die and go to these heavenly places has taken hold on the hearts of men to such an extent that they fear no punishment. Note.—In another part I will note down many other of the wonderful things.

THE PROTESTANT RELIGION.—At Oura, in the same place, (Nagasaki,) Americans and English have erected a Protestant church, and five or six priests have come, who lay themselves out to deceive the wise and illustrious men of our glorious country. The professors of this Protestant religion live for the most part in native houses, and outwardly appear to teach astronomy, geography, artillery, medicine, etc., but really are all the time desirous of instilling the poison of the false religion. On comparing the two religions, the Protestant is by far the worst. It sounds all very well at first hearing, but you find at length that it holds the same fox as the other, and does much more mischief. The mode of speaking adopted by its professors is as follows: The Protestant religion that I advocate does not profess to work miracles, but sets forth the observance of the five human relations as constituting the happiness of the empire. Now look at these books, and he converts by showing them such books with high-sounding titles, as "Shin ri ichi," "Go rin satsu yo," "Go jo satsu yo," tells them to throw over their false gods, and in the matter of disrespect to master and parent, differs in no way from the principles of the Roman Catholic faith—for all these reasons dire in its effects upon the country.

Shoshiso, a Chinaman, writing to a friend of mine, says: "I have gradually become intimate with the retainers of different Damios resident in Nagasaki. One and the other have told me that they had come to Nagasaki at the orders of their respective chief to pursue foreign studies. As a rule foreigners live by bloodshed. Astronomy, geography, weapons of war, and nicknacks afford pleasure to the ear and to the eye, but in all their books there is not one that does not sound the praise of God and Christ; and those that read those books, unless they read them in all singleness of purpose and with one object, will unconsciously come to entertain a respect for these doctrines. My fear is, that in two or three years the Roman Catholic and Protestant faith will be established throughout Japan."

These remarks are only too true. If it comes to this, the people will thus be made the enemies of their own country by foreigners. On men will not be led away by these false and corrupt doctrines, and that they will, by every principle of honor, restrain others, and use every endeavor to keep the country as firm as a rock in its established faith.

THE Parisians display great ingenuity in showing their political opinions without unpleasant consequences to themselves. On a recent occasion one of the "Conferences," now so much the fashion, was held at the Theatre de l'Ambigu-Comique, on "The Phenomena of Light," a subject one would have thought about as unpolitical as could well have been chosen. The lecturer, in order to demonstrate certain theories, proceeded to enlarge some photographs of celebrated persons. This being done by means of a strong magnesium light, all the theater, except in the immediate neighborhood of the operator, was in almost total darkness. The audience could be heard, not seen. The portrait of the emperor was received with a storm of hisses and cries of "A la porte!" "Vive la Republique!" "Il s'en ira bientot!" etc. That of the empress met with a worse reception, if possible, than her husband's. On the other hand, the portrait of Maximilian was received with cheers and cries of "Qui l'a trahi?" Maximilian, as a bystander remarked, probably owed his popularity to the fact of his having been shot. The operator, like a prudent man, soon brought his experiments to an end, and when the gas was turned on, the "agents" were very busy looking about, but of course every one looked intensely loyal.

AT THE coronation of the Queen of Madagascar, on the 3d of September, a small table was placed by her majesty's side, upon which was placed a very handsomely-bound Malagasy Bible and a copy of the laws of Madagascar. The roof of the canopy under which the coronation took place had inscribed on the four different sides the following words: "Glory to God; Peace on earth; Good will to men; May God be with us." The sentence in the royal speech in which her majesty alluded to Christianity was as follows: "And as to the praying, it is not compulsory, nor is there any hindrance, for God made you." The number of people present is computed at from three hundred thousand to five hundred thousand.

THE subjoined is an exact copy of a written card suspended in the shop window of a tradesman in Warrington, England. One can conceive the amount of provocation undergone and the indignation felt by the honest purveyor of mousetraps before he penned the document: "Notice I don't keep twelve holo mouse trap nor penny ones what i keep I sell to respectable people not to impudent Boys Hand Bad Girls that comes to robbed me and annoy me and has Bad parents those that comes into my shop shall be severely beat and put into the cellar and took before the magistrates those that comes into a shop and ask for article that is not made they must come to stoal."

A GENTLEMAN was reasoning with a whisky drinker, and told him of a toper who died a while ago from internal combustion. "How did it happen?" asked the drinker. "In trying to blow out a candle, the flame caught his breath, and he burned up," was the reply. "Well, now," said the Bourbon lover, "here upon my oath I pledge myself never to blow out a candle as long as I live!"

IT IS said that all the gold in the world employed for coin, plate, jewelry, etc., if put in a single cubical block, would be twenty-six feet square and weigh ten thousand five hundred tons. Its commercial value would be $6,000,000,000.

THE PASTOR SWEEPING HIS CHURCH.

DEDICATED TO THE MEMBERS.

BY REV. WM. S. TURNER.

MR. EDITOR: In one of my former charges I had a church that needed sweeping, and I made an effort to have it swept, but with no success. So I swept it myself. I worked hard for two and a half hours. While my hands were thus employed my mind indulged in the following thoughts.

Go with a borrow'd broom;
Throw wide the door; walk in;
Survey the consecrated room;
Off with thy coat—begin!
Look at the trash and dust
In pulpit, altar, pews!
All this remove; thou surely must
Thy broom with power use!

Sweep, sweep! But sweep alone!
Thy flock will let thee sweep!
Besides the shepherd there are none
The sacred house to keep!
But joy to thee! Thou art
Like one who toiled alone,
While no one came to take a part,
As we in Sacred Writ are shown.

Sweep, sweep! The sacred place
Where thou shalt stand, sit, kneel,
With earnest, solemn, beaming face,
To pray, to sing, and to reveal
Must first of all be clean.
Then sweep thy pulpit, clean the place;
There let no dust be seen.

Sweep, sweep! The altar next
Should clean be swept.
There ought to be no just pretext
By which some souls are kept
From bowing there to eat and drink
The Supper of the Lord;
Or other souls, who on the brink
Of death cannot afford

To come in fine array
And kneel down in the dust
To weep, repent, to mourn and pray,
And in their Saviour trust.
Then sweep the altar-place
And make it pure and clean.
O! leave behind thee there no trace
Of dust—let none be seen.

Move all the seats and sweep
The Amen corners next;
For clean you must those corners keep,
Else some will have pretext
To sit far back with men
And women who would be
As far from those who say "amen"
As can conveniently!

Sweep, sweep! Sweep all the room,
And let the pews be clean,
So that the souls who thither come—
The good and all the mean—
May bow before their God,
And worship with the throng
Who dread not the destructive rod,
But praise in prayer and song.

Well hast thou done! The place
Is clean for all thy sheep;
The Lord will look with smiling face
On all who come and seek
To have thee sweep them clean
With that great Gospel broom
Which drives all dust, so none is seen
Within their temple home.

Come one, come all! For here
Are places, clean and nice,
Where ye may lend attentive ear
To him who sweeps out vice.
As he has swept the dust
And trash beyond his door,
So would he sweep pride, envy, lust,
All sin forevermore!

AN IMPROPRIETY.

MR. EDITOR: Letter writing seems to be a sort of epidemic now-a-days. Long years ago, before steam had bridged over the Atlantic, when our friends went to Europe or extended their researches into Asia, we expected letters from them. We were curious to learn their impressions of Constantinople, how they were affected by the first sight of the Pyramids, and what were their estimates of London and Paris. These were remote places, and an air of antiquity rested upon them. Our curiosity was never sated by what we read of them. But can the numerous letter writers of the present day plead the curiosity of friends at home, or the venerableness of the subject, as their apology for the communications with which the columns of some of our newspapers are filled? A man goes from Mobile to New Orleans, or from Vicksburg to Memphis, and he writes to his friend, the editor of some journal, detailing all the incidents of this excursion, the name of the boat, the hour of leaving the wharf, the character of captain and crew, and the time of arrival at the destined port. He even carries his diary still further, and tells the reader where and how he was received at the end of this important journey.

Bishops and superintendents, the greater lights of this moral firmament, have told us of their perils in journeyings, of perils from the heathen, of perils among false brethren. Eager to emulate, the lesser lights "take up the wondrous tale" of their journeyings, without peril and without adventure. They announce to the reading public "that they reached the hospitable mansion of Mr. A. at such a time, that the writer was cordially received, that the entertainment was of the most excellent sort, the coffee for breakfast was delicious, and the muffins and omelet were unexceptionable, and the repast was presided over by the charming or accomplished lady of Mr. A.," or else "that the shades of evening found us approaching the residence of Dr. B. We gladly turned aside to this home where the 'weary itinerant' has so often found rest," etc.

We, Mr. Editor, have great respect for itinerants, as a class; but we shall be heartily glad when this weary itinerant is really put to rest, and the stock phrase, as Seio" in the sophomoric declamations of school boys, shall cease to be used on any such occasions.

All this may be very easy writing to the authors of these same lucubrations, but it is very laborious reading. And the question will recur: Cui bono?

There is another aspect of this matter, also, which is more serious and of more importance in its effects than the waste of labor in writing or the waste of time in reading these articles, to which I wish to call your attention, and on which I request your opinion, for the benefit of mankind in general.

A stranger or traveler, in passing through the country on business or pleasure, or seeking for health, is received into the family of a private citizen. He extends the hospitalities of a gentleman to his guest. The stranger departs, and perhaps a few days or weeks after this very ordinary event the host finds himself in the newspaper. His courtesy is extolled, the comforts of his home expatiated upon, the skillful taste of the hostess becomes subject for a paragraph, and the public are duly enlightened on all that concerns the domestic life of this household. However amiable may be the intentions of the writer of so imprudent a communication as this, the act itself is a breach of hospitality—false in taste and false in morals. The sacred privacy of every man's home should be respected. The symbolical rose, which rested over the doors of the banqueting halls among the Romans, is still supposed to rest above the door of every home into which a guest is invited. No man has a right to draw out of that domestic seclusion any inmates of that home. We leave, or we should leave, the notoriety of the newspaper to those men who already belong to the public—to the Wades and Sumners and Greeleys, to the H. W. Beechers and the Kingsleys of the forum and the pulpit.

The New York Herald was, I think, the first paper in the United States which ever indulged in this habit of bringing private individuals before the world, under their initials or by their full names. We should have supposed that "the bad eminence" to which that journal has attained would have prevented any writer or writers from following where the Herald led. But whether Bennett has admirers or no, in this respect, unfortunately, he has had many imitators.

Very respectfully, yours,

A LETTER WRITER.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Times describes the Mikado of Japan as a youth of sixteen, with a sensual and vacant countenance, a hard head and false eye brows, painted half way up the forehead. Ten years ago he was considered a god, and his existence doubted by the skeptical Japanese; now he appears in public, and is to be the real ruler of the people.

POST OAK.—THE OTHER SIDE.

MR. EDITOR: We are glad to inform you that more than two have discovered the other side of "Post Oak." And as one of the fortunate, I do pity, from the bottom of my heart, the good brother who lives on "this side." If it will do him any good to hear from us, I will gladly tell him of the good land which we have discovered. Here the preacher has a home which compares well with the best in town—being neat, cheerful and inviting. We are supported, and the support comes at the right time—the beginning of the year. For instance, this is our third year here, and two days after the preacher's return from Conference, the stewards held a meeting, went into facts and figures, and made out a bill of supplies for the year. This embraced from corn, flour, meat, etc., to soda, pepper, spice, nutmegs, etc. One brother said he would put the corn into the crib, and the clever firm of ——, learning that a bill of supplies was to be furnished, agreed to fill and deliver it at Mobile prices. This was agreed to by the stewards, and the next day—here they came, and were all properly stowed away. Since then, Mr. Editor, we have had nothing to do but to work and live, and live and work.

But I would not have you think that these good people stopped with supplying what is absolutely necessary to keep soul and body together. The parsonage is at one time surprised with a nice summer suit for the preacher, at another with a fine winter suit, at another with all sorts of notions for the wife and children, at another with an album quilt, large enough to cover the whole family, at another with a fine milch cow, and at another with a fine buggy just from the shop. And besides all this, the kindness of the physician and good sisters in sickness—of which we have had a great deal—is incalculable. True, we get into tight places sometimes; but as good Brother Fisher once remarked, we have never been driven so close to the wall but what we found a way to get out. It is well that we should know how "to be abased," as well as "how to abound," so that in whatever state we are we may therewith be content, and also know how to sympathize with our brother from "Post Oak." Perhaps the reader will conclude that the writer has never been tried on a hard work. Well, may be not; but if it should ever be her lot, she should not regard it as a misfortune, but as in the providence of God, and hence go on her way rejoicing, hoping for better times.

AN ITINERANT'S WIFE.

MARCH 11, 1869.

EIGHTEEN THINGS IN WHICH YOUNG PERSONS RENDER THEMSELVES VERY IMPOLITE.—Reading when others are talking. Cutting finger nails in company. Leaving meeting before it is closed. Whispering in meeting. Gazing at strangers. Leaving a stranger without a seat. Want of reverence for a superior. Reading aloud in company without being asked. Receiving a present without some manifestation of gratitude. Making yourself the topic of conversation. Laughing at the mistakes of others. Joking others in company. Correcting older persons than yourself, especially parents. Commencing to eat as soon as you sit down to the table. Commencing to talk before others are through. Answering questions when put to others. And not listening to what one is saying.

TRINITY CHURCH, New York, has an income of $800,000 per annum. It can afford to spend $40,000 to enlarge the chancel of St. John's chapel to accommodate the clergy, who wish a larger field of display. They now propose to spend $400,000 on the enlargement of Trinity church, at the head of Wall street.

THE Episcopalian ministers of Philadelphia have sent to Bishop Coxe a communication thanking him for his pastoral letter rebuking immodest dances and entertainments, and the "blood-guiltiness of antenatal infanticide."

To the Ministers and Members of the Church in the Mobile Conference.

At the last session of our Conference the following resolution was adopted by that body:

Resolved, That this Conference hereby appoint Friday, the 30th of April, 1869, as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer before God, by the church within its limits, that he may be pleased more thoroughly to qualify his ministers, by the supply of his Spirit and grace, for their holy work; that his blessings may rest upon their labors in the Gospel; that he may build up his people in their most holy faith, and that he may extend and establish the kingdom of his Son with us.

That we may be of one heart and mind in the services of the day thus designated for fasting, humiliation and prayer, it may be well to note that there are set before us, as objects for which we should especially pray, the ministry and the church.

That our prayers may not be mere lip service and without effect, it is necessary that our hearts should have proper appreciation of the good for which we pray. To ask in complaisance to the sentiment and forms of the church will not avail; but, "what things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that receive them, and ye shall have them," is, and forever will be, true. Now, if we were called to pray for deliverance from a mighty foe, coming to rob and ruin, or consuming famine, or blighting pestilence, the objects of our supplications coming on the lower plane of natural life, and awakening and arousing natural sympathies, it would not be so difficult to secure the participation of a larger number of the multitude in the service. But adequately to conceive of and estimate the excellency of the office, true character and services of the Christian ministry, and the high nature of its successful results, is not so easy, because they coming to light fully only in the sublimer sphere of our spiritual being, are "spiritually discovered." And no marvel: "The world knoweth us not, because it knew Him not."

It is well that the Conference, in its consciousness of human weakness and the necessity of divine qualification in their character, as well as the blessings of the divine agency in their work, in order to the accomplishment of the true and glorious end of their ministry, should turn, as it does, and reverently request the solemn prayers of the church in behalf of its ministers.

It will be observed that the resolution asks our prayers for a more thorough qualification, by the Spirit and grace of God, of ministers for their holy work. These blessings being present at one period in the history of an individual or church, are not thereby secured in perpetuity, but may be lost, and leave those who were once girded with divine strength in all the weakness of humanity. They have need to be continually replenished with the divine blessing. To be thoroughly prepared for his work the minister must rise into the highest grade of Christian life. His services are not merely functional, but vital.—He must not only understand the Gospel, but experience the Gospel; not only preach the Gospel, but be the Gospel realized, so that he may speak that he does know, and testify that which he has seen, that which he has heard, which he has looked upon and his hands have handled of the word of life. For want of this elevated Christian life the minister's course is often irregular, retarded and diverted here and there by obstructions and varying influences. He does not feel the burden of the Lord upon him, and that his life is not dear unto him, so he may finish his course with joy and ministry, which he has received of the Lord Jesus to testify the Gospel of the grace of God.

The want of this higher life shuts out the minister from much of the rich treasure of the Gospel, and so deprives the people largely of the graces held forth therein for the securing of their holiness and happiness. Who is he that has never, in his ministry, felt himself restrained from certain blessed regions of Gospel truth and grace because of his deficiency in that experience necessary to set forth and enforce what is therein revealed? That he may preach the whole Gospel, and the church enter into all her promised blessings, let them pray that he may be an entire Christian. For want of this life there is lack of authority in his ministry. In the presence of the wicked he is covered, and shrinks back at the challenge of the evil spirit to the sons of Sceva; but with intimate communion with God, and his commission clear, he may feel the authority of his ministry sustained by the weight of the eternal throne.

Add to this the refining and strengthening of the minister's soul in the grace of the Christian life, and works in him largely toward a preparation for the supervision of the discipline of the church, where there is great need of wisdom, that he may "take forth the precious from the vile," and of gentleness and firmness, that in the great variety of character and complications of persons and circumstances he may not bruise by rashness, nor by slackness allow the church to go to dissolution.

As we have said, this call to prayer may not engage the great multitude. The immediate fruits of the successful Gospel ministry are not such as the busy, materialized world will readily appreciate. Its dividends are not in gold. It is true, in times like these, amid the disorder caused by the overthrow of traditional institutions, the subversion of constitutions, the shock of civilization and general prevalence of corruption, the true philanthropist and enlightened civilian will anxiously look to the Gospel as a restraint against the overflowing of iniquity, and as the ark which may safely carry over the deluge of ruin the seed of a new life, and now especially joyfully welcome it as a conservative power in the history of man. But in its precious influences, in the calm light it sheds about our hearthstones, in its inspiration of the sweet harmonies of our homes, in the guiding and guarding of our youth, in the bestowment of the calm peace that pervades the heart in its quiet submission to the sceptre of infinite love, in the patience and content it gives amid the tribulations and trials of life, in its consolations and triumphs in death, and, in all and through all, the good hope it gives of joys unmixed to come, its true nature is known by all who are "taught of God."

In the common routine of religious life, and in the excitements and agitations of a busy and hurrying age, let us together pause and on this day inquire whether our ministers have not been at all affected by the abounding iniquity of the times, whether the life of the church is not weakened in its very springs; and let the ministers call themselves to a solemn reckoning, whether there has not been a wasting from their souls of the anointing and grace of God, and a waning of the glory of their ministry. Let us not be concerned about a professional dignity, but read again our vows of ordination, scrutinize our past history, examine ourselves, and in humiliation of true confession of our sins, implore forgiveness of past delinquencies and grace for the future. The same services that will prove beneficial to the ministry will also deepen the interest of the church in them, and prepare them to receive good from their services, and make them their fellow-laborers. From all of which let us hope soon to see the vineyard of the Lord budding toward an abundant fruitage.

I would respectfully suggest that brethren make arrangements, at an early day, by the engagement of local preachers, to have service in as many churches as possible. On this district we are considering and arranging in quarterly conferences for the observance of the day.

JAS. L. COTTEN.

MARION, ALA., March 3, 1869.

KRUMMACHER, the celebrated Evangelical divine, died lately at Potsdam, near Berlin.

Destruction of a Mexican City by a Flood.

We have already announced the destruction of Alamos, Sonora, by a flood. The following particulars by an eye-witness will be read with interest:

The agony we have all gone through with, within the past few days, is impossible to describe. Probably you will have heard ere this that the city of Alamos is in ruins; but as you may not have heard all the particulars, I will give you what I know. On the 15th of December it commenced to rain, and on the 16th a genuine wind and rain storm set in, lasting until the 18th. It seemed as if the very flood gates of heaven had opened, and that a second deluge was upon the world. The wind, too, roared with dreadful fury, and all the elements seemed combined for some dreadful carnage. We little saw what was in store for our beautiful city. But soon the tale was told, and the destruction complete. The storm lasted until late on the evening of the 18th. During its continuance it appeared as if no human being was to live within its reach. The Alabama river was swollen to a great height, and in its wild, headlong course, carried everything before it. Houses were swept away like so many straws, and whole blocks of buildings were thrown down like so many rotten trees. The wind was no less terrible than the water. Houses were unroofed and blown to shatters; tiles and like material were scattered through the air like chaff; and strong trees were uprooted as if they had been corn stalks. The best part of the city is totally destroyed. About the only buildings saved worthy of mention are the mint, the church, and the old State College. These stood on high grounds, and this advantage, with their solidity, saved them. Dr. Hill, an American resident, had three houses carried away, and is a loser to the amount of about $10,000. T. Robinson Burns, an American doing a banking business here, had his banking house swept away. Others have suffered severely. The loss of life had been quite large. Sixty dead bodies had been picked up; some of them were mangled fearfully, and could scarcely be recognized. Many of the bodies were found miles down the river. Undoubtedly the number found will be largely increased by other unfortunate ones. I have written these few lines hurriedly, but do not attempt to describe or explain the most extraordinary phenomena of a severe two hours' whirlwind and deluge. The ruined city of Alamos was the Athens of northwestern Mexico, or, at least, had that reputation. Its women were reported to be the loveliest and most intelligent throughout the republic, and its citizens were highly spoken of as contrasted with those of other populations. There was a great deal of wealth, refinement and luxury among the classes; it was a sort of sanctified Jerusalem, where the proud Spanish blood and brain held ascendancy, and would not be poisoned with contact with Indian and negro mixtures. Alamos, as a city, had fame before the great metropolis of New York was known. It is old among the many old towns of Mexico. Surrounding it have been some of the richest mines in the world, and from which the city had its chief support. At the time of its destruction it contained a population of about seven thousand souls, though geographical dictionaries place the number at ten thousand, which is at least three thousand too many. Unhappily for its people, the number is lessened through a terrible misfortune, and the "City of Poplar Groves" has fallen to the dust (even as man falls) in its strength.—San Francisco Bulletin.

ACCORDING to Schem's Ecclesiastical Almanac, there are in the United States ten Methodist bodies, with 13,594 traveling ministers and 2,363,969 members. There are ten Presbyterian bodies, with 7,053 ministers and 704,773 members. The several Baptist denominations have 13,507 ministers and 1,864,006 members. The Congregationalists have 3,070 ministers and 296,674 members; Episcopalians, 2,736 ministers and 194,692 communicants; Lutherans, 1,792 ministers and 350,088 communicants; German Reformed, 505 ministers and 115,483 members; the United Brethren, 868 traveling preachers and 108,122 members. The Reformed Protestants have 469 preachers; the Moravians, 66; Universalists, 588; Unitarians, 383; Swedenborgians, 64.

THE rejection of the Alabama claims treaty by our government proves very displeasing to the British mind, judging from the nature of the remarks in the English journals, as telegraphed from London. But the Times very prudently thinks it best to wait for new propositions from the administration of President Grant before saying more.

IN AN OLD CHURCH.

Through the chancel, quaint and olden,
Streamed the evening sunlight golden,
Firing purple pulpit-stair,
And the aged preacher there.

Sweet the solemn anthem soared,
Note on note, and word on word,
Ringing through the long defiles
Of the dim and ancient aisles.

And upon its calm surcease,
All the air, with hallowed peace,
Seemed to gather force, and sway
Through the temple, either way.

And the preacher's tones at length
Rolled in circuit, gathering strength,
Swelled around the lofty nave,
Like a sea-hymn in a cave.

Echoing from the walls around,
Psalm and prayer; with sweet rebound—
Psalm and prayer, and lesson given,
Passed, or seemed to pass, to heaven.

MY MOTHER.

BY MARY S. WALL.—NO. II.

While my uncle and all the other eligible men were off in the army—I think at Pensacola—the old men and the women determined to have a camp meeting, near Jackson, Louisiana, which purpose they carried through, with great profit and pleasure to themselves and the community around.

It was at this meeting that William Winans and Martha Dubose first met, I think. This was in 1814. In September, 1815, they were married, and Martha Dubose became one of that phalanx of unappreciated martyrs who are called "traveling preachers' wives." In her lot she stood firm; in her day she did her duty well. My father loved home, and nothing but a stern sense of duty ever took him away from it; yet in the course of his duty it was often the case that he was absent four weeks at a time. My mother carried on the farm, with the help of an overseer. She always had some orphan girl, some young Methodist woman, to stay with her and keep her company. Mamma was always at work. She saw to the raising of the stock, the poultry, and to the garden; she spun, knit and sewed. Of course she had trials and troubles from servants who were indulged, and whose master was absent about forty weeks out of the year. Yet some of them were good workers, and all were attached to the family. Mamma was industrious and a good manager, and almost always contrived to set a comfortable meal for the numerous guests who frequented the house. Beggars used to come and stay all night. So did clock peddlers, tin peddlers, and travelers of various kinds. Then, of course, the preachers always stopped with us as they passed. People used to come to see papa about cases of conscience; and there was a circle of literary men who used to have communication, somehow, with each other, though facilities for meeting were not so good as they are now. Educated men were scarcer then than they are at present, yet they were more united than in these days. When papa was absent on the circuit or station mamma always held family prayers. Mamma would read from the Bible, and generally we all would sing, and mamma or Uncle Winter would lead in prayer. Mamma had a fine voice for singing.—When papa was at home, and his literary friends would come to see him, after supper the table was cleared quickly, and the conversation would run on philosophy, grammar, history or theology. Sometimes politics was discussed. It was as good as a school. Sometimes the "tune books" were taken down, and papa, mamma, and the visitors would join in singing some sweet hymn of Zion, or some grand anthem.

I remember Father Tabor led a "singing society," to which belonged a good many married persons, among them papa and mamma.—They used to sing "Denmark" and "Easter Anthem." I remember papa sang what was then called "counter," and mamma the "soprano"—but it was called something else then. Why do the Methodists neglect singing these days? May be they do not neglect it in cities, but it is neglected in country places. It did not used to be so. Singing schools and singing societies were common with the Presbyterians, the Baptists and the Methodists. Among the literary friends of my father and mother was one young Tennessean, Judge Hill, who lived in Louisiana. He used to come to see papa and to enjoy those conversations around the table and fireside, which took the place of the magazines and papers with which intelligent men amuse themselves in these days. Judge Hill soon got hold of the confidence of the people of Louisiana, and was made a judge. He died young. I think, if I had time, I could write a book, for now I remember several anecdotes about Judge Hill, that I must not stop to tell for want of time. He came into my mind when I called up those delightful reunions, where pleasant and profitable converse and noble songs were the order of the hour.

My mother was a Methodist, faithfully attached to the usages of the church of her choice, yet world-wide in her Christian charity and love. I have heard her say that when she found "peace in believing" she did not feel like making any noise, but she felt like singing:

"Arise, my soul, arise!
Shake off thy guilty fears."

From her conversion to her death she was an humble, conscientious Christian—one who lived for others rather than for self. As a wife she was affectionate and dutiful, with the highest opinion of her husband's abilities as a man and a minister.

As a mother she was almost an idolater. She loved her only son the best; but I never thought hard of that. It was natural. Yet as a patriot she gave that son to her country.

My mother died during the war, just before the battle of Shiloh. I thanked God, for her, that she was taken from such times and such trials. Owing to the unsettled state of things, there was not even a brief obituary dedicated to Mrs. Winans. I know that thousands who knew her will say she deserved more than a mere mention.

Though she was a quiet woman, my first remembrance of my mother is seeing a little brother die in her arms, and her first burst of grief when hope was gone. I was three years and three months old then. I can see it now—the event that has happened to nearly every mother since Eve's day—the sharp sorrow, the letting go of our hold on life, the amazement of sorrow that follows the first moment after the stroke of bereavement falls. The next I remember is being at camp meeting. Then I am taking an evening walk with my young and pretty mamma, holding on to her hand; the level rays of the setting sun are shining over the orchard and pasture as we walk on toward the barn, and talk about "papa, who had gone to preach the Gospel to sinners." I do not write it because she was my mother; but she was the most sympathizing, kind-hearted, self-sacrificing person whom I ever knew. She had a great deal of Martha's carefulness, though, like Mary, she loved to sit at Jesus' feet. For the last thirty years of her life my mother was a great sufferer. Yet she did more for the poor, the church, and her family than many a well woman. Her quarterage, her missionary money and her subscription to the ADVOCATE were always promptly paid.

As a friend she was unchangingly true. Mrs. Winans had many true friends. Her nearest and dearest friend, outside of her own family, was Mrs. Annie L. Clinton. It was a strange coincidence that, without any knowledge that mamma was worse, the last evening of her life Mr. and Mrs. Clinton drove up about dusk, and we had them with us. Mamma could not talk, but knew them. When I got to her she was dying, and could not articulate, but put out her thin hand and smoothed my cheek, as if her world-weary woman-child was to her but her own "little Mary," and tried to say, "Have you heard from your brother and the boys?" Ah, what a night was that! On the dying bed lay a mother whose son might, for all we knew, be exposed to the shock of battle, and round her bed three mothers in like state.

Mrs. Winans died March 22, 1862. When I saw her in the coffin I felt like saying: "Thank God! she has found her rest." Her heart can ache no more, her feeble body can never suffer again." In those days we felt that it was some comfort to see our dead in a nice coffin, and to have them buried by kind neighbors and friends.

This feeble tribute of mine is addressed to the relatives and particular friends of my mother. They can fill out the meager outlines that I have given of her.

Peace to the ashes of the friend, the mother, the minister's wife! Farewell to my mother!

CALIFORNIA CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. EDITOR: As it is utterly impossible to answer privately the numerous requests made of me before leaving Louisiana, I desire, through the columns of your excellent paper, to make such statements in relation to the climate, health, products, fertility of the soil, general improvements, commercial advantages, society and educational interests of this State as will satisfy their wishes as to general outlines, though I should fail in special detail of facts.

The country is exceedingly broken; and to one from the Gulf States it appears much more so than to those who have become accustomed to it, or to those who have had their eyes familiarized with the Cumberland and Alleghany mountains. There are but two general features—hills or mountains and valleys. The hills would be considered mountains in Louisiana, and almost anywhere else except here. They embrace almost, if not quite, as much territory as the valleys, thereby limiting the agricultural interests of the State to one-half of its surface. The valleys are usually from five to sixty miles in length, and from one to fifteen in width, except on the larger rivers, where they are much wider and longer. Both of these usually run parallel with the Pacific coast, and also with each other. The country is picturesque beyond description. The sublime and beautiful are happily blended together. The mountains, under the illusion of sight, seem to toss their lofty heads against the distant sky. The canyons, the gentle and more abrupt slopes, adorned with groves and sylvan shades, the irregular lines, half circles and acute angles described by the mountains, contrasted with the valleys below, destitute of vegetable life, or dotted and skirted with spreading live oaks, fruitful orchards and comfortable farm houses, surpass the most elevated and glowing description. I have been in the valleys of Petaluma, Sonoma, Napa, Luisan, and on the Sacramento plains. Of all these I think Sonoma the most beautiful. It fills my idea of an earthly paradise. But Santa Clara and Los Angelos counties are said, by those who know, to excell all others for beauty.

For agricultural purposes the mountains are worthless. Energetic and wealthy men, however, graze their stock on them, and with care they realize a handsome income by supplying the constant demands of the market. The larger streams overflow. The signs of the last one of the Sacramento have not entirely disappeared. The information I have in relation to others has been obtained from brethren and friends. On the Bay of San Francisco thousands of acres are either inundated by the tides, or so materially injured that they are classed with swamp lands.

The fertility of the soil does not equal that of the Mississippi valley, though it is frequently considered superior. The average crops of small grain will not exceed twenty-eight bushels per acre. The yield is much greater in certain localities than this. Where climate and soil are happily blended it is immense, amounting sometimes to one hundred bushels. But this is the exception and not the rule. The great quantity of grain gathered is not owing, so much, to the fertility of the soil as the great quantity sown. All the valleys I have seen look like large fields cut into smaller ones by fences. Wheat, oats, rye and barley grow in all parts of the State, but not as thriftily as in certain localities; for it is sometimes the case that wheat will grow well where oats will not, and so vice versa. By sowing down the land so constantly it has lost much of its vitality; so that the same lands which, a few years ago, remunerated the farmer with such wonderful crops now yield about two-thirds, and not unfrequently less, than what they did formerly. Corn is grown in very few places; barley is substituted for it.

In the valleys there is a great scarcity of building and fencing material. In San Joaquin valley, in many places south of San Francisco, and on the Sacramento plains there is none. In traveling from Solano county to the city of Sacramento I saw thousands of acres in cultivation without fences to protect them. Where timber is so exceedingly scarce the farmers, from the heavy expense, have dispensed with them. A law of the Legislature requires the citizens of San Joaquin to herd their stock on their own premises; this obviates the necessity of fencing. Fir and redwood are mostly used. These grow on the mountains in great quantities, and, if wisely distributed, would furnish every locality with a bountiful supply. It is transported from five to one hundred miles at a very heavy cost, the expense varying according to distance and difficulties of transportation. If posts and rails are furnished at a distance of ten miles they will cost $6 per hundred; this is an average of six cents apiece. A fence once up, with some little repairs, will last a lifetime. Lumber at the mills is worth from $13 to $15 per thousand feet; then add to this the expense of transportation, and it comes at a very high rate.

Prices for land range from $3 to $200, according to locality and quality. Those which rate at $10 and $15 barely repay the purchaser for the investment, while the cheap ones do not. In the southern part of the State they are much cheaper than in the middle and northern portions. Large grants, formerly held by individuals and companies, are now offered for sale, which opens a fine opportunity for purchasing homes and speculation. Southern people, coming here the overland route, would do well to enter that part of the State first, as they will be more likely to suit themselves there than anywhere else.

The modes of agriculture embrace all the late improvements of the Northern States. Grain is sown and cut with machinery. The greatest curiosity is the header. Instead of being drawn by horses it runs in front of them, the tongue being behind instead of before. This machine is so constructed as to run the heads into a wagon, which is drawn by the side of it. If the season is favorable one man can sow and reap one hundred to three hundred acres. This marvel in agriculture is easily explained. Grain sown any time between the first of October and the middle of February will mature against harvest time. From four to ten acres are plowed per day with gang plows. At this rate a single person in four months and a half can prepare what would seem to people back in the States an incredible amount of soil for the grain. The reapers cut ordinarily twenty acres per day; a short time only is required to take off the crop it took several weeks to sow. Both horse and steam power are employed to prepare the grain for market; the former thrashes out eight hundred bushels per day, while the latter thrashes out fifteen hundred. With all these facilities a man may, if he owns a medium-sized farm, live with half the labor required in the older States.

Land rent, provisions, cattle, horses, mules, farming implements and clothing must be paid for at higher rates in gold and silver than at greenback value in the South. Let me say in the conclusion of this long letter that I do not think your people would do well to sell their property at low rates, come out here and give the exorbitant prices which will be demanded of them. Without money or credit it is as difficult to get a foothold in the "land of gold" as anywhere.

J. P. SCRUGGS.

HEALDSBURG, CAL., Feb. 10, 1869.

Baltimore Conference of the M. E. Church South.

The session has been marked by that unremitting devotion to business which has always characterized the Old Baltimore Conference. There have been no speeches made for effect. "Buncomb" is not a discount in the body. After the usual kindly greetings the members of the several committees entered immediately upon the work assigned them. With the admirable plans devised by our secretary and his assistants, for the systematic dispatch of business, together with a scrupulous observance of the law of kindness, everything passed off with the utmost good feeling and without the slightest irritation. Bishop Wightman is a capital parliamentarian, gentleman in the episcopal chair as when we first knew him in "the rank and file," a quarter of a century ago. His opening address to the Conference, and his soul-stirring exhortations to the large class of young preachers, have made a deep impression, and, we trust, will remain with us all, in inefaceable memories. The bishop's sermon on Sabbath morning, at Trinity church, was remarkable for its utility and adaptation, but above all, for its evangelical doctrine and power.

Bishop Early is in better health than when present at our Conference a year ago. He preached at Holland street on Sunday morning, and presided at the Board of Foreign Missions three nights successively until a late hour. Now at the advanced age of fourscore years, by the singular mercy of God, he is an exception to the irreversible decree as recorded in the 90th Psalm. His "strength is not labor and sorrow." The old soldier is not impatient to stack his arms until the Master shall say, "Go thou thy way till the end be, for thou shalt rest and stand in thy lot at the end of the days."

Bishop Doggett, who presided at the last Baltimore Conference, and who has several times since then visited our city and other places within our Conference territory, was also in attendance. We were glad to find him in excellent health after his long and laborious tour in the Indian Territory and Texas. Bishop Doggett preached at Central church on Sunday morning, and by special request of the pastor, Rev. Dr. Leyburn, preached in the Associate Reformed church at night.

Bishop Wightman ordained eleven deacons and nine elders. The ordination of elders, after an appropriate sermon from Dr. T. E. Bond, took place at Central church. It was a day of extraordinary interest in Baltimore. The number of pulpits occupied by our ministers outside of our own denomination exceeded those of any former session. The congregations were very large, and unusual interest everywhere manifested, both at our own and sister churches.

The presence of so many distinguished strangers was an interesting feature of the session of our Conference. We noticed, among others, the veteran missionary, Rev. John Harrell, who thirty-seven years ago labored as a pioneer on the Southwestern frontier, and for twenty-five years as a missionary in the Indian Territory among the Chocktaws, Creeks and other tribes. More than five hundred natives made a profession of faith in Christ during the past year, and united with the Southern Methodist Church. This fact is very suggestive. By the most unwearied efforts and apostolical zeal of Bishop Marvin, the sum of $5,000 was raised, and this was the sum total of the means employed during the year for the Indian Mission Conference. It was well said by that sage of Southern Methodism, Dr. A. L. P. Green, the government required $500,000 to kill one Indian, but the Missionary Society only required $5,000 to save five hundred natives! The interests of the missionary work received much attention, and this great enterprise has been thoroughly reorganized. Dr. A. L. P. Green, with his accustomed sagacity and untiring industry, applied himself to this department of the church with a will. His annual visit among us is hailed with undissembled pleasure. His friend and compeer, Dr. McFerrin, who is doing the work of a modern evangelist as secretary of our domestic missions, rendered most efficient aid in the pulpit and on the platform. Dr. Munsey entered upon his work by preaching a sermon and taking up the missionary collection at Trinity church on Sunday night. It was a noble beginning, and may be regarded as the prelude and the pledge of a glorious future. The amount contributed was over $800.

This was followed by the memorable Sunday school missionary meeting which was held in the same church on Monday evening. A more extended notice of the children's meeting will hereafter be given. Up to the hour of going to press, our young friends have reported the sum of $500.

Rev. Dr. Duncan, president of Randolph Macon College, made an able address on the claims of that institution. The college is now identified with the Baltimore Conference, and will command the attention and should receive the patronage of our people in Maryland and Virginia. The doctor preached at Bond street and Bethany chapel, besides addressing the Sunday school missionary meeting at Trinity church.

Rev. H. A. M. Henderson, of Kentucky, Rev. P. A. Peterson, of Virginia, and others, made addresses at the anniversary of the Conference Missionary Society.—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

OF THE $75,000 which it costs for the land, building and furniture of the Bethel Mission connected with $20,000 was raised by subscription, $6,250 by a fair, and the remaining $18,750 from the surplus of pew rents in Plymouth church. The Sunday school settees are so curved in the middle that the scholars sit on both sides of the teacher's chair. The lessons used are those of the National Sunday School Teacher.—Sunday evening lectures are given on moral and religious subjects, and on scientific topics so far as they bear on religion. During the week popular entertainments are provided at a very low price. The free reading room for mechanics contains the best papers, and does not exclude a Catholic, a Spiritualist, and the best sporting paper. The free reading room for boys had one thousand six hundred and four attendants in a single week; and the checker and chess boards were well patronized.

A good flying machine is now the greatest mechanical want of the times. Theoretically it is perfectly practicable; but practically it has thus far proved impracticable, from the fact that the necessary machinery adds so much to already excessive weights which must be raised. Artificial wings stout enough to lift a man cannot be made of materials as light and as strong as the quill of the goose. Even in nature we find that large, heavy birds, like the goose or condor, find difficulty in rising, and seem to have reached about the limit of weight which allows of flight by muscular effort. An entirely different method seems necessary. The English Aeronautical Society, as we learn from the Scientific American, seems to have advanced one step toward the desired result, in the construction of an engine of one-horse power, which with its boiler, without water or fuel, weighed only thirteen pounds!

M. MOUCHAT, who has been experimenting on the utilization of the solar heat, states that, according to his experiments, upward of one-half of the solar heat might be gathered at a small cost. At Paris a surface of eleven square feet, normally exposed to the rays of the sun, receives, on an average, at any time of the year, on a fine day, heat enough to make 2.1 pints of water at freezing point boil in ten minutes, and is equivalent to the theoretical action of a one-horse power. He further states that he had proved the possibility of keeping hot air machines going by means of solar rays, and had succeeded in making a few quarts of water boil by exposure to the same agent; and in June, 1866, he had made a small steam engine work by converting water into vapor with the assistance of a reflector one yard square.

EVERY ONE knows that the disease known as trichiniasis is produced by eating diseased pork, but it is not so generally known that the tape worm has a similar origin. It is always introduced into the system by eating meat, generally pork, which is diseased. If "measly pork," not thoroughly cooked, especially in sausages, be taken into the stomach, the immature forms of the tape worm in the pork will develop in the intestines. Sausages should never be eaten unless cooked so as to be crisp, if even then. This worm affords an example of alternate generation.

ENVY.—Envy is strongly characteristic of littleness of mind; a truly noble and generous man feels no enmity toward a successful rival. It is related of an Arabian king that when his architect had finished for him a structure of surpassing magnificence and beauty, he ordered him to be thrown from its highest tower, for fear that he might build a palace of equal or superior beauty for some rival king.

To SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a Post Office Order, DRAFT, or by express. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

NOTICE TO PREACHERS.

Those preachers whose post offices are to be changed, will please notify this office, as soon as convenient, of the change to be made—being particular in giving the post office from which and that to which the change is to be made.

FAST DAY.

We call special attention to the article of the Rev. J. L. Cotten, upon the Mobile Conference resolution appointing a day of fasting and prayer. The specific objects of that call are ably set forth by him, and they should have a most conscientious analysis. A great deal of praying might fitly be designated prayer at a venture; the distinct aim is wanting of an earnest, heartfelt desire. This is apt to be the case upon set days of prayer. Conferences are expected to name some such day each year as a day of fasting and prayer. To pray on that day is a matter of course. The intention of the resolution, adopted this year, is to lift the practice out of its routine emptiness, and make the day available for strengthening the church and advancing the kingdom of Christ. Brother Cotten's reflections are timely and such as were needed.

CORRECTION.

MR EDITOR: Please make the following statement in your paper: I reported something over $20 for the Conference collection—that is, I handed the money to the committee. I don't think I made an account of it in my report, for it seems to me that there was no place. The money, at least, was given in for the Conference collection. I have only lately seen a copy of the minutes of our (the Mississippi) Conference, or I would have made this correction sooner. These remarks apply to North Warren circuit.

Your brother,

A. B. STEWART.

GEORGIA.—Mr. Trumbull has introduced a bill in the Senate providing that Georgia shall be remanded to military rule, on account of the violation of the fourteenth amendment, etc. The New York Herald has discovered that, as the fourteenth amendment is applicable to New York as well as Georgia, Congress may just as well, some fine day, legislate New York out of the Union and put the State under military government. Just so—these Radical chickens are very apt to come home to roost in most unwelcome places.—Crescent.

CATHOLICS AFTER THE PUBLIC FUNDS.

Not satisfied with the large sums they have received from the city for the support of their institutions, and the yet larger sums from the State during the past four years, the Catholics are again clamoring for more of the people's money.—"The horse-leech hath two daughters, crying, give, give." They petition the City Council to appropriate "from the public funds" "an average sum for each scholar attending every school in this city which educates a certain number of children." This petition is signed by certain officers of "St. John," "St. Joseph," "St. Peter," "St. Paul," "St. Patrick," "St. Vincent," "St. Mary," "the Trinity," "the Redemptorist" and other such named schools. Evidently they are intense denominational establishments; and the petition is, that the city would regard "conscientious scruples" of petitioners and come to their support.

[illegible] the city provides for furnishing to its children the plain branches of an English education. It levies a tax for this purpose, and its schools are free for all. The Catholics are not satisfied with this much for their children, but they want them also trained in the catechism and in the art of repeating prayers to the Virgin, to St. John, St. Joseph, St. Peter, St. Paul, St. Patrick, St. Vincent, etc., and for this extra training they wish the city to pay. In Catholic schools the children are called to pray a long prayer, that is for about a quarter of an hour, at the hours of nine, twelve, one and three; then between times, say every half hour, they repeat a short prayer. This constitutes that "religious atmosphere" which the priests describe as necessary to a right education. The petition proposes that the city shall pay for this "atmosphere." The State and city school tax was levied to teach the art of reading, writing and ciphering to all children, especially those of the poor; it contemplates nothing further. It does not propose to teach the Westminster Confession of Faith, the Methodist Discipline, the English prayer book, the Lutheran articles, or the Ave Marias, the Pater Nosters and the Gloria Patris of the rosary. If Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Methodists or Catholics wish to give some such finish to their children they are at full liberty to do so; but neither the city nor the State will attempt anything of the sort. No money has been paid into the treasury for any such purpose.

The fact that there is in Catholic schools a large number of children for whom the State and city do not in any way contribute is true; but the same thing is true of Baptist, of Methodist, of Presbyterian and a hundred other schools. If these denominations are educating their own youths, so much the better. The common school system was not intended to supplant private schools or church schools, but to supplement them. If the common school funds are to be the prey of the churches, why not of any individual who may see fit to open a school; the child attending a large school has no stronger claim upon the tax than the child attending a small one. Many citizens do not send their children to the public schools; some, because they do not like the indiscriminate association of all sorts of children; some, because they wish a more extended course of training; some wish more time spent upon the modern languages and the ornamental branches of an education; some because they do not like the religious influence of these schools, and some because of their irreligious influence. The petitioners urge that they are of the latter class—that the schools land the children in infidelity or Protestantism. That is certainly no reason why the public should be called upon to support schools which will on the other hand laud children in Roman Catholicism. The public may have no special desire to foster the peculiar dogmas of the Catholic Church. Taxpayers are already sufficiently impatient of the large appropriations made annually for the support of Catholic institutions.

Would any modification of the common schools induce Catholics to send to them? We do not believe it would, because they wish to build up their own schools, and because we have had their hostility to the public schools announced in the organ of the archbishop in these unmistakable words: "We are no friend to the common school system. We are its unrelenting opponent to every extremity and under every circumstance." This is declared to be the sentiment of the whole Catholic Church: "The lay element of the church concurs fully with the clerical on the subject of common schools, and it is an insult to its intelligence to estimate that it is not equally responsible for the views held." A party that declares its purpose to break down the city schools, respectfully petitions the Council for money to support its own schools! The petitioners must presume not a little upon the excellent temper of the Council.

[illegible] they do presume largely upon this fact, that the City Council consists almost exclusively of Catholics. This is the main reason why the school question is now pressed. It seems that the Council has referred the petition to a committee consisting of Messrs. Shields, Brady and Pessou—two Catholics and one Protestant. We will now let the Catholic organ tell of a very interesting little arrangement in contemplation:

"It is proposed that advocates of separate school appropriations, and the opponents of that policy, shall each be represented by one or more gentlemen before the committee, with permission to produce all statistical and other information and to urge every argument that they may deem relevant to the issue. In this way much of the labor of investigation will be taken from the committee, while they will, at the same time, be the more capable of making an impartial and thorough report."

No doubt the committee and the Council, as constituted, need a good deal of light upon this question; but if upon any pretence they take any part of the public funds to build up their own church schools they will see more light in the fall elections than was ever vouchsafed them before. The public was very indifferent as to who was and who was not put in office at the time of the last city election; and the result was an upper Board consisting entirely of Catholics, excepting one person, Mr. Shields; and a lower Board consisting entirely of Catholics, excepting three members. Of the twenty four city councilmen twenty are Catholics. The organ of the archbishop, edited by the secretary of the upper Board, says that all Catholics are "unrelenting opponents to the public schools, under all circumstances and to every extremity." If so, it would certainly be a very encouraging and hopeful undertaking to plead the cause of common schools before the City Council or its impartial committee. Imagine a party of Presbyterians petitioning a Council, consisting of twenty Presbyterians and four Catholics, in behalf of Presbyterian schools; or a Council consisting wholly of Methodists listening to an argument in favor of a parcel of Methodist schools, that it might be more "capable of making an impartial and thorough report!" We think the gentlemen will have to get up something not quite so transparent if they wish to cover up an attempt to take money from the public funds for church purposes.

THE salaries of the different monarchs of Europe are given as follows by a German statistician:

Alexander II, $8,250,000 or $25,000 a day; Abdul Aziz, $6,000,000 or $18,000 a day; Napoleon III, $5,000,000 or $14,219 a day; Francis Joseph, $4,000,000 or $10,050 a day; Fred. William I, $3,000,000 or $8,210 a day; Victor Emanuel, $2,400,000 or $6,840 a day; Victoria, $2,200,000 or $6,270 a day; Isabella II, $1,800,000 or $4,643 a day; Leopold, $600,000 or $1,643 a day.

In addition to this salary, each of these individuals is furnished with a dozen or more first class houses to live in, without any charge for rent.

THE cost to England of the Abyssinian expedition is likely to amount to $50,000,000.

The Mobile Conference Sunday School Convention.

This convention opens on Thursday evening, May 27th, at seven and a half o'clock, and continues the Friday and Saturday following. The committee present a rich programme for the occasion, and we doubt not the friends of Sabbath schools will be in large attendance. The church is taking up the children in her arms, as the Saviour did. She now hears the last words of the Master as they echo upon Tiberius, and fill the mind of Peter with perplexing inquiry. It is wonderful to think how slowly the church and the world are in discerning the wisdom of that blessed Saviour. But God waits. As he waited six thousand years for one capable of discovering the glory of the planetary system, so the Saviour waits for a church that can read the sublime commandment, "Feed my lambs!" All glorious he stood in the resplendent circle of his own atmosphere—[illegible] the immortal Man, full of ten thousand honors, the beloved victor, triumphant over all forces of death and evil, just about to ascend, and he is mindful of children! Surely if he at that ravishing moment could pause to place upon their brows a part of his own glory, the church can find it her noblest care to protect the sacred charge. We are rapidly learning that the heart of a child can receive the Saviour more readily than the heart of a man—that the eloquence of Jesus can draw around him the tenderest minds, and the seed of his divine word can find as deep a soil in the breast of a youth as in the harder nature of mature manhood. This is the field that can be soonest occupied by the Lord's husbandmen. The same labors spent on children which have hitherto been too exclusively spent upon men and women would have yielded a far richer return. Why wait until satan has fortified and strengthened the tendencies of infancy, or the passions of youth, by indulgence and habit, before we seriously place before the immortal spirit the beautiful teachings of life or urge the threatenings and dangers of sin? Jesuits and Buddhists have taught us a lesson in seizing the all-important hour of early childhood if we would mold the spirit of man. We must not forget that children were sacrificed to Moloch and were thrown into the Ganges, and that therefore the Saviour came to rescue them from the cruel grasp of the devil.

We hail with increasing satisfaction every convention of this kind, and are glad to see that they are greatly multiplying.

To the Members of the Mobile Conference, and the Friends of the S. S. Cause Within our Bounds.

In a brief notice, some time since, I informed you that the committee designated by the Conference to fix the time and place of our Sunday School Convention had determined to have it in this city, and that it should commence on Thursday, May 27.

We are anxious, on many accounts, that it should be a success, and give a new and strong impulse to the Sunday school cause in our Conference. In order to do this, we wish it to be largely attended by both ministers and laymen, especially by those laymen connected with this cause.

We shall be glad to receive reports of all the schools within our bounds, giving their condition, and the hindrances to their progress.

The following is the programme of the exercises intended:

PROGRAMME OF THE EXERCISES OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION TO BE HELD IN MOBILE, COMMENCING ON THURSDAY, MAY 27, 1869.

Half past 7 P. M.—1. Organization. 2. Opening address by Hon. J. W. Taylor. Subject, "The Aim and Objects of the Sunday School and its Instructions."

Friday, 9 A. M.—3. First half hour to be spent in devotional exercises. Address by Dr. W. L. Lipscomb. Subject, "The Qualifications and Prerogatives of Superintendents, and the Qualifications Necessary for a Teacher." Discussions.

Half past 3.—4 Fifteen minutes spent in devotion. Address by P. G. Wood, Esq. Subject, "The Propriety and Utility of Uniform Lessons, and the Necessity of Meetings of Teachers to Prepare the Lessons." Discussions.

Half-past 7.—5. Address by Dr. T. C. Weir. Subject, "The Importance of Infant Class Instructions, and the Necessity and Best Method of Preparing to Teach." Discussions.

Saturday, 9 A. M.—6. Devotions. Address by Rev. J. S. Monre. Subject, "The Claims of the Sunday School upon the Church, and the Importance of Adult Classes." Discussions.

Half-past 3.—7. Address by Rev. A. S. Andrews. Subject, "The great Hindrances of the Sunday School Cause." Discussions.

Half-past 7.—8. Address by Rev. J. L. Cotten. Subject, "Opening and Closing Exercises."

Speakers to whom subjects have been assigned will be allowed twenty minutes to present them. All other speeches will be limited to five minutes; but there will be no limit to the number of speeches except the length of the session.

J. HAMILTON,
For the Committee.

The Secretary of the Foreign Board.

The Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at its annual meeting, elected the Rev. Dr. W. E. Munsey corresponding secretary in place of Rev. W. E. Cunnyngham, resigned. We are sorry that Brother Cunnyngham should have found it impossible to continue at this important post. We know of no man who could bring more valuable experience and information to the discharge of the laborious duties of this office. He could interest an audience equal to any one we have ever seen on the missionary platform. But great as his qualifications for this place are, we argue as favorably for his successor. The pulpit ability of Dr. Munsey will stir the Conferences and the people wherever he may appear. He has only to cast himself fairly upon the current of his great mission to reach the widest success. Our people need the power of oratory, when inspired by the greatest theme ever furnished mortals, to raise their mind to the glory and vastness of Christ's kingdom. May he fill his hand with coals of fire from between the cherubin and scatter them over the church! A correspondent of the St. Louis Advocate says:

He preached on Sunday night at Trinity church. An hour before the time to begin the service the people began to gather at the church, and half an hour in advance of the time every seat was occupied, and the aisles, gallery, vestibule and stairways were crowded. The space being filled, the doors were locked, and it was estimated that two thousand people were forced to turn away. It is predicted by all who know him that he will make a great impression for good upon every community he visits as the secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions. Let the prayers of the church be offered in his behalf, that his great talents may bless the church in his new field of operations.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

We are indebted to the publishers for

THE LIFE AND EPISTLES OF ST PAUL. By the Rev. W. J. Conybeare, M. A., late fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and the Rev. J. S. Howson, D. D., principal of the Collegiate Institution, Liverpool, with an introductory dissertation by Rev. Leonard Bacon, D. D. Cincinnati, Ohio: National Publishing Company. Chicago, Illinois: Jones, Junkin & Co. 1869 8vo, pp. 917.

This is the "people's edition" of this noble work. To reproduce St. Paul and the times in which he lived is the design of its learned authors. The greatness of this theme can be imagined when we consider that the apostle was at Athens, and at Rome, just as the glory of the Roman empire culminated. He stood in the royal portico where the court of Areopagus sat, he disputed in the school of Tyrannus, and he entered Rome upon the pavement which still witnessed those costly ovations granted to her military chieftains. As the representative of the Saviour he moved amid the grandest forms which the wisdom of earth has ever assumed, fully conscious that he brought to these proud empires a truth which would prostrate their most venerable and sacred temples, but which would release the people from the bondage of superstition into the liberty of God's children.

The variety of knowledge and accuracy required to bring out this great personage in his proper relief is possessed as fully by the authors of this work as by any of whom we have knowledge. A vast amount of information, biblical, historical and classical, is compacted in these pages, and presents a life-like picture of the great apostle to the eye of the reader. The style is clear and fascinating, its descriptions of scenery and customs vividly picturesque, and the portraiture of the labors and triumphs of the illustrious personage, the first missionary to the Gentiles, is in a high degree instructive and inspiring.—Every Bible student ought to furnish himself with this admirable help to the word of God. Maps and illustrations accompany the work.

We have received from R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street:

LIVINGSTON IN AFRICA. His Explorations and Missionary Labors. By Rev. S. A. W. Jewett. With illustrations. Cincinnati: Hitchcock & Walden. New York: Carlton & Lanahan. 1868.

This is a 12mo of three hundred pages—an abridgment of Livingston's octavo, published some years since. It gives in a more available form the incidents of that wonderful exploration of this missionary traveler from South Africa to the Zambesi. The horrid grossness and mere animalism of these African tribes of necessity constitutes the staple of his observations. For an example of laborious constancy and boldness of purpose Livingston will compare favorably with any African traveler.

We have from the publishers, through Mr. George Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street, the following new works:

THE HISTORIC NATIONS; or Inquiries Concerning some of the Great Peoples and Civilizations of Antiquity, and their Probable Relations to a still Older Civilization of the Ethiopians or Cushites of Arabia. By John Baldwin, A. M. New York: Harper & Bro. 1869. 12mo, pp. 408.

When one selects that period of the world which antedates all history, he has entered a wide range. Where there is no authority to appeal to or from, there is full scope for dogmatic statement: "It is now as certain as anything else in ancient history that Egypt existed as a civilized country not less than five thousand years earlier than the birth of Christ." "A free minded and accomplished archæologist, speaking of the dates furnished by the chronology of Egypt, says: 'I know how appalling these figures are, and what grave apprehensions they awaken.'" One is reminded by such sentences of the opinion of those savants of France who accompanied Napoleon and made out the age of the obelisks, temples, etc, which was so wonderfully dissipated by Champollion. This writer is very much in the interest of Cush. One of his headings is: "The Cushites Invented the Compass." The way in which he proves this may be taken as a specimen of his short methods of arriving at "pre historic" truth: "Where did it originate? How shall we reasonably explain its origin if we refuse to believe it was invented by the greatest maritime people of antiquity? * * Its history, so far as we can trace it, leads us directly to this explanation." One other sentence: "The Chinese and Japanese do not give us myths; they tell us what they have actually known for many centuries."

A ROMISH OUTRAGE.

A lady of this city, who was raised in the Methodist Church, married into a Catholic family. Her husband not being a zealous Catholic, made no effort to induce her to be a Romanist; but other members did what they could to accomplish this end. Lately her health has become feeble, and her nervous system greatly disordered, so that she was quite beside herself. In this condition her conversation ran almost constantly on Romanism, saints, etc., the result of the annoying attempts to proselyte her. This was a signal for the papists to rally and try and bring her into their church. A priest was sent for in the absence of her husband, and against her remonstrances, to baptize her. The sight of him made her desperate; and she fought him so furiously that he was obliged to leave the room without accomplishing his purpose. When, however, the paroxysm was past, and she lay in a state of exhaustion, and nearly helpless, he was sent for again; the sight of him excited her again, and she ordered him to leave. But being too exhausted to defend herself, he mumbled his Latin over her, and going round on the other side of the bed where she could not see him, he sprinkled water on her and made the sign of the cross over her. I presume they consider her a Catholic, but I apprehend they will find their mistake. This treatment helped largely to so aggravate her disease that the poor woman has had to be sent to an asylum in your city. The conduct of this priest, under the circumstances, is characterized by neighbors as "outrageous;" and some express a wonder that in her state of health and mind it had not killed her. It may do so yet. Let the readers draw their own inferences.

Bishop Simpson Writes a Letter.

Some of the Galveston papers have been making themselves merry over the letter from Bishop Simpson to the New York Methodist of the 6th. We are inclined to think that the bishop obtained his information from the same parties who posted him about the outrages which he reports to have been inflicted on the Northern Methodist preachers in this State. One statement is just about as reliable as the other. We give the following as a specimen. Speaking of Galveston, he says:

"I am told that sharks are known to be in the harbor, though I did not see any. Along the bayous alligators of large size are to be found, and I was told that in fresh water bayou, in the suburbs of Galveston, a year since, a child of six or seven years was devoured by one of these animals. They oftentimes chase the boys who go into the edge of bayous, and who, to escape, are compelled to flee in a zigzag direction, which the alligators are too clumsy to follow. The tarantula, which is exceedingly venomous, is occasionally found, as is also the centipede. There is, throughout Texas, a species of frog called the horned frog, covered with a burbod or horny coat, having projections upon its head and a number of smaller ones, or little spikes, upon its back. On the sea-side of Galveston, I am told, there is a peculiar animal found in the water which they call the stingaree. I never saw any of them, but they were described to me as of a jelly-like substance, when thrown up after a storm, about the size of two tin quarts, the body perfectly white, turning to purple as it decays, with a kind of a sting or rat-like tail, possibly a foot or a foot and a half long. If those who go into the ocean to bathe chance to be struck by one of them, it is said to be certain death, so poisonous are they."

We suspect that somebody played off a sad joke on the bishop. Some of the reptiles he describes will be novelties in natural history. The stingaree, for instance, is certainly an "odd fish." The animal seems to be a cross between the sennettle and the stingaree. Bonner, of the New York Ledger, has done a good thing for his paper in securing Bishop Simpson on his list of sensational writers. He will lay Sylvanus Cobb in the shade. That alligator story will do to begin with. Nobody ever heard of the ever this region; but that don't matter. Wonder if it was not the child of some unfortunate freedman, while the alligator was set on by some remorseless Southerner. Such a story would take handsomely, especially if accompanied with the hint that alligators are kept tame for that purpose by the Southern people.—Texas Christian Advocate.

THE Pacific railroad is in a very bad condition. Telegraphic advices from San Francisco state that the overland mails are detained by snow where the road crosses the Rocky and Wasatch mountain ranges.—The snow impediments extend two hundred miles east of Salt Lake. An occurrence like this will make passengers wary of traveling on the Pacific road in winter.

OBITUARIES.

MEMOIR.

We mention tenderly the name of MARTHA HARMAN, wife of Zenas Preston, of Tensas parish, Louisiana. She was born near Natchez, Mississippi, January 5, 1815; married to her now bereaved husband July 7, 1831; made a public profession of religion and joined the Methodist Church in 1855; died, after a severe and painful illness of eight days, in the city of New Orleans, March 4, 1869.

Such is the short and concise history of our dear departed friend and sister—such are the brief and comprehensive periods in human life! With her, life's phases and fortunes found a similar type in the experience of very many who have lived in these times of peculiar tribulation. Hers was a lot of great bodily suffering for years previous to her demise, which she seemed to bear with Christian resignation, and we feel assured she maintained her "confidence steadfast to the end."

To have the name recorded in heaven is better than emblazoned on tablets of earthly fame. To have an inheritance there is "greater riches" than all the "treasures of Egypt." To be a jewel in that heavenly coronet is more desirable than to wear a monarch's crown or wield a conqueror's scepter.

Her remains were carried to Natchez and laid to rest near those of kindred dust who had crossed the stream, and there await the voice of the resurrection trump, when "they that sleep in Christ shall rise first."

"Who are these arrayed in white,
Brighter than the noonday sun?
Foremost of the sons of light,
Nearest the eternal throne?
These are they that bore the cross,
Nobly for their Master stood:
Sufferers in his righteous cause,
Followers of the dying God."

We tender our hearty Christian condolence and sympathies to the bereft ones, and commend them to "God and the word of his grace." THOS. B. WHITE.

NEW ORLEANS, March 16, 1869.

ROBERT BARNWELL RICHARDSON, son of Robert R. and Mary E. Richardson, of Wilkerson county, Mississippi, was born October 4, 1850, and died January 18, 1869.

Young Richardson was a passenger on the ill-fated steamer Glide on the night of her terrible explosion.

Robert was in his berth asleep when the accident occurred. He was waked up amid the noise and confusion, the steam and smoke almost suffocating him.

In the excitement of the moment he attempted—tried his best—to open the door of his room, but could not. Returning to his berth, he fell on his knees, and in that terrible moment offered up an earnest and importunate prayer to God for help. Rising from his knees, he again went to the door, and opened it without any trouble. It seemed almost to open itself. By great and almost superhuman effort he succeeded in jumping aboard the steamer that had come to their rescue. Then falling into a seat, he exclaimed: "It was my prayer that saved me." But, alas! how sad and suffering was his condition. The skin on his face, his hands and wrists, his feet and ankles, was scalded until it was well nigh cooked.

In this deplorable condition he was taken back to New Orleans and lingered at the St. Charles hotel, where suffering—about a week in great fortitude—and which he bore with death of manly bearing.

Robert was blessed with more than ordinary musical talent, which he had cultivated with considerable success. He had been a member of the Methodist Church for several years, and we have hope in his death.

During that week of terrible suffering he expressed to the Rev. Mr. Beckwith a firm trust in Christ. We have good hope that with Robert all is well. Farewell, dear friend, until the resurrection morn.

PAIN will never smart for stain;
Paint will ease the greatest pain,
Paint will cure foul ulcers deep,
From them inflammation keep;
An invention that will last
When all liniments are past,
When all pills and powders fail,
PAIN PAINT will outlive them all.

The latest scientific discoveries prove that the principle of evaporation and absorption is the only method by which inflammation can be instantly removed. But the absorbents will not drink water readily, for the flesh is of an oily nature, and water rolls off. But liniments have utterly failed, for they always inflame and burn the flesh wherever applied, while oils or ointments clog the pores and prevent the escape of morbid matter. But a preparation has been made and already tested on over five hundred thousand people, suffering all kinds of pain and disease that is possible to enumerate, and it acts like magic on each and every individual. It is limpid as water, and is as harmless; will not stain or smart, and so prepared that the absorbents drink it rapidly, and the evaporation that instantly arises through the million of pores is really marvelous. It is an invention hitherto unknown, but is as of much importance as the introduction of steam or the magnetic telegraph, for the drying up a single tear has more of honest fame than shedding seas of gore. This article not only dispels all heat and fever, but evaporates out all impurity and morbid matter of the system or blood at any point wherever applied. This novelty is Dr. Wolcott's Pain Paint. His office, at No. 181 Chatham Square, New York, has a greater number of patients, with every type of disease, than any hospital in America or Europe. This fact alone enables him to give the best practical advice to those who suffer from any malady, disease or pain. It costs the patient nothing for advice; beside, all pain is instantly removed free of cost. Tens of thousands given up as hopeless are permanently cured and restored to the activity of life.

A large share of these applicants suffer with drug disease, and have had their whole system medicated and poisoned through and through with medicine. Dr. WOLCOTT condemns most emphatically all drug treatment, and proves practically that disease can be radically expelled from the system without dosing the stomach. The advent of Pain Paint overturns the old theory of cure; and medical practitioners are at their wits' end in beholding such undeniable and astonishing cures of those cases considered by themselves as utterly hopeless. Hundreds come over one thousand miles to obtain treatment and advice; many have been suffering for years who are unable, from sickness or poverty, to make the journey. To all such it will be more practicable to purchase his remedies and have them sent free of express charges. A pint of Pain Paint, double strength, will be sent for $5, a quart for $8, or a gallon for $20, on receipt of the money at No. 181 Chatham Square, New York, or one half dozen pints of Wolcott's Antidiluter for the cure of Catarrh, $6, with full directions and advice. Small bottles can be bought at all first class Drug Stores. Beware of all imitators who offer worthless compounds. Wolcott's signature is very large on white wrappers around each bottle of all his remedies.

Remarks of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher upon the Mississquoi Spring Water.

In a sermon delivered at Plymouth Church, on the 18th of December, 1868, Mr. Beecher compared the restorative properties of the famous Missisquoi Spring Water, which restores the diseased man to health, to the "Water of Life" which purifies his spiritual being. He said:

A man, from one cause and another, has become diseased, and is run down, and everybody has noticed it, and has noticed him; and at last, having tried a thousand things in vain, he says: "I am going to drink Missisquoi water;" and he goes to the springs, and spends the whole summer, and drinks the water, and his health improves, and the color returns to his cheek. And by the autumn he is quite strong. And suppose, on his way home, he should say:—"When my friends meet me, and say, 'How are you?' I am going to say, 'Not very well;' I am not going to tell anybody that I am getting well. I am going to let them see that I am getting well." Would that be natural? Under such circumstances, when your friends meet you, and say, "Why, old fellow! I am glad to see you looking so rosy," would you not say, "I am better. I have not been so strong in many days. Thank God, I am going to get well. I begin to feel like myself again?" That is what you would say about your bodily health.

And where God has done everything for your soul; when you have drunk, not the waters of medicinal springs, but the "water of life," and you are being healed all through, are you not the very man that ought to speak out and say, "God is curing me. I feel better. I am not well yet, but I am going to get well?" That is the profession which a man makes when he joins the church—"I am better." Not "I am good," but "I am better, and I am going to get well." mh27 1t

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease, Consumption, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure.

To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used, free of charge, with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a SURE CURE FOR CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, etc. The object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable; and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

DARBY'S
PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.
A CHALLENGE TO THE WORLD!

We challenge the world to produce a better or a stronger recommendation for any article for any purpose, than the following:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., NOVEMBER 1, 1868.

We very cheerfully unite our testimony in favor of the great merits of the valuable disinfectant manufactured by Professor Darby, and known as DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID. From the reputation of Professor Darby as a scientific gentleman, from our own knowledge of this preparation, and from the general esteem in which it is held wherever known, we have no hesitation in recommending it as one of the most valuable household articles with which we are acquainted.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE FAITHFUL DOVE.

During some of the recent excavations at Pompeii there was found in the garden wall of the House of the Faun a nest, in which sat a dove, with a single egg.

The fiery shower is falling thick
On Pompeii's streets and halls,
And the smoke and ashes are choking the air:
And the flaming mountain, with blood red glare,
Is rolling destruction, layer on layer,
Against its devoted walls.

The palace is empty; the merchant's gold
Is uncounted upon his floor;
The affrighted bridegroom hath turned and fled,
And the priest hath left his prayer unsaid,
And the mourner stays not to bury his dead
In that all tremendous hour.

The mother scarce heeds the babe on her breast;
The husband deserts his wife;
Nor linger the young to protect the old,
For ghastly terror hath stricken the bold,
And the noblest spirits grow selfish and cold
In that fearful struggle for life.

Yet one gentle parent surveys the storm
With calm, unshrinking eye;
Faithful and firm, on that lonely nest,
Which for ages since hath been her rest,
A mother dove bares her gentle breast
To the tempest rushing by.

Alone with her unborn young she sits
In that ancient garden wall!
For hers is the love that is strong as death,
That scarcely parts e'en with the parting breath,
And closer her darling she cherisheth
As the fire-drops round her fall!

And so in that ancient garden wall
She meets her lonely doom;
And, when stranger hands her shroud remove,
Lo! still on her nest sits the faithful dove,
Sweet model of patient, undying love,
To ages yet to come!

BIRDS REMEMBER.

Some years ago two boys, while playing upon a cliff near the sea, found a young sea bird which a dog was worrying. It would have been killed but for them. They drove away the dog and carried the bird, nearly as large as a goose, safely home. There it was shut up in a coop, like the hens and chickens, fed and kindly cared for. It soon became quite tame and manifested constant affection for its little masters, who felt quite proud of the result of their care. And thus weeks and months rolled on. In the fall of the year the bird became very tame, the coop was occasionally opened, and the prisoner permitted to go to the coast near which the boys lived. But it came regularly home at night, receiving its supper along with the rest of the birdies, and crept to its nest to repose. So the cold winter passed away, and spring came. One night the bird which had been cared for so well was missed. It did not come home. The next day and the next went by, and still the coop was empty. The fact was, the boys' bird had been coaxed away; I cannot really say into bad company, but it had joined a flock on its way north, and flown with the rest Presently the boys began to comprehend the difficulty, and as a matter of course they had to have a good cry about it. They had really learned to love their bird, and to part with it, for them, was a severe trial. That is—all very natural, for kindness, no matter upon what creature bestowed, ever begets kindness, and to part with an object that we love is ever painful.

Some boys and girls will, no doubt, anticipate the end of my story, for many similar events are recorded. One cold autumn day, as the boys were at play in their yard, they saw a flock of sea birds coming toward them. Nearer and nearer they came, until at last, to their great surprise, the whole flock settled upon the ground close at hand, and the largest waddled along toward them, quacking most curiously as she came. It was the bird which had flown away in the spring now returned with her young ones to claim hospitality for the winter. You may imagine; if you can, the delight of the boys, and indeed that of their parents, at this instance of affection. Words cannot describe it. You may make up your mind that the flock was not turned adrift, though for a long time the young ones were pretty wild, and did not take as kindly to the boys as the mother did. Ah, well; they did not know them as well.—Casket and Playmate.

THE GOLDEN KEY.

It was a stormy December day, and Lucy's aunt was seated by the table at work. Lucy was perched in her favorite seat by the window, watching the soft white snow-flakes as they fluttered gracefully to the ground, covering with their fleecy mantle every rough, unsightly thing, and making the broad earth a scene of purity and beauty. She was so very quiet that her aunt at length looked up anxiously, and said, "What are you thinking of, my darling?" The thoughtful look passed from her bright face, and the sunny smile came back again as she threw herself in her aunt's arms and exclaimed, "I was thinking, aunty, that I have found a golden key that unlocks everybody's heart to me. Can you guess what it is, aunty?"

Her aunt smiled and shook her head.

"It is only one little word—'Please.' If I say, 'Please give me a piece of bread and butter, Nora,' she says, 'Yes, miss,' and takes her hands out of the suds and goes and gets it at once. John says she is cross But she is never cross to me. I think one reason is because I try not to vex her.

"Sometimes John says to her, 'Get my slippers instantly,' no matter what she is doing; and she answers back in loud and angry words; and John says she is the crossest person he ever saw. Don't you think, auntie, if John used the golden key she would be kind and pleasant to him too?"

"Yes, my love, and if they would both remember that 'a soft answer turneth away wrath,' and act accordingly, I think there would very soon cease to be harsh words between them. There are few persons so thoroughly bad that they cannot be won by kindness. Even dumb animals are not insensible to its influence. If you should beat Fido, or speak sharply to him, do you think he would show the same affection for you that he now does? If my little girl will always keep in her possession the precious golden key which she has been so fortunate as to find thus early, she will never want friends, and, in trying to make those around her happy, will insure a never-failing source of happiness herself."

Dear young reader, do you not desire to secure this beautiful golden key which Lucy so prized, and whose magic influence made her happy and beloved?

THE LORD BLESS MY PENNIES.—A little girl of six years old, who was very desirous of putting her pennies into the missionary box with others, when saying her evening prayers at her father's knee, hesitated a moment, and then added, "Lord bless my two pennies for Jesus' sake. Amen." After the child had gone to bed, her father asked his wife, "What made Gracie say that?" "She has prayed thus every night since giving her pennies to the missionary box," was the mother's reply.

SCIENTIFIC.

QUICKSILVER AND IRON.—The difficulty of imparting to iron a complete and uniform coating of mercury by dipping it in a solution of mercury is well known. The process may, however, be very easily accomplished by cleaning the iron first with hydrochloric acid, and then immersing it in a diluted solution of blue vitriol mixed with a little hydrochloric acid, by means of which it becomes covered with a slightly adherent layer of copper, from which it must be freed by brushing, or rubbing with sandpaper and washing. It is then to be brought into a very diluted solution of mercurial sublimate, mixed with a few drops of hydrochloric acid. The article will now be covered with a layer of mercury, which cannot be removed even by hard rubbing This layer of quicksilver protects the iron from rust, especially if it be washed with spirits of sal ammoniac after the amalgamation. Articles for the laboratory, and for other purposes, coated with quicksilver in this way, and allowed to lie exposed with similar articles not so protected, retain their lustre perfectly, while the others become covered with rust. This same process is especially applicable to the coating of the steel or iron instruments for which oil is generally employed, and will probably be found to resist the injurious effect of moisture much more perfectly than the oil.—Scientific American.

BEWARE OF BENZOLE.—From the facility with which it removes grease spots from fabrics, this substance is regarded almost as a household necessity. But few persons, however, are aware of its explosive character, or the dangers attending the careless handling of it. Being one of the most volatile and inflammable products, it vaporizes with great rapidity, so that the contents of a four ounce phial, if overturned, would render the air of a moderate sized room highly explosive. The greatest care should be taken in handling this substance in proximity to fire, and it is important to remember that the vapor escaping from an uncorked bottle will cause a flame to leap over a space of several feet.—Scientific American

STUMP-PRAYING.—Rev. Mr. Fulton, of Boston, in giving notice of the inauguration prayer meeting at the Meionaon, twelve o'clock Thursday, said: "Now that the nation is to have the extreme privilege of having the 'curse removed' which has so long afflicted us, it becomes us to pray that the boon granted us by the people may, under the guidance of God, prove to be a Grant from heaven."

FARM AND GARDEN.

CULTIVATION OF THE PEANUT.

In accordance with your request, I give you my experience and observation as to the methods used in cultivating the peanut.

The first consideration being the adaptability of soils. With us the light land on which the oak, hickory and rosemary pine were the original growth, are those on which we succeed best; they produce a brighter pea than the stiff lands, consequently more saleable. Yet by an analysis of the soil, and the application of the necessary fertilizers, any land properly drained may be made to produce them, whether profitable or not I experience will determine. Lime, in some form, seems to be requisite; when there is a deficiency of lime in the land, although the vine may flourish and make an innumerable quantity of forais, there will not probably be one in ten that will fill or make perfect peas.

The preparation of soils, and the minutiæ of cultivating and harvesting cannot be given fully, in detail, without trespassing on your columns. Suffice it to say the soil should be well broken during winter or early spring, and then broken immediately before planting. Like all other crops it requires a well pulverized soil. Then check off from twenty-seven to thirty inches each way, with an opener prepared for the purpose, so gauged that all the rows are equidistant. Plant in the check, two kernels in a hill, and cover about two inches deep.

The usual time of planting is from the 15th of April to the 15th of May. As soon as the peas are up, we plow them with a pea sweep, going once in a row, then cross plow, and follow with the hoe. This process is continuous, plowing them each way (and hoeing) every fifteen to eighteen days, until the vines meet, which, with us, is about the 15th of July. The object is to keep them free from weeds and grass, and to keep the soil well pulverized and in a condition readily to receive the peas. On stiff and damp lands some prefer planting in drills, say three feet between the rows and eighteen inches apart in the drills, then cultivate as cotton, only retaining a flat oval bed for the peas. After the vines meet no further work is necessary until time of harvesting, or, as we term it, digging. This is done with a plow (constructed for that purpose) which we run under them, cutting the taproot; and so loosening the soil that with the aid of a rake they are easily raised out of the ground, then shaken and left to cure as other forage. It usually requires two to three days, in good weather, to cure them sufficiently for stacking.—After remaining in the stack six to eight days, they may be removed and picked under shelter. Then comes the most tedious process, when done by hand (which has been the usual way,) picking them from the vines and preparing them for market. A machine has been gotten up which performs that work very well, and is now being generally used. The high prices obtained for peanuts the last three years seem to have awakened considerable interest throughout the country in their cultivation; but having gone down this season below two dollars, I think the general staple (cotton) will continue to be raised; the ardor of the growers in this section has cooled down considerably since the decline in price. In former years, when prices were low, I looked upon peanuts at one dollar per bushel, and cotton at ten cents per pound, as equal, the excess of that ratio, in either crop, indicating the one most profitable. From having some experience in both crops I am induced to draw the comparison. It is true the offal of a peanut crop is more profitable in feeding stock, fattening pork, etc., than that of cotton, yet I doubt whether it will compensate for the damage to the land, peanuts being the most exhausting crop (save flax) I know of, and more than one crop in four cannot be made without heavy manuring.—D. MacMillan, in Carolina Farmer.

The European Walnut Juglans Regia

Mr. S. B. Buckley, writing to the Southern Cultivator, from Austin, Texas, says:

In the January number of the Southern Cultivator Mr. Gift remarks that he has never seen the European walnut growing at the South. It is indeed very rare, not only at the South, but at the North, where it has only been introduced into cultivation at a comparatively recent period—so recent that there are few if any fruit-bearing trees of it in the Northern States. Some writers assert that it will not produce fruit there; however, I have been told that there is a tree of it which bears fruit in St. Louis, Missouri.

In the year 1858 I saw a large European walnut growing in the grounds of Mr. Lyon, of Columbia, South Carolina. Mr. L. told me that it rarely failed to bear large crops of walnuts, of which he gave me some. They were of as large size as is generally found in the market, and equally as good. This tree in Mr. Lyon's grounds had been planted by Mr. Herbemont, an old botanist, who is often quoted by Elliott in his botany of South Carolina and Georgia, and the garden in which the walnut tree stands is known in Columbia as the Herbemont Garden.

The European walnut is said to be a native of Asia, from whence it was introduced into Europe by the old Greeks and Romans. The elder Michaux saw it in its natural state, in the province of Ghilam, on the shores of the Caspian sea, between the 35th and 40th degrees of north latitude.

There are several varieties of it in Europe, of which Loudon, in his arboretum, enumerates five as worthy of cultivation The European walnut is now kept in many of the Northern nurseries, and is also for sale at many of those in the South, but no particular variety of it is specified in their catalogues The maderia nuts of commerce are now mostly obtained from Spain, the south of France and Italy, to which, according to Mr. Gift, we may soon add California.

TO MANAGE A REARING HORSE.—When you perceive a horse's inclination to rear, separate your reins and prepare for him. The instant he is about to rise, slacken one hand, and bend or twist his head with the other, keeping your hands low. This bending compels him to move a hind leg, and of necessity brings his fore feet down. Instantly twist him completely round, two or three times, which will confuse him very much, and completely throw him off his guard The moment you have finished twisting him round place his head in the direction you wish to proceed, apply the spurs, and he will not fail to go forward.

If the situation be convenient, press him into a gallop, and apply the spurs and whip two or three times severely. The horse will not, perhaps, be satisfied with the defeat, but may feel disposed to try again for the mastery. Should this be the case you have only to twist him, etc., as before, and you will find that in the second struggle he will be more easily subdued than on the former occasion; in fact, you will see him quail under the operation. It rarely happens that a rearing horse, after having been treated in the way described, will resort to this trick again.—British Sportsman.

FINE SHEEP.—The Bowling Green (Kentucky) Democrat, of February 25, says:

Mr. Henry Potter, of this county, has lately purchased of F. L. Upham, of Springfield, Vermont, three sheep of the best blooded Infantado Spanish merino of New England, which will clip from twelve to twenty five pounds of wool each annually, equal in fineness to any in the world. Since it costs no more to raise fine blooded sheep than any other kind, why is it that more of our farmers do not follow Mr. Potter's example, and improve their breed of sheep by importations from other States and counties.

TO DESTROY RATS.—The Griffin (Georgia) Empire State says that a lady in that city, whose house became infested with these troublesome vermin, says the simple remedy of dissolving copperas in water, (make it strong,) and sprinkling it in the most prominent places, will make them leave in hot haste. She tried it successfully, and has not been troubled with rats or mice since.

THE late journey of Piaggia, an Italian, who has resided for eighteen years in Africa, makes it almost positive that there exists west of the Albert Nyanza a large lake, known to the natives as Metuasset. His attempt to reach it was frustrated by the warlike condition of the country. He reached the villages of the Niamniams, a race about whom many mythical stories are afloat—such as that they are half dogs, or have tails. The brothers Poucet, who possess trading stations in this region, have sent valuable facts respecting it to the Geographical Society of Paris. They have received sketches of the Arabian geographer Abulfeda and Edrisi, in regard to the Niger and union between the Niger and Nile, by means of a great inland lake, by fact, they believe the lake to be in connected with Lake Tsad.

A COMBINATION of priests in Mexico, who have withdrawn from the Roman Catholic Church, applied some time ago to the Episcopalians of this country for aid in establishing a Protestant Episcopal church. They ask for the consecration of Don Rafael Diaz Martinez as bishop of this new Mexican church. There is a congregation of one hundred and ninety-eight families among the Mexican residents of Brownsville, Texas.

TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of.....$10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of.....15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of.....20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of.....25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, Interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the assessment pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 611 and 616 Broadway NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding boards,

Patented August 11th, 1856.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

CHURCH OF THE STRANGERS, New York.—Visitors to the city of New York are informed that they will find divine service every Sunday, in the large Chapel of the University, Washington Square, at ten and a half A. M. and at seven and a half P. M. The evening service in summer is at eight o'clock. Waverley Place, immediately north of the New York Hotel, out of Broadway, runs west to Washington Square, on the east side of which is the University. The entrance to the church is the main door of the University. University Place cars run from the door of the Fifth Avenue Hotel to the door of the church. From the St. Nicholas and Metropolitan, take the cars corner of Broadway and Broome, leave at Waverley Place, and go west one block. At the Astor House take University Place cars, leave at Waverley Place, and go west one block. Strangers will find cordial welcome and polite attention.

The pastor is Rev. Dr. DEEMS, who devotes himself to the spiritual interests of strangers. If any be sick, let them address him a note by mail, as "Pastor of the Church of the Strangers, New York," and it will reach him. The ladies who compose the "Society of the Sisters of the Stranger" procure medical, legal and spiritual help for strangers in perplexity, distress or sickness. Address "Sisters of the Stranger," care Rev. Dr. Deems, New York.

THE THIRTY FIRST ANNUAL Session of the

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE,

MACON, GEORGIA,

Begins on OCTOBER 5, 1868, under the direction of the following

FACULTY.

Rev J M Bonnell, D D, President.
Rev C W Smith, A M, Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy.
Rev W C Bass, A M, Professor of Natural Science.
C Schwartz, A M, Professor of Latin and Modern Languages.
Mrs A R Leak, Assistant in Literary Department.
Carl Hintz, Musical Director, (with ample assistance.)
Mrs E T Crowe, Teacher of Drawing and Painting.

CHARGES.—There are three terms in the scholastic year. For each term the charges, which are to be paid at the beginning of the term, are as follows:

Regular tuition, $30. Board including washing, fuel and lights, $75. Incidental fee charged to day scholars, $1.

The following are optional: French, $15; Instrumental Music, $25; use of instrument $3; Vocal Music in class, $2—not charged to those who take Instrumental Music; Drawing, $15; Painting, $20.

Pupils who take French may be excused from Latin without affecting their graduation.

Special advantages provided in the departments of French, Music and Painting. For further information address the President.

J. M. BONNELL,

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS.—Board and Tuition per session, $360.

PAYMENTS.—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

HOMES IN BRITISH HONDURAS FREE FROM TAXATION.

THE PUTNAM IMMIGRATION ASSOCIATION (Limited) of Belize, British Honduras has been formed under the laws of that Colony, with a Capital Stock of $500,000, coin, of five thousand shares of $100 each.

The Association has purchased of the Colonial Government an area of about 500 square miles of territory, comprising some of the choicest Sugar, Tobacco, Corn, Rice and Cattle lands in the Colony.

The Association will sell to each family that will locate upon and occupy the land between this and the 12th of July next, 160 acres at 50 cents per acre, payable in Five Years from date of settlement, without interest. The Association will donate to every Parent and Child of each family, who may be living on the land at the end of the second year from date of settlement, one Share of the Association's Stock, the value of which will be greater than the price paid for the land.

An adult male member of each family who will locate, put up a cabin, and clear enough land to provision his family, will be recognized as a bona fide settler.

These lands will produce from three to five hogsheads of Sugar per acre, without cultivation. Sugar boiling can be carried on during eight months of the year. Two crops of Tobacco, Corn, Rice, Plantains and many kinds of vegetables can be made in a year. The country is healthy, and white men can work to better advantage in the warm months than in the Southern States. These facts are demonstrated by the experience of 350 Southerners now settled in the Colony.

No family should go that has not means sufficient for its support for twelve months after locating on the land.

The Steamship Mexico will leave New Orleans for Belize on the 20th of February, the steamship Trade Wind on the 28th of February, and make the trip in five or six days. First class passage, $40, greenbacks; second class, $25. The Trade Wind makes a monthly trip.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC,

Or, Vegetable Medicine.

T. K. PRICE, Esq., Vendor of "Price's Patent Texas Tonic," or Vegetable Medicine:

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate use and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best recipe that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetables Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therefore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so, we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefited.

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

We remain yours truly,

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $18 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. J. Requier.

For further information apply for circular to

O. F. CASEY,

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTItute, Staunton, Virginia.

The next session begins on the 21st day of SEPTEMBER, 1868, and closes on the 24th of June, 1869.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with a Faculty of twelve professors, teachers and matrons.

This is a Female College of the first rank; one of the most flourishing in the South; young ladies here from nearly all sections of Virginia, and various Southern States. Method of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Health and comfort of pupils unsurpassed. Those from the Gulf States, especially, have greatly improved in health. No social disquietude. The population of this great Valley is nearly all white. This Institution is an educational home for the daughters of the South.

Charges for the entire scholastic year, board and tuition, in collegiate course, embracing

Ancient Languages	$215 00

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The wholesale trade in dry goods, hardware, boots and shoes, queensware, etc., has continued quite animated since our last issue. There has also been more movement in sugar and molasses, at full prices for the former, the buoyancy of which has been increased by the late accounts from Cuba. Western produce, generally, has been in limited supply, thus furnishing the only exception, the receipts of it having exceeded the demand, and caused a decline of 25c. per barrel.

Our accounts from the country continue encouraging, but with some exceptions, agricultural operations having been retarded by the previous excessive rains, and many complaining of the scarcity of hands.

The river remains about the same, being three feet six inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the 19th instant.:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	5597
Mobile.....	265
Florida.....	6
Texas.....	106
Total.....	5974

On Saturday the movement commenced under the stimulating influence of more encouraging telegrams from Liverpool, and although operations were checked during the early part of the day by more stringent pretensions on the part of factors, yet the sales summed up 3,400 bales, partly at previous rates, but mostly at figures showing an advance of ⅛ to ¼c., good ordinary closing at 26 to 26¼c., low middling at 26¾ to 27c., and middling at 27¾ to 28c. On Monday buyers came forward with less spirit, and a reluctance to pay the full prices of the previous day, but still the business comprised 3,100 bales, without any falling off in rates. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair demand and tendency to fuller prices, factors being more stringent in their pretensions in consequence of the Liverpool telegrams being regarded as encouraging, and light receipts strengthening the position; but notwithstanding the full prices asked the movement was quite animated throughout the day, and resulted in 6,350 bales changing hands, partly at previous rates, but mostly at figures indicating an improvement of ⅛ to ¼c.; low middling sold at 26¾ and 27c., and strict low middling at 27 and 27¼c. The business was again mostly for Great Britain and France, buyers for the North operating to only a limited extent.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 12,850 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 703,007 bales, against 521,470 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 120,386 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 1,414 bales to France, a decrease of 271,657 to Great Britain, and of 25,486 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

SUGAR.—The market has shown more animation since our last review. A still better feeling has prevailed, generally, and there has been a fair demand for the local trade at firmer prices. The stock on hand is large. Some 500 hogsheads were sold on Saturday and Monday at 9c. per pound for inferior, 11¼ to 12¼c. for good common, 13 to 13½c. for fair, 13½c. for fully fair, 14c. for prime, and 16 to 16½c. for yellow clarified. On Tuesday 250 hogsheads sold at 10¾c. for common, 12¾c. for fair, and 13½ to 13⅝c. for fully fair.

MOLASSES.—The supplies are light and sell quite readily at full prices.

FLOUR.—Large supplies on the landing have depressed the market since our last review, and prices have declined about 25c. per barrel.

CORN.—The market has been quiet, with a fair supply at lower prices since our last review.

OATS.—The receipts being in excess of the demand, since our last review, prices have declined about 8 to 9c. per bushel.

BRAN.—We note a quiet but firm market at about previous prices, with no stock on the landing.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

OPELOUSAS RAILROAD.

The plot to force this company into bankruptcy because of its failure to meet its coupons has failed by the decision of Judge Durell, which was rendered on Tuesday. This decision is very gratifying to the public at large, who were greatly grieved to see so important an enterprise threatened with the expensive and devastating process of a passage through the Bankrupt Court. So far as the interests of the road and the attainment of the best end of all good citizens, its extension and completion, are concerned, these will be better subserved by the foreclosure of the mortgage and the sale of the road to parties who will be compelled to prosecute it. Here is a chance for the several parties who have manifested an ambition and desire to secure this valuable property. It will now go to the party who bids most for it.—Times.

The grand jury have found true bills against John P. Becker, recorder of the First District, and Captain H. T. White, of the detective force, for misdemeanor in office. The nature of the alleged offences has not yet been made public. In the last case we believe there is a charge of malfeasance in office.

The conflict between Warmoth, Governor, and Wickliffe, Auditor, has passed into the hands of the lawyers, who are making a prodigiously entangled, complex, and expensive case of it. No less than three distinct suits have grown out of the affair.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—House.—The conference committee on the tenure of office repeal have agreed. Character of the agreement unknown.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—Evening. Senate.—Discussing the proposed adjournment, Mr. Sumner said it was wrong to discuss it until the Georgia question in all its branches was settled.

Mr. Howe retorted that Congress had had plenty of time, and that, in addition to Congressional action and time, good sense was required.

Mr. Anthony had come to the conclusion to let Georgia take care of herself. He didn't think it necessary to do anything for Virginia, Texas or Mississippi this session. Those States don't seem willing to come in and he didn't think Congress could help it.

Mr. Sumner supposed then that Mr. Anthony proposed abandoning those States.

Mr. Anthony replied, "Only so far as I propose abandoning Massachusetts, Rhodo Island and other States."

Mr. Warner was unwilling to go home until the status of the excluded States was settled.

The conference report on the tenure of office repeal was adopted.

House.—Whittemore introduced a joint resolution postponing the Texas election. Referred to the Reconstruction Committee.

The Committee on Ways and Means was instructed to inquire into the expediency of reviving and enforcing direct tax in the lately rebellious States.

The conference report on the tenure of office question was adopted and goes to the President.

The Committee on Elections reported a resolution seating Sheldon from the second Louisiana district. Barr presented a minority report.

Butler presented a bill removing political disabilities from loyal people. Answering a question in regard to it Butler replied that it applied to everybody, to every loyal man. Ordered printed and referred to the Reconstruction Committee. The bill requires petition to the United States Court, appellant admitting that he believes the Confederate and State governments rebellious and treasonable, and that he truly repents acts done in maintenance thereof.

The Mississippi bill was discussed at great length, Farnsworth, Schenck and Dawes urging postponement. Adjourned.

A private dispatch from Macon, Georgia, announces that A. H. Stephens is on his death bed.

No Southern confirmations to-day.

A dispatch from the Indian Territory, via Camp Hays, reports that the supply trains sent Custar met his command, which for a week had subsisted on mules. Custar surprised three hundred lodges of the Cheyenne tribe, and captured several chiefs on a branch of the Red river. The war in that section is over.

The tenure of office bill as passed uses the word suspension in the sense of removal, and requires the President to nominate for vacancies within thirty days after the meeting of Congress.

The Attorney General decides that George A. Halsey, being a manufacturer and trader, is ineligible to the registership of the treasury under the law creating the treasury.

MADRID, March 31.—The Constitution has been amended. The king reigns for life, and the crown descends to his son, whose majority is fixed at eighteen years.

Commencement Exercises Medical Department, University of La.

Odd Fellows' Hall was crowded to overflowing yesterday morning at eleven o'clock, the hour fixed for the commencement exercises, the thirty-third anniversary of the Medical Department of the University of Louisiana. Jaeger's cornet band was stationed in the balcony, overlooking the east end of the hall, and discoursed in the interludes some choice selections from the Prophete, Don Juan, and Robert le Diable, winding up with the lively Sanitary Fair Galop. Upon the platform which had been erected at the same end of the hall, were seated the Hon. Randell Hunt, president of the university, and a number of members of the faculty and eminent citizens, among whom we observed Hon. A. S. Hennen, Dr. Stone, Mayor Conway, Dr. Labatut, Judge Rawle, Dr. Moss, Dr. James Jones, Thomas Sloo, Esq., and Dr. T. G Richardson, dean of the faculty. Seated in a semi-circle about the platform were the members of the graduating class, seventy-four in number, whose names are as follows:

William S. Allen, Texas; William H. Baird, Miss.; Charles Brooke, Miss.; Rollin T. Burr, La.; Gabriel B. Beaumont, Texas; Charles M. Blocke, Texas; David J. Cooper, La; Felix R. Graduate in Pharmacy.—Sebastian Hiriart, La.

Each of these gentlemen, as his name was called, stepped forward and received his degree from President Hunt. This ceremony being concluded, and the orchestra having played delightful interludes, Prof. Joseph Jones, M. D., delivered the salutatory address, which was listened to with profound attention by the audience. The speaker laid especial stress upon the subject of hygiene, considering the prevention of disease even more important than its treatment, and dwelt strongly, too, upon the necessity of an education of the moral faculties. His points were ably elucidated, and at the close of his remarks a loud applause followed him to his chair.

Dr. J. M. Cullen, on behalf of his classmates, spoke the valedictory address, which was brilliant with thought, and delivered in a finished style of oratory. The audience followed the valedictorian with breathless interest from the beginning to the end of his discourse, and at its close rewarded him with well-earned plaudits.

The exercises were then concluded by music, and the assemblage dispersed, evidently proud and gratified by the success which had characterized the occasion.—Crescent, Mar. 28.

LIFE IN A ROMISH CONVENT.

The case of "Saurin vs. Starr" has just been tried in the Court of Queen's Bench. During the trial dense crowds of people filled the court room, and all the approaches and New Palace yard.

It is a revelation of convent life in the Church of Rome made by Romanists themselves, by nuns, and priests and bishops, under oath in a court of justice.

Miss Susan M. Saurin, "in religion Sister Mary Scholastica," is the plaintiff. Her family is Irish, and she has a brother and an uncle in the priesthood and two sisters Carmelite nuns. She herself became a Sister of Mercy in 1851, in Dublin.

Mrs. Starr, the defendant, is Mother Superior of a Convent of the order in Yorkshire, having entered the order at the same time with Miss Saurin, and the latter lady was transferred to that convent from the house in Dublin.

Miss Saurin or "Sister Mary Scholastica" is not a runaway nun. On the other hand, it is her desire to remain a nun. Her complaint against the "Mother Superior" is that she attempted, by a course of ill treatment, to force her to leave the convent, and even went so far, with the consent of the bishop, as to get her absolved, entirely without her consent, from her vows, and so force her out of the "religious life."

The solicitor general, Sir John D. Coleridge, in opening the plaintiff's case, said the facts were strange and painful:

"They are strange and painful, first, as a revelation of human nature; they are strange and painful, next, as a revelation of female nature; and they are strange and painful, as well, as a revelation of conventual female nature, showing what women are capable of when they shut themselves up from their kind, and shut out the instincts of their better nature, and what mean and petty cruelties they can wreak upon their sister women, and that in the name of the God of love, and under the supposed sanction of that blessed religion the Divine Author of which died on the cross to show His deep tenderness for the world which was disposed to reject Him. This is no common Exeter Hall kind of exposure; it is no ultra-Protestant revelation. This is no indiscriminate attack upon the belief and practices of the largest body of Christians in the world. The plaintiff and defendants are Roman Catholics alike. They are alike devoted to the belief and practices of the Roman Catholic Church."

It appeared on the trial that the "Mother Superior" had ordered "Sister Scholastica" to tell her what she had confessed to the priest, her director. The sister refused this as contrary to the rules of the church, and this seems to have been the beginning of a course of miserable petty tyranny, such as a woman only can inflict on a woman—a tyranny descending to the degree of compelling Miss Saurin to eat mouldy bread, sleep without sufficient clothing, to kiss the floor, and worse than all, perhaps, considering that a nun is still a woman, to wear an old rag on her head instead of a cap.

The persistent ingenuity by which this poor woman was tortured for years is something diabolical. Her health was at last utterly ruined by bad food, insufficient covering, and the terrorism under which she lived.

Here is an extract from one of the poor things' "confessions" to the "Mother Superior:"

"May I beg a little cotton and wool to mend our stockings—a little black and white cotton. I did not know whether, dear reverend mother, you meant to get my winter habit. The other is in complete rags, but Sister Mary Agnes said one was enough. I felt the cold very much for the past winter. I often had to get M. Clare to tie my bonnet and coif strings; but if you wish me to have but one, all right. It is well patched, but looks badly. Dear reverend mother, I have suffered very much from constant pain in my back. If any message is coming I shall feel grateful for something."

The solicitor general said he would not comment upon that letter. Nor would he say that in the perverse and wretched cruelty practiced toward this poor girl, they did not think they were perfectly right. Her father was dangerously ill. She was not permitted to know it. Her letters were kept from her, and she was ordered not to write home oftener than once a year. Passages in the letters from her father were blotted out. Her brother, a Jesuit priest, wrote to her, and his letters were not delivered to her. In 1863 another brother died. All knowledge of the fact, although communicated by letter, was kept from her, and when she was told of the painful event months after it occurred, she was immediately sent to work on hearing it. In fact, the case would show a fertile ingenuity in the art of persecution and petty cruelty which I think I may say would not be possible in the other sex.

In Miss Saurin's evidence she testifies to the following among other specimens of "motherly" and "sisterly" kindness. This begins immediately after her refusal to tell the "Mother Superior" her confessions:

"She was dissatisfied with and disapproved of almost everything I did. Some work had been sent from Hull for me to do, and she obliged me to cut it out and prepare it on Sundays. I never saw work done before on a Sunday in a convent. The usual time for rising was half-past five o'clock, and ten o'clock at night for retiring to bed. Mrs. Starr ordered me to get up about three o'clock in the morning for several mornings to get this work done. I went to her cell one night, and said, 'Reverend mother, what in the world am I doing that gives you so much displeasure? I am trying my best to please you, and give you satisfaction. If you tell me anything more that I can do I will try and do it.' She replied, 'I allow you too much liberty, and I am determined to pull you down.' My mother and brother called upon me. I was teaching in the school at the time, and saw them arrive. I sent a girl from the school to answer the bell. In a few minutes Mrs. McOwne came to me in the school and ordered me to go to my cell. She told me my mother and brother had come, but that she could not allow me to see them, as Mrs. Starr had given her directions to that effect. My mother saw me, and came and embraced me, but as I had not leave to speak to her I passed on as quickly as I could without speaking to her, Mrs. McOwne following me to my cell She desired me to close the door of the cell and said she would send my mother and brother away. I asked her to let me see my mother, because I thought she would not leave without seeing me; but she said she could not, and closed the door and she went away. She returned in five minutes, saying my mother had brought an order from Mrs. Starr, and I went to my mother at the end of the corridor. My mother clasped me in her arms and exclaimed, 'My child, are they going to make a prisoner of you?' Mrs. McOwne tried to excuse herself by saying she was obliged by Mrs. Starr to refuse her seeing me.—From this time there was a very great change in Mrs. McOwne's deportment toward me. She took away all my writing materials in the desk, which also contained the letters I had received from my family. The letters have never been returned to me. The other sister, Mrs. King, appeared to be watching me. She was with me wherever I went. I was ordered to change my cell to the one opposite Mrs. McOwne's, and she frequently, in the night, opened the door and came in."

It will be remembered that Miss Saurin is a lady "of very good family," and the solicitor general words it in the dialect of the English. She says:

"I now had to clean the stoves and grates in the school. The reception room and the stairs I had also to keep clean. The floors had to be waxed and polished, and I had to wash also the steps of the front door when I could not get a little girl to do them for me. I had also to keep clean a couple of flagged areas in front of the house. I had to clean the closet of the school if I could not get any of the children to do it. I often had to do it. It was unusual work for a Community Sister to do. I have known them to do it voluntarily, but I never knew it put upon them systematically. I taught in the school from nine until twelve, and again from one till half-past three, and again in the night school for two hours, from six till eight. Besides that I had to prepare for the needlework classes. When I omitted to do any of these things, or if they were improperly done, Mrs. McOwne reproved me before the other sisters very severely, and I had to acknowledge my faults on my knees after the lecture.

"At meals, the witness went on to say, she had not the same food as the other sisters. She generally had a piece of uncooked mutton; for a long time she had only a piece about the size of a crown piece. That was all she had for the day. The bread I had was stale. It was kept alone for me till it got dry. I recollect one piece being put on the table seven or eight days following for me to use from. On one occasion the bread was mouldy, and I spoke about it, but it was still kept for my use, and I had to use it the next meal. The sisters looked upon my leaving the bread as a fault against poverty and mortification, and I apologized for it. The day when I went to Hull a hair mattress was in my cell, but the following day a hard flock one was substituted. I never had a cell to myself. There was always one, and sometimes two, sisters with me. I had not sufficient bedclothes to keep me warm in winter, and I had to put my day clothing on the bed. Mrs. Starr heard of it, and she frequently came to my cell and threw them off the bed. In October, 1865, additional clothing was served out to the sisters preparatory to the winter. I had none. I complained of the cold, and Mrs. Starr said I must bear it for my sins. There is a rule that when we go out we shall wear gloves. Mine were taken away, and two odd ones were substituted. One had to be turned to fit the other hand. My hands were sore with the work I had to do—they were covered with chilblains and cuts. One of the sisters told me to put candle-grease on them I did so, when Mrs. Starr rebuked me for using the candle-grease without permission. I believe I had some punishment for it."

The Lord Chief Justice, naturally enough, wanted to know if their rules were so strict that a sister could not put a little candle-grease on a sore finger without the consent of the superior. Miss Saurin replied that she had never heard they were, but Mrs. Starr herself pulled off the rags tied round her sores, and compelled her to put a brass thimble on the cut finger! She says "it pained me very much!"

At this time, with these poor chill blained hands, she says:

"I had three corridors to sweep and dust every day, and the three altars, fourteen stations of the cross, closets and stone hall, two pair of stairs, the sink and the doors and windows generally. I was also called upon to empty a large dust-box. I had further to sweep the walls and do needle work. On several times Mrs Starr called me from mass and chapel to clean the closet. I had to carry the dust-box across the yard, and was exposed to the children and externs. Mrs. Starr thought I had not sufficiently dusted some chairs in the community-room. She took the duster to put over my head. I told her it was wet. She sent Mrs. Kerr to dry it, and then Mrs. Starr put it over my veil, and I was obliged to wear it all day—in the chapel and at meal times. It was a soiled duster. The corridor was covered with cocoa matting, which required three to carry it. I was directed to take it into the yard by myself and dust it. It had been swept into the corridor up to that time. I had to drag it down stairs, and then get it up again, without any assistance. If I was late in my duties, I had to acknowledge it as a fault before the sisters. I was not supplied with proper materials for all this cleaning. I was only allowed one duster. I washed the duster in the sink by Mrs. Starr's orders, and it was made a charge against me before the commission."

All this was done to force her to leave the convent. The poor woman was brought up to believe that to leave the convent was to be lost. She was determined on a "religious life." She was willing to endure anything, rather than to be compelled to go out into the world she had renounced seventeen years before. So the refined torture gets keener.

"Mrs. Starr and Mrs. Kennedy came to my cell about five o'clock on the morning of the 12th of February. Mrs. Starr advanced to my bed and said, 'I want all your religious dress. You are to leave the convent to-day.' Mrs. Kennedy secured the greatest part of it, and Mrs. Starr took the rosary and cincture that were at the head of the bed, and part of a secular dress was left for me to wear, which I refused to put on. Later in the day, about eight o'clock, Mrs. Starr came to me with Mrs. Kennedy and a number of the sisters. She read to me as if from a letter that the bishop had dispensed me, counting from the first ten masses after I received notice. Whether I would or not, I was to be got rid of at the shortest possible notice. She said, 'Will you go?' I replied, 'I will not. I would rather die than leave the convent of my own free will, but it pleased God to leave me at her mercy and she might do as she pleased.' She said, 'I can't put you out.' I said, 'I will die where I am.' This occurred in my cell when I was sitting up in bed. Mrs. Kennedy threatened me with all kinds of vengeance from God and the bishop. Mrs. Starr checked her. They then all left. Mrs. Starr afterwards came to my cell with a secular dress. I refused to put it on and it was taken away. She came in again with lay Sister Mary Collingwood, and said she could not have me with the sisters, and that I must go to the bath-room. Mrs. Starr followed me there. I remained there until April. I had no fire allowed me. It was very cold. A sister was with me day and night. The sisters had plenty of warm clothes and hot water bottles for their feet. Mrs. Starr took away a piece of carpet I had for warmth. I was in April removed to an attic by direction of Mrs. Kennedy, where I found Mrs. Starr. It was always used as a lumber room, and it was very dirty. The bed in it was dirty, and I had to use the sheets that had been used by me in the bath room from the previous February."

In this attic she was kept a strict prisoner for some weeks. By this time the poor woman's health was utterly broken down. Her brother came to see her, and found her unable to be removed. He called in a distinguished physician, Sir Henry Cooper, who testified that he found Miss Saurin in a wretched condition of bodily exhaustion and helplessness, from want and cold and ill-treatment.

Father Matthew, a priest, and uncle of the plaintiff, confirms her statement about intercepted letters, and being prevented seeing his niece, and her brother, Pat. Saurin, about her wretched condition when found.

Dr. O'Hanlon, librarian of Maynooth College, who had been one of a sort of commission about this matter before it came into court, could not be found, although subpœnaed. He had taken care to be out of the way, and the court suggested that "perhaps he had taken a pleasure trip to South America!"

As an instance of the sort of terrorism under which these people live, it is sufficient to say that Father Saurin, a brother of the unfortunate woman, found it convenient to keep company with Father Hanlon, and shun the subpœna also. His sister's misery could not induce this precious brother to be present to see her righted, because the case would bring scandal upon the church!

Several letters were put in evidence. The following is an extract from one of Miss Saurin's to the bishop. It is the cry of a sick body and a broken heart:

"My cross is a heavy one; I am alone and desolate—alone with God. I placed the whole matter in the adorable heart of Christ, and of His loving mother. * * * He will never send me out into a world I have never loved. Never, never; or allow me to be driven from a religious life after sixteen years, nearly half my life. Pray ask the reverend mother in charity to allow me a little time alone, and a pen, ink and paper, to prepare for my trial. Once more I ask your lordship to be present."

We have given these extracts, several specimens only of what we find in the English papers about this remarkable trial.—American Churchman.

BRUTAL MURDER.—We were inexpressibly shocked last night to hear of the shooting, by a man whose name our informant could not give us, of the Rev. Samuel Anthony, one of the oldest and most respected ministers of the Methodist Church in this State.

The tragedy was enacted at Andersonville, just before the arrival of the up train on the Southwestern road. It seems that Mr. Anthony had gone to Andersonville to marry a couple, and, while in the middle of the ceremony was interrupted by the step-father of the lady, who ordered him to desist. He remonstrated with the intruder, telling him it was too late then, and that he ought not to be guilty of such conduct. The man's response was the raising and firing, at almost point blank range, of a double barrel shot gun loaded with buckshot, the entire load taking effect in the lower part of his victim's stomach. The brave old man fell to the floor, but by a tremendous effort raised himself up, and saying, "I will finish the job," proceeded with the ceremony, and pronounced the couple man and wife. He then fell down completely exhausted, and when the cars left was expected to die every moment.

Our informant could not learn what became of the murderer.—Macon (Ga.) Journal and Messenger

BLESSING IN DISGUISE.

Mine eyes were stained with the last night's tears,
And my brow ached too heavily to weep,
Oppress with sorrow past and future fears,
Too weary to awake—too sad to sleep.

With listless hand I drew away the blind
To look where lay the morning dull and gray;
I heard no whisper of the cold night wind,
I saw no gleam to chase the gloom away.

Spread like a morning veil on every hill,
Hung cheerless mist through which the dark dawn crept;
The rain-drops on the trees lay cold and still,
Like tears of one who in his sleep hath wept.

Sadly I turned and laid me down again
Till sorrow's leaden trance my sense did stenl,
As those who, lulled by very strength of pain,
Forget their pain awhile, and cease to feel.

So passed the hours away, and I awoke;
But while I slept the world had traveled on—
The damp mist rolled away, the morning broke,
And, pouring radiance forth, up rose the sun.

The purple hills were tinged with living light,
The grass was waving in the morning breeze,
Like sparkling gems the rain-drops of the night
In rainbow showers were glittering from the trees.

Then my heart melted too, and the deep gloom
Passed like the dreary morning mist away;
The sun shone warm and bright into my room;
And I rose up from my dull trance to pray.

O God, most merciful! 'tis ever so:
While thankless man feels but the present pain,
And lies steeped in the weariness of woe,
Thy step is drawing near to heal again.

Then teach us, Lord, to bow beneath the rod,
Even for the chastisement to love the more;
To trust the mercy of the loving God,
And in the very blow His hand adore.

So shall we walk through our life's chequered day,
Safe from its noontide heat, its evening blight,
Till the last hour of gloom shall pass away,
And leave us to awake to endless light.

—Good Words.

To the Younger Members of My Conference.

Some weeks ago I was listening to an address by General Hill, on the character of Stonewall Jackson, when the speaker pronounced: "No self-indulgent man was ever great."

The statement was so true, so important and so well fitted in to the thread of his lecture, that it struck me all over. I took out my pencil and wrote it down. It was a thing I always knew, but had perhaps never well appreciated and applied it.

"No self-indulgent man was ever great." And it ought to have been added that no self-indulgent man ever reached, nor half way reached, his own natural measure of greatness. He was not only not great, but not half so great as nature intended him to be. Self-conquest, self-denial, self-control, is the only way possible by which any man can reach his own natural stature. How many men never rise half way to their own measure!

This is chargable more to "needless self-indulgence" than to any other one thing. Perhaps this may be considered too late, in this advanced condition of the church, to talk about such old-fashioned things as "needless self-indulgence." I hope my dear young brethren will not think so. Some of us expect to talk about needless self-indulgence as long as we talk about anything. It is one of the heaviest clogs upon our inside wheels.

The man who does not "keep his body under," with his mind and will uppermost—who does not perform the great work of self-conquest—is, at most, but half a man. He is a large, athletic child of fifty years old. Nevertheless, he may be a prodigy—a very great and smart child—but never fills the caliber intended for him. He does not run. He scarcely creeps in the race set before him. A man of one-tenth his weight outweighs him.

If self-indulgence could be kept to one's self it would not do one-tenth the harm it does. Then it would ruin but one man. Now it ruins a score. It is very contagious.

I am sorry I do not remember the name of the gentleman with whom I lodged in Norfolk, at the Virginia Conference, in 1860. My friend, Dr. William A. Smith, now of Missouri, my room-mate, will well remember. Our friend says: "There is one law of this city that I enforce. That law must be observed. No Methodist preacher can smoke out of doors in my sight. I take the cigar from his mouth with my own hand, and put it in the gutter. Let him come to my counting room, and there he will find plenty, and the best." That is the law of Norfolk; and our friendly merchant read the law to a number of us with emphasis and by authority.

He was willing the preachers might, of themselves, be self-indulgent, but in his town they should not advertise themselves the patrons of self-indulgence openly to the world.

The logicians tell us a thing is proved when the best evidence the nature of the case admits of is adduced in its support. Then a preacher with a cigar in his mouth proves that "needless self-indulgence" still lingers in the church.

I have neither homily nor argument to make about tobacco; but because I feel a great and abiding interest in the welfare, usefulness and prosperity of the young men for whom I now write, I will, since I have touched it, merely remind you of a few unquestionable truths known to everybody. I make no argument. That would suppose a possible difference of opinion. I find common-places and truisms enough to occupy me. Here are a few things which everybody knows and nobody will question:

1. A preacher chewing or smoking gives the best evidence the nature of the case admits of "needless self-indulgence."

2. It always lowers him in the estimation of everybody, smokers and all. This rule never fails.

3. The moral drift of the church is against it, by solemn premeditation against it; and no man can stem that drift.

4. It is a dagger in the breast of the best and most pious mothers, who see their boys following a bad example.

5. It is barely tolerated, but never approved, even by persons of the loosest notions of good behavior.

6. "Filthy" is the descriptive adjective universally applied to it by everybody. Ergo: "filthy" Christians, "filthy" preachers.

7. I have heard the boy of ten years reply: "Why, ma, Brother —— smokes!" And her tears gushed out irrepressibly as she attempted the awkward task of a half apology for her pastor, whose example she had too hastily recommended to her boy, together with a lesson on Christian morals and decency to him.

8. I do not believe either the Saviour or his apostles smoked or chewed, or that they would recommend either to us now.

9. I beg pardon for my bad etymology. "Chaw" is the proper word, rhyming with saw, and not chew. Look in Webster: "A low and vulgar word." Hence its proper application. While we chew beefsteak, we chaw tobacco. Let the literature be right.

10. Some things "needlessly noted in my diary" are more than "needlessly" taken thence.

11. I saw a preacher, now in high position, and never in a low one, led out of a gentleman's parlor with: "Excuse me, sir; my wife don't allow me to smoke here." I felt mortified.

12. Whenever any minister quits the "filthy practice" everybody rejoices, and calls it a reform.

13. Does ministerial character among us need to be elevated or depressed? Which had we better do?

14. "No self-indulgent man was ever great!"

BIOGRAPHICAL.

SAMUEL DAVIS, the subject of this sketch, was born in Bryant county, Georgia, April 11, 1795, and died at his residence, near Americus, Jackson county, Mississippi, December 26, 1868, aged seventy-three years, eight months and fifteen days.

In 1811, while in the vigor of youth, Judge Davis moved to the community then known as Pascagoula parish, Louisiana Territory, where he spent his long and useful life.

February 1, 1821, he was married to Miss Susanna Goff, with whom he lived in peace and happiness until his death, and who now, in age and widowhood, mourns her bereavement.

In 1826 Brother Davis embraced religion, and the year following cast his lot with the people of God by uniting with the Methodist Episcopal Church. From that time, during the remainder of his life, he walked before God with a pure heart and willing mind, serving the church, as occasion required, either as class leader, steward or Sabbath school superintendent. When possible, his seat was filled in the church, and the minister always met a hearty welcome at his house. By his Christian bearing and upright course among men, he gained the entire confidence of his fellow-citizens, and received positions of trust and profit at their hands. Having, to the entire satisfaction of his numerous friends, discharged the duties of the office of clerk of the Circuit and Probate Court for twenty years, commencing in 1833, he was afterward elected probate judge, and occupied that important position for eleven years before his death.

No man had more friends or stood higher as an active and useful citizen than Judge Davis. The sickness with which he died was protracted for many months, and his suffering was great, but he bore it all with patience, and could say to the last: the will of the Lord be done. Time and again he expressed his willingness to die. He was anxious to depart and be with Christ. While lying on his bed of languishing, being unable to sit up, he would frequently request that the songs of Zion be sung, sometimes singing himself, and often rejoiced in the love of God. As the disease advanced his mind became impaired; and for some weeks before his death he was exceedingly flighty; but no cloud for a moment ever intervened between him and his God. On the 26th of December last his earthly course was finished. He breathed out his life in perfect peace, and died in the arms of Jesus. His aged companion, eight children, fifty-three grand-children and four great grand-children are left to mourn their loss. But they sorrow not as those who have no hope.

MRS. HATTIE H. TURNER, wife of John T. Turner and daughter of Colonel C. P. Newell, all of Carroll county, Mississippi, died March 3, 1869, being nineteen years and nine months old.

Sister Turner was a young woman of great worth. Her character was as complete as any I have had an account of in many a day—kind, conscientious, cheerful, devout, determined. She enjoyed religion.—She loved God, and served him because she loved him.

She delighted in the Sunday school and in the solemn services of the sanctuary. In the social and in the domestic circle she was happy, exemplary and useful as a Christian. She was a great comfort to her parents, who are excellent Christian people. The old father, weeping, said with touching emphasis:—"Never a man lost a better child. I never had to strike her, or even lecture her."

"Some feelings are to mortals given,
With less of earth in them than heaven;
And if there be a human tear
From passion's drops, refined and clear,
A tear so limpid and so meek,
It would not stain an angel's cheek,
'Tis that which pious fathers shed
Upon a dutious daughter's head."

About two years ago she was married. On going to her new home, when the hour for evening prayer arrived, she handed the Bible to her husband and said: "Now we are both Christians. Let us keep up our religion at home." Her husband according in the sentiment, the family altar was ever precious to the pious pair.

It should be stated to parents that this excellent woman had from childhood been taught the holy Scriptures.

She joined the Methodist Church when fourteen years old. Her death was sudden. Two days before she was visiting a neighbor. It would seem superfluous to say of such an one that her end was peace. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." Heaven is the abode of such spirits.

JNO. A. ELLIS.

MRS. NANNIE M. FOUST, wife of Rev. J. E. Foust and daughter of Isaac W. and Martha Sadler, of Jefferson county, Alabama, was born May 22, 1841, and died in Wilcox county, Alabama, on the 5th of March, 1869, in her twenty-eighth year.

Nannie professed religion when but a child, and immediately joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South; and though young in years, she was an ornament to the church from that day to the day of her death. Her early piety was the result of home influences; and while it afforded such comfort to her parents, at the same time it gives an illustrious comment upon the training of children in early life. Her parents seemed to have the right views upon the subject of bringing up children, for Nannie was not only properly instructed at home, but when it became necessary for her to be sent off for a more extensive education than she could obtain in her own neighborhood, she was sent to a church school, where all religious parents should send their children.

She was educated at the Centenary Institute, Summerfield, Alabama. She did not merely go to school there, but was educated, as her successful career as a teacher abundantly attests. She was delighted with teaching as an avocation, and hence a good deal of her time, after leaving school, was given to that work. She was particularly fond of teaching the solid and useful branches, such as languages and mathematics. I have very pleasant recollections of her as a pupil of the Centenary Institute during my connection with the college, for I am sure I never had occasion to find fault with her deportment or scholarship, and whenever I met her in after-life I found her the fast friend of church schools.

Brother Foust has been within my district going on two years, and I confess it was no small pleasure to me, on my visits to his circuit, to meet and commune with his pious and lovely wife. And how often have I been made to think, if not exclaim, when mingling with them: Happy man! What a treasure has he found in a companion, for "she has done him good, and not evil, all the days of his married life." She was peculiarly fitted to be the wife of an itinerant preacher, for while from her social and educational advantages she was an ornament to the most cultivated society, from her meekness and congeniality she was the pride and pleasure of the lower walks. Owing to these traits of character, in an eminent degree, it is scarcely necessary to add that she was greatly beloved by the people on their several charges, and that she will be greatly missed and deeply deplored by the people on Peach Tree circuit. She was a help to her husband, an active Sunday school agent, an example to the flock and an ornament to society. But, with all her virtues, she is gone—gone, whither she did not indicate in words, but her blameless life for almost a score of years plainly declares she has gone to the society of the good, where she awaits, with pleasing expectation, the arrival of those she has left behind. We bow with quiet submission to the strange providence which has taken her from our midst so suddenly in the very prime of life—so useful to the church, so necessary to her husband's happiness, and such a comfort and solace to all who knew her. May her bereaved parents and deeply afflicted husband be enabled to say with us, "Good is the will of the Lord," and unite with Hervey in singing:

"Good when He gives—supremely good;
Nor less when he denies.
E'en crosses from His sovereign hand
Are blessings in disguise."

THE ENVELOPE SYSTEM.

EDITOR OF AMERICAN CHURCHMAN: Will you publish, if you please, the enclosed letter, as other parishes may be glad to adopt the system which it so clearly sets forth—with Easter.

The publication of the letter has been delayed until at last a brief experience of another parish could be added to the list of those which adopt this method. It is now five months since St. John's, St. Louis, has adopted it, and thus far with encouraging results. It has nearly doubled the congregation, while it has added materially to the income of the parish. It has also brought in all classes of people.

One of the leading Presbyterian societies of this city has already copied from St. John's, and introduced the system with great satisfaction.

With the hope that this or some other method will be generally adopted to the banishment of buying and selling the floor of a house dedicated and consecrated to the Lord, very truly yours,

J. P. T. INGRAHAM,
Rector of St. John's,
St. Louis, Mo.

ST. JAMES', MILWAUKEE, WIS.,
July 31, A. D. 1868.

To the Rev. J. P. T. Ingraham, St. Louis, Mo.:

REV. AND DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of the 27th instant, making inquiry as to the method and working of what is known as the "envelope system" in this parish, and to forward you a brief statement of my views concerning its efficiency and success, both in a spiritual and pecuniary point of view.

The method used in this parish is substantially that introduced in the year 1862. Seats are assigned, on application, to any who choose to ask for them, and choice given to the applicant out of all unoccupied pews. There is no pew rent, or assessment of any kind, upon this seat, but the occupant is expected to give "according as God hath prospered him," at the Offertory on each Sunday morning. In order to secure system and regularity in these offerings, the offerer is requested to state the minimum amount which he can give every Lord's day, which amount is noted by the Committee of the Vestry having charge of the assignment. It is to be increased as much as possible at all times, and may be lessened at any time by simply giving notice to the committee that such decrease has become necessary. The committee then place in the pew selected an envelope marked with the name of the occupant, and the number of the seat, and each Sunday morning the offering is put in this envelope, placed in the alms basin, and presented on the altar. After the service the collection is given to the treasurer or senior warden, who (with the clerk of the vestry) opens the envelopes, and credits each with the amount of his or her offering as found enclosed. An exact account is thus kept with each person, and arrearages can at any time be ascertained by simply applying to the treasurer or clerk of the vestry. The result of this method is to secure system and regularity on the part of the worshipers, and to enable the vestry to make their calculations of receipts and expenditures upon a reliable basis.

The method has with us proved most successful in these several particulars:

1. In gathering into the church many who would absent themselves from a pewed church, on the ground that they could not pay pew rents. The church is free to all who will occupy it.

2. In securing a larger annual income than could possibly be obtained by pew rents. The principle established by our Lord himself, "Freely ye have received, freely give," when once admitted, operates alike upon the hearts of rich and poor, and secures a much larger amount in the year's aggregate than could possibly be collected by any sexton, treasurer, or committee. The annual income from St. James' church, containing only seventy-eight pews, has for the last three years averaged nearly $3,000. The pledges ranged from ten cents to $10 per Sunday.

3. The people once trained in the system of joining their "prayers and their alms," as an act of worship, will give for any other object with the same free and ready liberality. Evidence of this is afforded in this parish by their raising and paying out within the last fourteen months over $38,000, without selling or leasing a foot of the new church, even having resorted to a fair or any other expedient. All has been given outright, and, I trust, for Jesus' sake.

We propose to continue this "envelope system" in the new church, and could not, at this present time, be induced to adopt any other. The only objection, if it can be called an objection, is that on account of the Offertory being appropriated to parochial expenses, there is no opportunity for other collections to be made at morning service. I meet this difficulty by having a separate pledge for charitable purposes, which amount is deposited every Sunday morning in a box at the door of the church. This plan has worked well thus far, giving us a charitable fund of upward of $ per annum. Another plan suggested is, to have separate envelopes for this purpose, both to be laid in the alms basin every Sunday morning.

I have thus hastily tried to answer your inquiries, and hope the answer may be intelligible and satisfactory. I shall be most happy to answer any other questions which you may address me, as fully as it is in my power.

I am ever, very truly and respectfully yours,

JOHN WILKINSON.

THE CHINESE.

HOW THEY TALK ABOUT THEM IN CALIFORNIA.

We copy as follows from the San Francisco Herald of February 28th:

There is a growing feeling of indignation in this community at the utter disregard not only of decency, but of all our laws, recently exhibited by the Chinese. It is horrible to reflect that politicians are pursuing a course that renders it even possible for these creatures to obtain a share in our government—perhaps a controlling interest in our elections. For a long time past they have exhibited a peaceful, almost a submissive spirit, rarely committing any greater offense than pilfering expressmen's trifles; but suddenly they have changed their conduct, and for months past the courts have been burthened with investigations of their crimes—investigations that come to naught, for these people have no regard for the sanctity of an oath, and perjure themselves by wholesale. They have introduced in our Christian city the barbarous practices of their native land. They do not hesitate to hatch conspiracies, abduct and assassinate, and what is still worse, they employ an organized gang of bravos to slay their enemies or rivals, and gauge the reward according to the punishment that may be inflicted upon the slayer. A Chinaman can be paid to assassinate, even with the death penalty staring him in the face, and can coolly stipulate for the price of his neck to be paid to his relatives in case he is hung.

Although a cowardly race when pitted man against man in mortal fight, yet do they display the most extraordinary stolidity and indifference when execution is about to be done upon them. In their own country a line of fifty criminals, condemned to be decapitated, will sink upon their knees without coercion, bend their heads forward so as to expose their necks, and stoically await the stroke of the executioner's sword. They hear the dull, heavy thud of one end of the line, and see the ghastly head roll upon the pavement, without a shudder. Sometimes the executioner stops midway in the line to resharpen his sword. They listen without a tremor, and as he approaches them closely and their turn comes next they adjust their necks more conveniently for the stroke. There is nothing about this of the spirit that sometimes actuates a Caucasian criminal "to die game." It is simply brutish stolidity. Creatures like these once aroused to the commission of crime, are eminently dangerous in a community, for the death that threatens them from the law has no terrors to restrain them. It is said they have carried their barbarous practices to such an extent in this city as to offer large rewards for the heads of their enemies. What can be done with such a people? They are soulless, conscienceless, devilish. Their vile passions, long kept in restraint from submission to the moral influence of the white man, are now breaking forth in barbaric fury. They openly defy our laws, and with brazen impudence insult our civilization. Let us exhaust all the resources of the law to restrain them, and if they fail, let us advise them to return home.

POPULARIZING ART.

LITHOGRAPHY.

The impatience of a German washerwoman led to the invention of lithography. The history of that elegant art begins with a homely domestic scene, which occurred at Munich about the year 1793, and in which three characters figured—Madame Senefelder, the poor widow of an excellent actor, then recently deceased; her son, Alois Senefelder, aged twenty-two, a young man of some inventive turn; and the impatient washerwoman just mentioned. The washerwoman had called at the house of this widow for the weekly "wash," but the "list" was not ready, and the widow asked her son to take it. He looked about the room for a piece of paper upon which to write it, without being able to find the least fragment, and he noticed also that his ink was dry. Washerwomen are not apt to be scrawled by such customers, and this one certainly did not conceal her impatience while the fruitless search was proceeding. The young man had in the apartment a smooth, soft, cream colored stone, such as lithographers now use. He had also a mass of paste made of lampblack, wax, soap and water. In the hurry of the moment he dashed upon the soft, smooth stone the short list of garments, using for the purpose this awkward lump of oily paste. The washerwoman went off with her small bundle of clothes; peace was restored to the family, and the writing on the stone remained.

To understand how so trifling a circumstance caused the invention of lithography, it is necessary to know why this young man had in his house that flat, smooth stone and that soapy black lump, and how it happened that his ink was dry, and that not the smallest piece of paper could be found in the room. If it is humiliating to the pride of man to learn what a great part accident plays in discoveries, we are somewhat reassured when we perceive that it is only a specially trained, active, penetrating human intelligence which can interpret and follow up the hint which accident gives. Our washerwoman, reader, might drive us raving mad with her impatience, but I fear we should never invent anything remarkable in consequence. But this Alois Senefelder was prepared for his washerwoman by previous experiment and brooding thought.

He had been a law student to please his father; but upon his father's death the poverty of the family compelled him to abandon a distasteful pursuit, and he hastened to try the stage. The coldness of the audience announced to him that he had not inherited his father's talent, and the manager could only offer him the position of supernumerary, which he accepted. While performing silent parts, he devised speeches and situations for more gifted actors. Some of his plays were performed, and with such success that he deemed it worth while to print them; and this led to his becoming intimately conversant with the whole art and mystery of printing. Having plenty of leisure, and a plentiful lack of everything else, it occurred to him to try and save expense by printing his own plays; and, with that end in view, he proceeded to experiment with sealing wax, wood and other substances. Not succeeding in getting a good impression from wax or wood, he attempted to engrave a copper-plate by the aid of aqua-fortis. But before applying this biting liquid, he had to cover his copperplate with the varnish that engravers use for the purpose, and write upon it a page of print backwards; he made many mistakes; and one mistake might spoil a most laboriously written page. To lessen this difficulty, he contrived the mixture of wax, soap, lampblack and water, referred to above, with which he used to cover over his errors, and write upon it the correct word. This accounts for his having in his house so unusual a mixture, which was, in fact, an oily pencil—one of the essentials of the art, then unknown, of taking impressions from a writing or drawing upon stone.

He succeeded, at length, in getting a tolerable proof of one page from his copperplate. But plates of polished copper are expensive, and the poor German playwright could not continue his experiments with them. In the neighborhood of Munich the slabs of soft stone, since used by lithographers, are found; and now occurred to the experimenter to try and engrave his works upon them. It is a lime stone, which, though soft when taken from the quarry, hardens after exposure to the air. He cut some letters upon the surface of one of the slabs which he had brought with his own hands from the banks of the Inn; but the result was not encouraging, and he only waited for his purse to be replenished to continue his experiments upon copper. Meanwhile he used to cover his flat stone with engraver's varnish, and upon the surface thus prepared practice writing backwards. On the morning of the washerwoman's visit he had in his room a stone which he had been roughening a little to receive the varnish, and it lay before him fresh and clean. Every scrap of paper in the house he had used in taking proofs—from his copperplate and engraved stones; and the ink of this dramatic author was dry because, in his eagerness to print, he had ceased to write.—Hence it was that, to get rid of an impatient washerwoman, he wrote the list of clothes upon a surface of limestone with a soapy, waxy pencil. The wax was of no importance. The secret of what followed was that he had written upon limestone with a pencil of which grease was an ingredient.

In fact, the whole art of lithography and chromo-lithography depends upon two facts of chemistry—that water and oil will not mix, and that oil and lime will.

Before rubbing out his hasty scrawl, it occurred to him to try whether the letters would resist aqua-fortis; a weak dilution of which he poured over the stone, and let it remain wet for five minutes. He found, or fancied, that the aqua-fortis had eaten away the stone to the depth of one line, leaving the letters in slight relief. His next thought was to see if it were possible to take an impression of his list upon paper. After many experiments and failures, he succeeded in contriving a method by which he could cover his letters with ink, and keep the rest of the surface clean. He found it was only necessary to wet the whole surface of the stone before applying his inking pad. The film of water kept the oily printer's ink from adhering to the stone, but did not keep it from adhering to the letters written upon the stone with soap and lampblack. He laid his paper upon the stone, applied the requisite pressure, and lo! an excellent proof of his washing list! Lithography was invented. The process was complete. It only remained to devise apparatus for executing it with facility and dispatch.

The great secrets of the art are these three: 1. A limestone surface; 2. An oily pencil in drawing upon that surface; 3. Wetting the stone before putting on the oily printing ink.

Every one familiar with the history of inventions can guess perfectly well what next befell this inventor without being told. It is ever the same old story. After reducing himself very near the verge of starvation by continuing his experiments, and being at his wits' end, a man who had been drawn as a conscript in a neighboring province offered him $50 if he would serve in his stead. Senefelder accepted the offer, but, upon presenting himself at the station, he was rejected as a foreigner, and compelled to return to Munich. Then he revealed his secret to the court musician, and represented to him how well adapted the new process was to the printing of music, which was then only printed upon copperplates at great cost. The court musician was convinced. He joined the inventor in setting up at Munich the first lithographic establishment that ever existed in the world; where, amid poverty and discouragement, Senefelder toiled on, inventing presses, utensils, processes and methods, patiently developing the art which he had created. Of course, the engravers and draughtsmen of that day either pooh-poohed lithography as something contemptible and transitory, or denounced it as inimical to the interests of art; and we may be sure that some of the art critics of the time smiled derision upon the inventor's exertions, and maintained that the slightest sketch from an artist's hands was more to be desired than the best lithograph which mechanism could assist in producing. It is mentioned, as an evidence of the slight importance attached to the new art, that on one occasion the Academy of Munich voted to Senefelder and his partner the sum of twelve florins to aid them in their experiments. The inventor, however, as inventors frequently do, triumphed at length over foes and friends, and, after about twenty years of unrequited labor, secured a small but sufficient share of the results of his invention.

He lived to the year 1834. I am assured by the most eminent lithographer of the United States, that Senefelder created almost the entire process, as now conducted, by which plain lithographs are produced, and that he lived to see that branch of the art reach its utmost development. Better plain lithographs were executed in the inventor's own lifetime than it has since been thought worth while to attempt. He also brought the art of tinting lithographs as far as it has ever gone, although, perhaps, he did not himself execute the best specimens. Finally, he more than suggested the application of the process by which those chromo or color lithographs are produced, which now adorn our shops, and which are pushing from cottage and farm house and barber shop walls the gorgeous daubs of Napoleon crossing the Alps, the portraits of "Emma," the engravings of General Washington ascending to heaven borne by angels in Continental uniform, the representations of Edwin Forrest in the part of Rolla, holding aloft in fearful peril the child of a supernumerary, which used to disfigure them. It is seldom that in a single lifetime an invention is developed so far as this, and applied to so many uses.

The part which accident played in the invention of lithography is more than usually remarkable.—Since the day when Alois Senefelder, wandering thoughtful on the banks of Isar, near Munich, picked up specimens of that peculiar limestone, and brought home a slab to engrave upon, the earth has been carefully looked over, and the geologists have been closely questioned, for lithographic stones; but none have been found equal to those which he there discovered, seventy-five years since. That quality of stone has increased in price, until it now sells in our seaports at thirty-five cents a pound, which makes a stone twenty inches square worth about $50; but we can get no supplies of it except in the region where accident revealed its existence to our poor playwright in 1793. If he had daubed his washing list on marble or slate, nothing would have come of it. If he could only have found a small fragment of a play-bill or newspaper lying about in his room, we might never have had lithography. If his ink had not been dry, he would doubtless have used that in writing upon the stone, and from such an ink no impressions could have been taken. If his washerwoman had been so happy as to possess a tranquil mind, or if she had had no crying baby at home, or had held the Senefelder family in more respect, the poor lad might have kept her waiting while he ran in next door and borrowed a piece of paper. If he had not mixed some soap in his paste, and thus added to it the ingredient of oil, which forms the requisite chemical combination with the limestone, he would have experimented fruitlessly with his washing list. If he and his mother had not been very poor, and in all respects circumstanced just as they were and where they were, mankind might not for ages to come, and might never, have attained to lithography, and we should not have been the happy possessors of Mr. Prang's chromos. It is startling to consider how near we all came to losing Eastman Johnson's "Barefoot Boy." Two inches of waste paper the more, or a small piece of yellow soap the less, and the public might never have had that interesting child.—Atlantic Monthly.

NO CROSS, NO CROWN.

On the day of her triumph, as she sat brooding in her closet, listening listfully to Renard, Mary consented to give up her cousin, if not her sister, to the minister of Charles the Fifth. Jane had been sentenced by the court and reprieved by time. Seven months had passed since her nine days' reign was over; the author of her offence had paid the penalties of his crime; and in the recent stir no man had even breathed her name. Her youth, her innocence, her beauty, had won all hearts to her; even those of Father Feckenham, the queen's confessor, and Sir John Brydges, the queen's lieutenant. But Renard called for blood; and Mary was little more than a scribe in Renard's hands.

That day, on the eve of which Queen Mary sat in her closet with her Spanish councilor, was Ash Wednesday; and Mary, on consenting that her cousin should not live forty hours longer, called to her presence Father Feckenham, whom she had just made Dean of St. Paul's and Abbot of Westminster; and bade him go to the deputy's house in the tower, with news that Lady Jane must die, and see what could be done to save her soul. Father Feckenham, though a coarse man, was not a bad man. As a divine, he was learned and ingenious; one in whose power of dealing with backsliders the queen had a boundless faith. That he failed with Lady Jane, that he got angry with her, that his speeches to her made him hateful in the eyes of men, were more his misfortunes than they were his faults. A good deal must be allowed to a man who honestly thinks he has power to bind and to loose, in his dealing with those who in his opinion are trifling with the fate of immortal souls.

Feckenham, who brought down his message of death to the tower, was startled to see that girl receive his news with a sad and welcome smile. It seemed to him out of nature, almost out of grace. He spoke to her of her soul; of the sins of men; of the need for repentance; but he found her calm and happy, at peace with the world, and at one with God. He talked to her first of faith, of liberty, of holiness; then of the sacraments, the Scriptures, and the universal church. She knew all these things better than himself; and she held a language about them far beyond his reach. With a sweet patience, she put an end to the debate by saying that since she had only a few hours now to live she needed them all for prayer.

The dean was moved, as men of his order are seldom moved. Convert this girl in a day! Worn as he was in church affairs, he knew that no skill of his would be able, in one winter day, to avail him against one who combined a scholar's learning with a woman's wit. If her soul was to be saved—and the father was anxious to save her soul—that order for her execution on Friday morning must be stayed. With the sweet voice pulsing in his ear, he rowed back to Whitehall, and told the vindictive queen, with the bold energy of a priest, that her orders for that execution on Friday must be withdrawn. With much ado, the queen gave way; but she feared the anger of Feckenham even more than that of Renard; and the puzzled father went back to the tower to resume his task. Jane was kind but cold. She had no use for him and his precepts in her final hour on earth. His going to court about her sentence gave her pain. She did not want to die; at seventeen no one wants to die; but she did not like the queen to add one day to her life, under the hope that she would act as Dudley and Warwick had done, in giving up their faith. That was a sacrifice she could never make. When Feckenham told her the warrants for Friday were recalled, she merely said she was willing to die, if the queen, her cousin, was minded to put the law in force against her. For the rest, she only wanted to be left alone.

"You are not to die to-morrow," he persisted.

"You are much deceived," said Jane, "if you think I have any desire of longer life."

When Feckenham returned to the queen with a report of his second interview, Mary became wild with rage. She bade her secretaries draw up warrants for her death. She sent for Grey, who was a prisoner in the country. There were ways of adding bitterness to death, and Mary studied and employed them all. She could separate the husband from his wife in their last hours on earth; she could march Guilford under Lady Jane's window, as he went by to execution; she could drive the cart with his dead body past her door; she could prepare a scaffold on the open green, under Lady Jane's eyes; she could bring up Grey to see his daughter slain; she could refuse to let her have a minister of her own faith to pray with her; she could send her Jesuits and confessors to disturb the solemnity of her final night on earth. All these things she could do, and she did; and all these things must have been of Mary's will.

Renard required that Jane should be put away; that sacrifice was wanting to confirm the conquest made by Spain; but Renard could have no motive for adding to the bitterness of her death.

The priests sent down by Mary to the tower were Lady Jane's worst tormentors. They would not be denied; they pushed past her women; and when they got into her chamber, they would not go away.

The long reports which have been printed of their contention with her may not be exact; but they have that rough kind of likeness to the truth which a common rumor bears to actual fact. When Feckenham was tired out with argument, he is said to have exclaimed: "Madam, I am sorry for you; I am assured we shall not meet again." To which Jane is said to have answered: "It is most true, sir; we shall never meet again, unless God should turn your heart;" not a word of which "happy retort," we may be sure, ever passed the lips of Lady Jane.

The tussle on the bread and wine was no doubt sharp, for that was the dogma most in dispute. "Do you deny that Christ is present in the bread and wine?" "The broken bread," said Jane, "reminds me of the Saviour broken for my sins, the wine reminds me of the blood shed on the cross." She meant to say that Christ was ministerially, but not bodily, present in the bread and wine. "But did he not say," put in the father, "Take, eat, this is my body?" "Yes," she answered, "just as he said, I am the vine." It was a figure, not a fact.

Feckenham at length retired, and Jane withdrew into the upper chamber, to compose her mind, to write a farewell to her father, and to wait on God in prayer.

She was not aware that her father had been arrested, still less that he was on his way to the tower. The tender note which she addressed to him ended in these words:

"Thus, good father, I have opened unto you the state wherein I stand: my death at hand; to you, perhaps, it may seem woeful; yet to me there is nothing can be more welcome than from this rule of misery to aspire to that heavenly throne with Christ my Saviour, in whose steadfast faith (if it may be lawful for the daughter so to write to the father) the Lord continue to keep you, so at the last we may meet in heaven."

When it was known in the tower that warrants were out, and that Jane would die on Monday morning, every one became eager to get some token from her, to catch a last word from her lips, a final glance from her eye. To Thomas Brydges, the deputy, in whose house she had lived nearly eight months, she gave a small book of devotions, bound in vellum, containing two scraps of her writing, and a few words by Lord Guilford; one of her notes being addressed to Brydges himself, in words which must have gone to his soul: "Call upon God to incline your heart to his laws, to quicken you in his way, and not to take the word of truth utterly out of your mouth."

On Sunday Guilford sent to ask her for a final interview; but this sad parting she declined, as useless now, fit for stage heroes only, which they were not. She bade him be of good cheer; and seeing how weak he had been, it is only right to say that the poor boy took his fate quietly, like a man. Sunday morning she spent in prayer and reading; her book, a copy of the Greek Testament, in which she observed a blank leaf at the end, and taking up her pen, wrote some last words to her darling sister, Lady Catharine Grey, sad heiress of all her rights and miseries:

"I have sent you, good sister Kate, a book of which, although it be not outwardly rimmed with gold, yet inwardly it is more worth than precious stones. It is the book, dear sister, of the law of the Lord; his testament and last will, which he bequeathed to us wretches, which shall lead you to eternal joy."

Closing the sacred book, she gave it to Elizabeth Tylney, her gentlewoman, praying her to carry it after she was dead to Lady Catharine, as the last and best token of love. She then composed herself to prayer.

Early next day, before it was yet light, the carpenters were heard beneath her window, fitting up the block on which she was to die. When she looked out upon the green, she saw the archers and lancers drawn up, and Guilford being led away from the lieutenant's door. She now sat down and waited for her summons to depart. An hour went slowly by; and then her quick ear caught the rumble of a cart on the stones. She knew that this cart contained poor Guilford's body, and she rose to greet the corpse as it passed by. Her women, who were all in tears, endeavored to prevent her going to the window, from which she could not help seeing the block and headsman waiting for her turn; but she gently forced them aside, looked out on the cart, and made the dead youth her last adieu.

Brydges—and—Feckenham—now came for her. Her two gentlewomen could hardly walk for weeping; but Lady Jane, who was dressed in a black gown, came forth, with a prayer book in her hand, a heavenly smile on her face, a tender light in her gray eyes. She walked modestly across the green, passed through the files of troopers, mounted the scaffold, and then turning to the crowd of spectators, softly said:

"Good people, I am come hither to die. The fact against the queen's highness was unlawful; but touching the procurement and desire thereof by me, or on my behalf, I wash my hands thereof, in innocency, before God, and in the face of you, good Christian people, this day."

She paused, as if to put away from her the world, with which she had now done forever. Then she added:

"I pray you all, good Christian people, to bear me witness that I die a true Christian woman, and that I look to be saved by no other means than the mercy of God, in the merits of the blood of his only Son, our Lord Jesus Christ. And now, good people, while I am alive, I pray you to assist me with your prayers." Kneeling down, she said to Feckenham, the only divine whom Mary would allow to come near her, "Shall I say this psalm?" The abbot faltered, "Yes." On which she repeated, in a clear voice, the noble psalm: "Have mercy upon me, O God, after thy great goodness: according to the multitude of thy mercies do away mine offences."

When she had come to the last line, she stood up on her feet, and took off her gloves and kerchief, which she gave to Elizabeth Tylney. The Book of Psalms she gave to Thomas Brydges, the lieutenant's deputy. Then she noticed her gown, and took off her bridal gear. The headsman offered to assist her; but she put his hands gently aside, and drew a white kerchief round her eyes. The veiled figure of the executioner sank at her feet, and begged her forgiveness for what he had now to do. She whispered in his ear a few soft words of pity and pardon; and then said to him openly, "I pray you dispatch me quickly." Kneeling before the block, she felt for it blindly with her open fingers. One who stood by her touched and guided her hand to the place which it sought; when she laid down her noble head, and saying, "Lord, into thy hand I commend my spirit," passed, with the prayer on her lips, into her everlasting rest.—*W. Spurgeon a Methodist Convert.

The following brief paragraph appeared in the Christian Advocate of August 15: "A correspondent of the Richmond Christian Advocate states that the celebrated Baptist divine of London, Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, was converted through the instrumentality of the Primitive Methodists."

Such a statement may be news to most of the readers of the Advocate; but it seems to be a fact nevertheless, as we gather from a statement made by that distinguished divine in a sermon delivered by him some time ago in one of the Wesleyan chapels in the town of Huddersfield, Yorkshire, England. On this occasion Mr. Spurgeon gave the following account of his conversion:

"I will give you a little of my own experience by way of showing you how I found peace with Christ. For five years I had had a desponding heart, and had been in great trouble. I thought at that time that I was the most miserable creature that ever lived, and I hope and trust that none of you will suffer what I have endured. At night I dreaded to close my eyes in sleep, fearing that I might never wake again in this world. I thought that God was angry with me and that he would send forth his judgments to consume me off the face of the earth. At times I would weep aloud for several hours, and could not find any comfort; and I should have been in that unhappy state until the present day had it not been for the sovereign grace of God. I well remember going out on one Sabbath day. I had listened to all sorts of sermons, some of them good sermons; but none of them were for me. One man preached the Gospel of Christ doctrinally, and another man practical sermons, and another man preached the law; but I think I might have gone that dreary round until now, but on that dreary Sunday I happened to turn up a lane in which was a little Primitive Methodist chapel, and stepped into the place; but the minister had not come that day, and so his place was taken by a local preacher, (as I took him to be.) This old man took as his text the words from Isaiah xlv, 22, 'Look unto me and be ye saved, all ye ends of the earth.' Now this poor old preacher was not an educated man by any means. I can assure you he did not make any fine flourishes from the text he had chosen. He was so stupid that he kept on repeating the text in some such manner as this: 'Look,' says the text. 'It is not even lifting the hand; it is not running one hundred miles away; it is stopping where you are and looking.' There is nothing so hard for you to do as this, owing to your pride. 'Look unto me.' Many of you are looking to yourselves; some of you are looking to God the Father; but you must look to Christ first; some of you are looking to the Spirit, to see where it is at work; but you are not told to do that. 'Look unto me' says the text, and you have only to look as it directs you. I am dying; well, look to the Saviour; he is sitting at God the Father's right hand. 'Look unto me.' Thus the old Primitive Methodist preacher went on, until at last he caught sight of me where I was sitting under the gallery: 'Young man,' he says, 'you are miserable,' and I was miserable as he might have learned from my looks. 'You will always be miserable,' he continued, 'unless you attend to the text, until you look unto Christ.' 'Look!' he shouted, as only a Primitive Methodist can shout; and I did look there and then, and I trust that I found peace with God. The burden with which I had so long been afflicted was gone. I went home happy; and so marked was the difference in my appearance that others could see the change. That one look to Christ had taken away all my burden.

"E'er since by faith I saw the stream
Thy flowing wounds supply,
Redeeming love has been my theme,
And shall be till I die."

"Wonder if that "poor old man" (good old man rather let us call him) ever heard how greatly that sermon of his was blessed? Be that as it may, he will hear of it in heaven. If Spurgeon's crown shall be radiant with stars, O how brilliant with dazzling radiance must be the "crown of rejoicing" which will be worn in heaven by that "old Primitive Methodist preacher!"—Christian Advocate.

Half a Crop with the Advocate.

The Rev. R. H. Adair writes from the Anacoco regions: "Brother Presley wants his paper renewed another year, and he says that he could do very well with half a crop and the ADVOCATE." And then adds further: "Please give us green agents some reasons to give those whom we solicit to take the ADVOCATE, why they should do so." Really, that would be taking coals to Newcastle. Ask Brother Presley. He can give you, no doubt, reasons, plenty as blackberries—stronger and better than we ever thought of. The fact is, we are only beginning to understand the merits of this paper; but we see that Brother P. has studied the subject in all its bearings.

HOMER COLLEGE.

This college has now some ninety students, and $1,000 have just been spent upon the buildings, and the workmen will be paid promptly.

The faculty consists of Rev. H. T. Lewis, A. M., president; Rev. J. L. Border, professor of mathematics, and W. D. Wills, A. B., professor of languages. Tuition in collegiate department $25 per term. Board from $12 to $15 per month. Homer is a healthy spot, and in a country of great promise, settled with families from Georgia and Alabama.

The friends of our church will rejoice in this prosperity.

NEW CHURCH AT MANSFIELD, LA.

We just learn that our friends are about building a church, at Mansfield, twenty feet longer than the old one—the contract is given out and signed. This is good news. We do hope that it will be a sightly structure. It costs no more to do a thing in good taste than to pitch it together.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

THE WORK IN CHINA.

Our readers will peruse with wonder and pleasure the appended letter from the Rev. Young J. Allen. The note introducing it is worthy of study. Dr. Cunnyngham doubtless understands the wants of that vast field and the situation of brethren there better than we, because he has labored long and faithfully in it, and his endorsement is weightier than anything we may be able to say. But we do know this, and can say it, and say it for ten thousand men, that there are hearts earnest enough in God's work and generous enough in the Church South to support the men we have sent to China; yes, ten times over. Let the secretary take this letter in his hand and move, no matter in which direction, preach a sermon and call upon the congregation to contribute to the support of these laborious missionaries, and we will answer for it there is not a church or society in the South that will not respond. This letter and one sermon from Dr. Munsey, no matter what one, and no matter from what text, if it be the cry of the shipmasters in the Apocalypse, will control hearts and purses for any required sum. There is money in the South just now—enough of it—and our people have recovered sufficiently from ruin to listen to the claims and the cry of the heathen.

The statements in this letter are in the highest degree encouraging. They give us an answer to those who complain of the small results of the missionary enterprise in the East. "Unwonted vigor, energy and success" not only characterize the movements of the missionary force in that field, but "an efficient native ministry is fast being raised up." In the opinion of Brother Allen, "the day is not far distant when China will assume the work of her own evangelization!" What say the croakers and doubters to that?—people who expect four hundred millions of pagans to be converted to Christ, when as yet the church has not contributed as much for its accomplishment as the elders of Israel gave in the wilderness for building the tabernacle of badger skins, gold and purple.—What new objection will now be started by those plethoric societies that literally dress in purple and fine linen, but give nothing to famishing myriads that cry from the ground night and day: "No man careth for my soul?" Shall we still hear that an organ, or a parsonage, or a more modern style of church is the need that now presses heavily upon their spirits, and should first be met before they have any conscience for sending the Gospel away off to the ends of the earth! Shall we wait to be comfortable before sending out supplies to these heroic heralds of the cross, that they may follow up the successes already gained with all possible promptness, and thus gain others? God forbid!

The important facts stated in this letter will not fail to impress our Foreign Missionary Board. The opening of new ports; the exploration by the missionaries of ten provinces, each equal to one of our States in size, and with a population of three hundred souls to the square mile; the enlarged rendering and the positive enforcement of the treaties; the rapidly increasing foreign population; the establishment of two papers, a religious and a secular, in the Chinese character, both edited by our own missionary, having already a fine circulation; not to mention the schools in operation under the patronage of the government and under the immediate control of our teachers; these are advances in the great design of introducing the Gospel to the intelligent multitudes of the "Middle Kingdom" which cannot be overestimated. We must not lose sight of the great difference there is between preaching the word of God to a people who have no written language and that of sending it to a people among whom the art of reading and writing is more generally diffused than it is with us. Nevius says, in his "China and the Chinese:" "Persons of almost every class, and in almost every station of life, make an effort to send their boys to school, with the hope that they may distinguish themselves, be advanced to high positions in the State, and reflect honor on their families." The Christian system is a system of Scriptures, and a people prepared to read is largely prepared for receiving the truth as it is in Jesus.

All this is favorable. What more could we ask for as a guarantee of God's readiness to co-operate with His church in the sublime work of bearing to every creature the story of the cross? But one thing more is needed—that is the spirit of "charity," that enlarged love of those bought by the blood of Christ which places everything at the disposal of the Saviour. The sentence which records the repeated disappointment of our missionaries must surely make its way to every generous mind, and should awaken in each of us the inquiry: "Have I done my share in sustaining these angels of the church?"

THE CHINA MISSION.

ABINGDON, VA., March 25, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: I received the enclosed letter from Brother Allen today. I send it to you for publication. I have other private letters from China, received by the same mail which brought this. They all beg for help. It is touching to read the earnest appeals of these good men. But who will heed them? Alas! who?

Yours truly,
W. G. E. CUNNYNGHAM.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Jan. 14, 1869.

REV. W. G. E. CUNNYNGHAM, D D.—My Dear Brother: As Brother Lambuth is preparing the annual report of the mission for the past year I shall content myself with a few supplementary remarks of a general nature.

1. Missionary operations of the past year have been characterized by unwonted vigor, aggressiveness and success. Ten out of the eighteen provinces are now occupied by foreign agents, and Bible agents and colporteurs have traversed the regions beyond as harbingers preparing the way for the speedy advent of the Gospel.

2. A faithful and efficient native ministry is fast being raised up, and all through the coast line of provinces the success of their labors indicates that the day is not far distant when China will be able to assume the work of her own evangelization.

3. An unusual amount of persecution has been experienced. The heathen have raged and the people imagined a vain thing, but the malignant zeal with which they have attempted to obstruct and confine our labors has only helped forward and prospered our work. The treaties have been interpreted in our favor by the highest mandarins, and proclamations enjoining the utmost toleration and forbidding the hindrance of the Gospel have been promulgated.

3. The aspects of the missionary enterprise in China were never more hopeful and encouraging than at the present. Hence you need not be surprised to hear that every month returns to us retired veterans or brings its quota of new enlistments. The demand for more laborers is now a felt and serious consideration, and although numerous arrivals took place last year, more are required for this, or much of our now rapidly expanding work will suffer. Other mission boards appreciate the situation if ours does not.

4. The treaties are being revised and the prospect is that more new ports will be thrown open to commerce. The number of foreign residents in China is rapidly increasing. Intercourse between them and the Chinese is becoming more direct and mutual, and as the points of contact between the different races are multiplied the greater their liberality will become.

The government does not see its way clear as yet for the adoption of steam cars and telegraphs, nor does it incline to open the waters of the interior to the navigation of small steamers. It does not seem, however, to regret them as evils per se, but fears they would entail a serious revolution.

Happily for us we are not so particularly interested in the above, and as they are purely mercantile, we feel safe to commit them to the authorities that be, while we enter and occupy the unlimited field open to the missionary.

Two new ports—Nee-gata and Yeddo—have just been opened in Japan; but, strange to say, up to the present time Christianity is entirely proscribed, and none dare declare their faith in it. Old proclamations against its introduction have been revived, and the people stand in terror of it. But few have been baptized, and these very secretly and at night. Missionaries, however, seem to be usefully employed, and the prospect is that more students under the present regime will possess the Bible and read it, though in English, than would if perfect toleration had been obtained.

I have made up my mind to continue in the government school for the present year. I shall also continue to edit the two Chinese newspapers. I believe their influence, which is constantly increasing, to be very beneficial. But few foreigners, as you are aware, speak Chinese, and as missionaries are exceedingly limited in their intercourse with the higher and ruling classes of the people, these papers accomplish much that would otherwise be impossible. They are eagerly read by all the people who have an opportunity of seeing them; and as the character of their contents is to a great extent miscellaneous, there is an immense amount of information circulated by them in a year.

The church or religious paper is sustaining itself well. Subscriptions and contributions come in most liberally, not from Shanghai alone, but from all the ports. I do not think it will ever cease. The missionaries have all pronounced it a desideratum; and should the time ever come for me to leave it, others would be found ready to take it up and continue it.

They are the only direct means of intercourse with a large and influential portion of the Chinese, and I feel that it is difficult to overestimate their importance in that respect. I am not without a sense, too, of the immense responsibilities that rest upon me, for it is no small matter to be almost the sole "go between," charged with the interpretation of so many and various phases of foreign life and manners. Suffice it to say that I do not esteem the task a light one, and so labor hard to correctly impress the Chinese mind, and instruct them not only in those things which pertain to this life, but that which is to come.

Brother Lambuth proposes to discontinue his secular engagements and devote himself entirely to the regular work this year. Certainly the board will be able to remit us sufficient to pay his salary and remove the balance of our mission debt during this year.

The mission families, without exception, enjoyed the best of health during the past year, and are now all well.

We have ceased to plan. We have so often done so and been disappointed, during the last five or six years, that we hesitate now, until the board shall first forward us the means to execute. We know not what we shall be able to accomplish, nor yet how to set about it. Our prayer now is, "Day by day lead us on, and give us day by day our daily bread."

In conclusion, however, allow me to assure you that whatsoever our hands find to do, that will we do with all our might.

Yours truly,
YOUNG J. ALLEN.

DR. PFAFF, the author of the latest German treatise on the prehistoric earth, is quoted by the Nation as saying that there is no evidence to fix the age of the human race as over seven thousand years. This is quite a falling off from Lyell's two hundred and twenty-four thousand years; but the tendency now is to question the extreme antiquity which was insisted on five years ago.

CHURCH-BUILDING AT SUMMIT.

The population of Summit is about two thousand five hundred, and is rapidly increasing. Methodism has a name there, but not much beside. Yes, it has some few true friends, and we are glad to see that they are moving in the right direction. Colonel Garland has generously given a lot, very eligible and sufficiently large for both church and parsonage. The next thing is the house—not a shanty, but something which will give life to the landscape and advertise the place to the passing world as a spot where God is feared and worshiped—a house fit to hold a Conference in. We do not argue the policy side of this matter, or we might show that no city or town ever lost by church-building. Churches and school-houses are the surest investment a community can make, even if the aim be a purely secular one. In this thinking age people are not inclined to go where their families cannot have all the advantages of the best moral and intellectual training. One or two church steeples have determined many a person who was in search of a new location for business, for farming or for residence.

We are glad to see that the quarterly conference of that circuit has endorsed Rev. E. R. Strickland to the public as their agent in this noble enterprise, because we know him to be a man who has spent a considerable life, not to say property, in trying to do good. He has energy and the glory of God in view, and is eminently an unselfish man. We only fear that he will not ask for enough. We hope that he will "ask largely," and build a church that will give character to every store, and every farmer, and every family within ten miles of Summit. God speed him!

While on this theme we mention a good thing in the way of church-building that is going on away at the other end of our circulation—in the Anacoco region, west Louisiana. Two brethren there, Presley and Caldwell, have built a church pretty much by themselves. "I remonstrated against it," says the preacher, "and wanted them to get help, as it was too heavy on them; but they thought 'one good shower of rain next summer would pay for the church.' Quite an idea. That looks like work." Yes, and that is the way to have good ideas—do the work. We honor equally the faith and the works of these churchly men. The Lord give them the rain!—they've got the church.

SOUTHWESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

The report of this society shows that it has three agents in the field, Rev. J. W. Harmon, Rev. J. H. Mims and Rev. B F. Alexander. We know them to be efficient and valuable men in this or any department where work is demanded.

Eight auxiliary societies have been organized in western Louisiana, twenty-five in eastern Louisiana and Mississippi. Five parishes have been thoroughly canvassed and supplied; eight other parishes partially.

The American Bible Society has remitted the debt due to it by this society, amounting to $4,646 96; and the society has had a legacy from the late William Siliman, Esq., of East Feliciana parish. We do not see the amount of this legacy stated, but have understood it was $10,000. If so, we hope the society will go ahead and finish rapidly the grand work of supplying the State with Bibles. It is a grand agency for good.

TO SOUTHERN FARMERS.

NEW GRASS.—An acre of the Japan clover and Lispedeza Striata, so famous in the Carolinas, is worth to any farmer $500. The only way to get the seed is to send two subscribers to the Southern Farmer, published in Memphis by M. W. Philips & Co., 37 South Court street, at $2 per annum. It is the most beautiful and valuable agricultural journal published in the South, and the publishers will give one ounce of the seed, clean and fresh, for two subscribers, or one pound for sixteen. One ounce properly treated this year will seed an acre next. Now is the time to sow it. It is the most valuable offered by all the journals.

RADICAL BITTERNESS.

Next to being the enemies, d[eliver] us from being the friends [of] these extreme people. Their friend[ship] is in truth more to be dreaded than their enmity, for it may p[os]sibly take offence and turn to ga[ll]. The freedom, readiness and fulln[ess] with which they defame their m[ost] distinguished representatives, up[on] provocation, amounts to somethi[ng] more than cursing—" the poison [of] asps is under their lips." Ch[ief] Justice Chase is certainly the for[e]most man in his services to th[e] party, for his skill engineered [it] through the financial gulfs of t[he] war. When he showed a willi[ng]ness to receive the nomination [of] President they opened the flo[od]gates on him and poured out th[eir] black venom in torrents. Wh[en] Mr. Evarts consented to be emplo[y]ed as attorney for the President, [in] demand of services which w[e] should think no one in that [pro]profession was at liberty to refu[se] all the tried part of his life was f[or]gotten in a moment, and he w[as] held up to universal obloquy. Next comes the founder of the part[y] the great discoverer of the prin[ci]ple of "the irrepressible conflict" whose genius gave birth to th[e] monster itself, most admirable [to] its friends, most horrible to other[s]. Mr. Seward had long since be[en] stricken from its list of canoniz[ed] mortals; but that was not enoug[h]. Now the Independent, that may [be] supposed to mingle with its sp[irit] more of Christian charity than [the] more worldly organs of the par[ty] writes, upon the retiring statesm[an] a leader headed "The Auburn C[on]vict," devoted entirely to the ex-secretary. We give one sentence:

"There was a time when M[r.] Seward was the one white lily [in] our American politics—the one co[n]spicuous bearer of the banner [of] freedom—the one idol of the pu[b]lic which he afterward deceived [and] stabbed. How this man's fa[lse] speeches used to ring in his co[un]trymen's ears! How this man's dishonored name has now become a byword on his countrymen's lips! Such is the fickleness of politi[cal] fortune.

"Toward Mr. Soward, as a lo[ne] and desolate old man, sitting in h[is] death-shadowed house, at Aubu[rn] our heart goes out with an overf[low] of sympathy; but toward the p[o]litical trickster of two administ[ra]tions, the marplot of both, we be[ar] a proper share of that abiding in[di]gnation which this treacher[ous] politician has justly earned from [the] American people."

Now whatever may be the p[o]litical and moral sins of the ag[ed] premier, and we think they [are] many, it is doubtful if a paper co[uld] be found in the South that would [not] turn upon him. He has survive[d] daggers already, and will probab[ly] survive this one.

This will serve to introduce [a] later and even more astounding ex[a]mple of this spirit of Radical abuse. Scarcely has the applause died away from the corridors and colonnades of the capital with which this party greeted its hero—President before its hissings began. General Grant has not finished responding to congratulations that pour in from the cardinal points of home and from over the sea; he has not yet visited all the chambers of the White House, nor had time to take in the full-length greatness of its faithful mirrors, when the discord begins. One has only to read the subjoined editorial to see that the extreme wing of this party has broken with him and is uncorking its vials. The Independent has probably the largest circulation of any Radical organ, and wields the greatest influence. We simply quote the article, not so much to show what these people are saying as what they are going to say of their quondam idol.

THE NEED OF THE HOUR.

The present political tone of the American people reminds us of Robert Browning's couplet:

'So with a sullen 'All's for best,'
The land seems settling to its rest.'

The fifteenth article, like a lame man, goes limping toward its goal, and will have a rough journey before it can finally enter the gate of the Constitution. Of course, we look forward to an ultimate adoption; but the day is further in the future than some over-sanguine people predict.

The ghost of the negro, entering the State house at Indianapolis, has frightened the Indiana Legislature out of a quorum. Ohio—mother of patriots and chief heroine of the war—stands now like a rebel, and will not ratify. Georgia—fickle, obstinate and disloyal—conspires once more against the Union, and writes a verdict against liberty, equality and fraternity.

It is quite evident that President Grant does not want the negro question to cast its Ethiopian shadow on his administration. He hoped it would be out of the way before he ascended his chair. For months before the inauguration he privately urged its speedy and final settlement. His inaugural very plainly said: 'I wish to devote my time to punishing the whisky rogues and to paying the nation's debt; so don't let me be troubled with the everlasting negro.'

It is equally evident, however, that the negro question is not yet settled. Nor, from present appearances, is it likely to be settled during the first or even the second year of the new administration.

We have not known a time since 1860 when the negro, as a wronged man waiting for justice, has been less an object of interest and sympathy, or when an appeal for his rights would not awaken a warmer response than now.

This apathy is due in great measure to the general conviction that the question is already practically settled—a conviction as short-sighted in white men as it is disappointing to black; but due in still greater measure to the feeble pulse of moral feeling which the Republican party has manifested ever since Grant became its leader. This illustrious man (whom we have no wish to dispraise) commands everywhere the confidence, but nowhere the enthusiasm, of the American people. Personally he is of a kind and just nature; but, unfortunately, he has no power to communicate a kindling heat to other hearts. He has none of that beautiful magic of great men by which they fuse a whole nation into one glowing fervor of patriotism. Plain, slow and awkward Abraham Lincoln, in spite of his plainness, slowness and awkwardness, made the whole nation love him devotedly, and even inspired the most radical critics of his conservative policy to a genuine admiration for the good man's kindly affectioned and childlike ways. This is the most irresistible and enviable quality which an American statesman can possess. It was nature's gift to Henry Clay. If Grant possessed it, he would find it at this moment of greater practical value than his entire military reputation. His administration is every day sliding into deepening peril for lack of it. The stoic and passionless West Point officer, who is now experiencing the difference between a civil magistracy and a military generalship, needs for the success of his administration just such a moral support as he is peculiarly unfitted to inspire. Of course, as he cannot change his nature, we must take him for what he is; but we doubt if he or his immediate friends are aware that his own lukewarm, half-chilling personality is to be the chief obstacle in the way of his civil career.

The Democratic party (ever lying in wait) have now a greater opportunity to regain their lost leadership than they have had at any period since they first lost it.

Under the present auspices at Washington (unless we greatly misjudge the signs of the times) the Republican party will gradually grow weaker and weaker, and their opponents steadily stronger and stronger. The moral sympathy which formerly united the Republican ranks into an irresistible phalanx is now becoming dull and chill in each man's breast. The elected leader cares for no great idea, and does not seem to suspect that his party is at this moment beginning to fall off from him because he is lifted to a station which is one plane too high for his genius.

Then, too, like a ball on a fountain, Congress keeps alternately tossed up and down. The omen was ill when Congress so far forgot justice and duty as to admit the vote of Georgia in the Electoral College. The omen was ill when Congress refused to pass a law making suffrage uniform throughout the land. The omen was ill when Congress, by an express vote, struck out from the fifteenth article the right to hold office.

It is hard to hold this fickle nation steadfastly to a moral purpose when its chief magistrate has no genuine sympathy for moral ideas, and when its chosen representatives are constantly compromising their own convictions.

Both President and Congress ought to unite in advertising a joint proposal: 'Wanted—a Moral Purpose.'

THE STATE FAIR opens on the 6th instant. The interest in its approach increases, and the preparation of exhibitors promises to be considerably more elaborate than it was last year.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH VINDICATED, and the Sabbath in its Political Aspects. By Ignotus. Philadelphia: Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger. New Orleans: J. A. Gresham. 1869. 12mo, pp. 249.

The Christian Sabbath, that is the "first day of the week," is in evidence of and is significant of the Saviour's supreme political authority over the human race. As the Father rested from His work of creation, so the Son rested from His work of redemption—Jesus has entered into His rest. This "work" included the resurrection, and the resurrection doubtless includes in its forces a new heaven and a new earth. "All power," said the risen Lord, "is given unto me in heaven and in earth"—it is the setting on foot these great powers that constituted the design of His labors, and it was from their achievement that He "rests." That is, He waits to receive the universal homage, expecting, till His enemies be made His footstool.

The authority of the Jewish Sabbath is discussed and illustrated; that of the Christian vindicated: the spiritual nature of the kingdom of our Lord, and the obligation of all nations and individuals to observe it, are enforced with clearness, and in the temper and fairness of one who feels conscious of the truth. We have been greatly benefitted by the perusal of this unpretending volume, and prefer the line of its argument to that of any treatise on the Sabbath with which we are acquainted. The style is neat and the views of the writer are advanced with engaging modesty.

FOREIGN.—The Irish Church Question.—On Tuesday night, the 23d ultimo, Mr. Gladstone's bill was put on its second reading in the House of Commons, and passed by a vote of 368 to 250. The Liberal majority on this measure is thus shown to be 118, or exactly the estimated Liberal majority in a full House. The victory is signal, and may be considered decisive not only of the triumph of the particular measure at issue, but of the success of Mr. Gladstone's government.

The transcendent ability with which the premier fully acknowledged his arduous task was frankly acknowledged by his distinguished rival, when he said that after listening for three hours to the statement so adequately and so eloquently placed before the House, he "willingly admitted that not a phrase in it was wasted."

The Methodist Church at Summit.

At a meeting of the quarterly conference of Summit circuit, held at Magnolia, March 20, 1869, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted, viz:

WHEREAS, Our worthy pastor, Rev. E. R. Strickland, is engaged in the laudable enterprise of building a substantial house of worship for the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the town of Summit, Mississippi; and

WHEREAS, We believe the work can be consummated by him, and that he is eminently adapted to the task; therefore,

Resolved, That he be and is hereby authorized to take the work into his own hands, and to proceed with it as his judgment and the openings of Providence shall dictate as most expedient and successful.

Resolved, That this quarterly conference recommend Rev. E. R. Strickland to the favorable reception and consideration of all who may be disposed to aid in this enterprise.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Rev. J. C. Keener for publication in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

MARRIED.

On the 10th of March, by Rev. D. Duncan, at the residence of the bride's father, Colonel J. W. Kidd, in Talladega, HENRY C. BARTLESON, M. D., of New York, to Miss M. ELOISE KIDD.

PAINT will never smart nor stain,
Paint will ease the greatest pain,
Paint will cure foul ulcers deep,
From them inflammation keep;
An invention that will last,
When all liniments are past,
When all pills and powders fail,
PAIN PAINT will outlive them all.

The latest scientific discoveries prove that the principle of evaporation and absorption is the only method by which inflammation can be instantly removed. But the absorbents will not drink water readily, for the flesh is of an oily nature, and water rolls off. Hot liniments have utterly failed, for they always inflame and burn the flesh wherever applied, while oils or ointments clog the pores and prevent the escape of morbid matter. But a preparation has been made and already tested on over five hundred thousand people, suffering all kinds of pain and disease that is possible to enumerate, and it acts like magic on each and every individual. It is limpid as water, and is as harmless; will not stain or smart, and so prepared that the absorbents drink it rapidly, and the evaporation that instantly arises through the million of pores is really marvelous. It is an invention hitherto unknown, but is as of much importance as the introduction of steam or the magnetic telegraph, for the drying up a single tear has more of honest fame than shedding seas of gore. This article not only dispels all heat and fever, but evaporates out all impurity and morbid matter of the system or blood at any point wherever applied. This novelty is Dr. Wolcott's Pain Paint. His office, at No. 181 Chatham Square, New York, has a greater number of patients, with every type of disease, than any hospital in America or Europe. This fact alone enables him to give the best practical advice to those who suffer from any malady, disease or pain. It costs the patient nothing for advice; he skills all pain is instantly removed free of cost. Tens of thousands given up as hopeless are permanently cured and restored to the activity of life.

A large share of these applicants suffer with drug disease, and have had their whole system medicated and poisoned through and through with medicine. Dr. WOLCOTT condemns most emphatically all drug treatment, and proves practically that disease can be radically expelled from the system without dosing the stomach. The advent of Pain Paint overturns the old theory of cure; and medical practitioners are at their wits' end in beholding such undeniable and astonishing cures of those cases considered by themselves as utterly hopeless. Hundreds come over one thousand miles to obtain treatment and advice; many have been suffering for years who are unable, from sickness or poverty, to make the journey. To all such it will be more practicable to purchase his remedies and have them sent free of express charges. A pint of Pain Paint, double strength, will be sent for $5, a quart for $8, or a gallon for $20, on receipt of the money at No. 181 Chatham Square, New York, or one-half dozen pints of Wolcott's Antidilator for the cure of Catarrh, $6, with full directions and advice. Small bottles can be bought at all first class Drug Stores. Beware of all imitators who offer worthless compounds. Wolcott's signature is very large on white wrappers around each bottle of all his remedies.

CHURCH OF THE STRANGERS, New York.—Visitors to the city of New York are informed that they will find divine service every Sunday, in the large Chapel of the University, Washington Square, at ten and a half A. M. and at seven and a half P. M. The evening service in summer is at eight o'clock. Waverley Place, immediately north of the New York Hotel, and of Broadway, runs west to Washington Square, on the east side of which is the University. The entrance to the church is the main door of the University. University Place cars run from the door of the Fifth Avenue Hotel to the door of the church. From the St. Nicholas and Metropolitan, take the cars corner of Broadway and Broome, leave at Waverley Place, and go west one block. At the Astor House take University Place cars, leave at Waverley Place, and go west one block. Strangers will find cordial welcome and polite attention.

The pastor is Rev. Dr. DEEMS, who devotes himself to the spiritual interests of strangers. If any be sick, let them address him a note by mail, as "Pastor of the Church of the Strangers, New York," and it will reach him. The ladies who compose the "Society of the Sisters of the Stranger" procure medical, legal and spiritual help for strangers in perplexity, distress or sickness. Address "Sisters of the Stranger," care Rev. Dr. Deems, New York.

If you are coming to New York soon, cut this out and paste it in your memorandum book.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

WISHES.

BY MARY A. P. HUMPHREY.

What are you thinking, my darling,
Sitting so silent and still—
Sunlight asleep in your ringlets of gold;
Eager lip parted, as if to unfold
Wonderful secrets at will?

"O mother! I've only been wishing
More things than could ever be told;
Dreaming with wide-open eyes, while the light
Drops through this apple bough, rosy and white,
Flecking the soft grass with gold.

"Wishing I knew if the robin
Sang in the maple to-day,
Tales of the winterless lands he has seen,
Groves of the orange and islands of green,
Perils of wing by the way.

"Wishing I knew how the May flowers
Bloom on the hem of the snow;
Longing to read what the crocuses write,
Marvelous letters of purple and white,
All in an orderly row.

"Wishing I knew if the streamlet
Tells in the violet's ear
Stories of life at the frost monarch's court,
Glittering fairies by moonlight that sport,
Palaces crystalline clear.

"Wishing I knew if the south wind
Brings not some news from the sea,
Tropical waves in the sunlight aglow,
And, somewhere, sailing so stately and slow,
A ship that is freighted for me."

O, dreams of an innocent childhood!
O, wishes too sweet to come true!
What is the toil of the oldest mind?
Guesses at knowledge but half defined,
Nearer to nature are you.

EASTER EGGS.

BY ANNA WILMOT.

'Sister Grace!'

'What do you want!' Sister Grace did not lift her eyes from the gay embroidery over which her fingers were swiftly moving.

'To-morrow's Easter!'

'Can't you tell me something I don't know?' was the reply; not unkindly spoken, but without any interest in the sister's voice.

'Look at me, Grace, won't you?'

'There; I'm looking at you;' and Grace Bond dropped her hands in her lap with a slightly annoyed gesture, and fixed her eyes on the child's face.

'To-morrow's Easter.'

'I've heard that before. Anything else?'

'Yes, I want you to dye me some eggs!'

'Dye you some eggs!'

'Yes. All the little girls are going to have them. Jennie May and Lucy White told me about the beauties they had last year; and what lovely ones their mother was going to dye for them to-day.'

'I must beg to be excused, Fanny,' said Grace, coldly.

The light and eagerness went out of the child's face, and her eyes grew wet with tears.

Don't be silly!' Grace spoke a little harshly. 'What does a big girl like you want with Easter eggs?'

'I'm no bigger than Jennie May or Lucy White, and they're going to have them,' replied Fanny.

'I can't help it if they are.' Grace spoke with some petulance in her voice. 'I haven't any time for such nonsense.'

Now Fanny had set her heart on the Easter eggs, and her disappointment was so great at her sister's refusal that she could not control her feelings, but burst out crying, at which Grace, being much annoyed, scolded her sharply. This did not help the matter any. Grief gave way to anger, and Fanny talked back to Grace in a very unsisterly way. Both of them were made unhappy.

Thinking to find employment for Fanny, and so divert her thoughts, Grace handed her a piece of worsted work and said,

'Put this flower in for me, won't you? You did the last one nicely.'

'No, I won't!' Yes, these were her very words. 'If you can't dye me the eggs, I'll not work your flowers.'

'Oh,' said Grace, 'if you're going to keep such bad company, I can't stay;' and she went from the room, leaving Fanny alone.

For a good while Fanny sat crying from anger and disappointment. Then, as she grew calm, the thought of what her sister said as she went out, 'If you're going to keep such bad company,' came into her mind. She knew very well to what company her sister referred. Anger, ill-nature, fretfulness—these were her companions now, and they were making her wretched.

Gradually, as she sat alone thinking, a change came over her feelings. 'I'm sorry I talked so to Grace,' she said, 'even if she wouldn't dye me the Easter eggs. Oh, dear!—' and she drew a long sigh—'some little girls have kind sisters that do everything for them, but Grace thinks it a trouble to do even the littlest thing for me.'

Even as Fanny said this she remembered the beautiful party dress that Grace made for her only the week before, and how she sat up late at night so as to be sure to have it ready. And then she thought of a dozen kind and self-denying acts of her sister, all done for her good.

'I'm sorry,' she spoke aloud. The bad company in which Grace left her had gone, and in their place were repentence, kindness, love.

She took up the strip of worsted that Grace had placed in her lap, and, unrolling it, commenced working in the flower; and was soon so interested in what she was doing that she scarcely noticed the passage of time.

Grace did not feel very happy when she went from the room leaving Fanny alone. She had not regarded her little sister with the kindness and consideration that were her due. The Easter eggs were a thing of no account to her, but to the child who had set her heart on them they were a great deal.

Now it happened that next door to the pleasant home in which Grace Bond lived was a poor German family—a man and his wife and two children. The woman had been sick, and Grace had gone in two or three times during the week to see her. It was an hour, perhaps, after leaving Fanny alone that the thought of this woman came into her mind.

'I'll go and see how she is,' said Grace; and putting something over her head, she went to the next door and knocked.

'Come in!' cried a pleasant voice, and Grace pushed open the door.

What a surprise! The group that met her gaze was a picture in itself, and very pleasant to look upon—a picture with a lesson that went down into her heart.

Sitting on a low chair was the German mother. On the floor was a white napkin, over which gayly-colored Easter eggs had been spread to cool, and she was now lifting these, one by one, into a dish on her lap. In front of her were the two children, a boy and girl, looking so pleased and happy that the very sight of their faces made the heart of Grace grow warmer.

'Easter eggs?' she said, with a smile, as she came forward into the room.

'Yes; they please Ludwig and Bertha,' was the woman's answer 'And I make them happy when I can.'

How lovingly the children looked up into her worn and patient face!

A thought of her unhappy sister now flashed through the mind of Grace, and there came to her an image of the child sitting alone and in tears—a painful contrast to the scene before her. Self-rebuke and self-condemnation followed quickly.

'Oh, these are beautiful!' she said, stooping to the floor and taking up one of the eggs. 'How charmingly you have painted them!'

'Won't you take some for your little sister? Bertha and Ludwig will be glad to share them, I know.' And the mother looked to her children for approval.

'She shall have two of mine,' said Bertha, quickly. 'And two of mine,' cried Ludwig.

'Oh, no; I can't rob you after that fashion,' answered Grace. 'But if you will let me have four of these beauties—they are beauties—I will send you in a dozen not dyed.—Fanny will be so pleased to get them.'

'Take them all,' said the woman. 'I will dye more for the children.'

But Grace said, 'No; four will be enough for Fanny.'

On returning home, Grace hurried to the room where, an hour before, she had left her little sister angry and in tears. Her heart had a troubled beat as she pushed open the door and went in. All was silent. By a table, with her face buried in her arms, sat Fanny fast asleep. The strip of worsted work, with the flower completed, lay on the floor, as if it had just dropped from her hand.

'Fanny dear!' Grace spoke in a tender, loving voice. The child moved but did not answer, for sleep lay heavy on her senses.

'Fanny!'

'Oh, yes! What is it?' answered the child dreamily.

'Fanny dear!' Grace called again.

'Oh! Easter eggs? No, I haven't any; and I wanted them so badly!'

Still dreaming; but she was wide awake a moment afterward, sitting up looking at Grace, and then at the beautifully painted eggs that were held before wondering eyes.

'It is so good in you, sister dear!' she exclaimed. 'Thank you a thousand times!' And springing up she threw her arms about Grace's neck, hugging and kissing her in a heart-gush of love.

'I will try and be more thoughtful of my little sister hereafter,' said Grace to herself; and, speaking aloud, with her arms still about the neck of her sister, Fanny said: 'I wasn't naughty long, Grace; and I've worked the flower for you, and you are a dear, dear good sister as ever was!'—The Children's Hour.

FARM AND GARDEN.

COTTON CULTURE IN EGYPT.

THE KINDS OF COTTON CULTIVATED.

The cotton plant is indigenous to Egypt, and has been cultivated time out of mind on the narrow strip of fertile land which fringes the Upper Nile, beginning at Thebes. But this native cotton is inferior in quality, short in staple, coarse in fibre, and fit only for the manufacture of the coarse stuffs worn by the Fellahs, or peasantry. Its cultivation was very limited, and, until the year 1819 it was the only kind grown in Egypt, and was exclusively used for home consumption. In this year, when the energetic rule of Mehemit Ali was reviving old Egypt from its ashes, a Frenchman, named Jumel, walking in the garden of Mako Bay, at Cairo, observed a curious plant, the leaf and flower of which were unfamiliar to him. He questioned the gardener, and learned that it was a cotton plant, a few specimens of which had been brought from India, to give variety to the ornaments of the garden. Seeing the great superiority of this plant to the common kind cultivated in the upper country, M. Jumel brought the matter to the attention of the Viceroy, and, by his aid and co-operation, succeeded in making its culture general in the fertile lands of the delta of Lower Egypt, whence the great bulk of the crop is now obtained.

It was not until 1840 that the experiment of introducing the American Sea Island cotton seed was attempted. Since that time it has been largely introduced, and the yield has been fully equal to that of our best Sea Island. From some peculiar quality of the soil, however, or possibly from the system of irrigation adopted, it has been found necessary to procure new Sea Island seed every two years, and the Jumel or Mako cotton has therefore been preferred by the Egyptian cultivators.

There are, therefore, three species of cotton grown in Egypt:

1. The native cotton, short staple, coarse.

2. Mako or Jumel, long staple, fine.

3. American Sea Island.

These varieties are all perennial, but are sown annually, except the Mako, which will last two years. The Mako is greatly preferred, although the cotton it produces is not quite equal to our best Sea Island, but rather better than our best Upland cotton.

The two latter species alone are exported; the first, or native cotton cultivated on the Upper Nile, being used chiefly for stuffing divans, the Egyptian substitute for our chairs and beds, and which serve the double purpose of seats by day and couches by night, even among the richer classes. It is also used to make the "Nigam," or soldiers' uniforms, as well as the single blue shirt which constitutes the entire toilette of both the male and female Fellah. The culture of this species is not extensive, nor are these fabrics now manufactured as largely as formerly. Mehemet Ali, who entertained the idea of manufacturing on a large scale, established twenty-four large factories, employing twenty-four thousand operatives, but it was soon found to be unprofitable; so that in 1852 all that remained of his great enterprise were one large mill, worked by steam, and three small ones, worked by ox power, manufacturing chiefly army uniforms, and consuming, on an average, not more than ten thousand bales of cotton per annum.

The rapidity with which the cotton culture developed itself after M. Jumel's walk in the garden at Cairo may be inferred from the following statement of exports:

"1821, exports were sixty bags, of one hundred pounds each.

"1822, exports were five hundred bags, of one hundred pounds each.

"1823, exports were one thousand two hundred bags, of one hundred pounds each.

"1824, exports were one thousand five hundred bags, of one hundred pounds each."

This, too, while Mehemet Ali's experiment of manufacturing was going on, consuming an amount of which we have no means of judging, as statistics are a modern innovation in Egypt. In 1852 the annual exportation of cotton had risen to about forty-four million pounds; in 1856 to fifty-seven millions, and 1865 to the maximum of five hundred and sixty thousand bales, of the weight of our own.

Beyond this point I do not think it probable the Egyptian production will ever pass; nor is it at all probable that it will keep up to these figures when the extraordinary stimulus lately given it is withdrawn. The reasons for this opinion will be fully stated in conclusion. From 1862 to 1865 the production was almost double, in consequence of the American war and the increased value of the staple.

In 1854 the quantity of cotton consumed in this country was estimated at about six million pounds; and the usual price of the ginned cotton fibre in the villages in which it was grown, or at Alexandria, varied from $12 to $14 or $15 the hundred pounds, which would give from six to eight and a half cents per pound net on shipboard. The cotton used formerly to be sent down from the villages in large, loosely-packed bags, each weighing one hundred pounds.—Now, however, all the modern appliances of culture, of preparation and pressing are in use in Egypt. The export of cotton seed rose in 1865 to the second rank of values.

This cotton seed was shipped to England chiefly for manufacturing an oil found to be admirably adapted to lubricating machinery, and also for use as a valuable fertilizer.

This is a new exportation from Egypt, due to the enterprise of a speculative Englishman, who first conceived the idea of utilizing a hitherto worthless product; for in most parts of Egypt the only fertilizer needed is water, the rich soil requiring moisture. Without this, under an ardent sun, it cracks open into fissures and dries up. Hence, rains being infrequent, the chief care of the Egyptian husbandman is to supply that important essential, and his mode of irrigation cannot well be improved. In aid of the ancient system, which is almost if not quite as old as the Pharaohs, the appliances of modern science are brought to bear upon the tardy movement of the Nile, and steam pumps are now to be seen along the banks, in some instances of American manufacture.

Ismail Pacha, the present Viceroy, is a very large and very successful cotton grower, owning actually, if not nominally, not only vast tracts of land and whole villages, but the labor and very lives of the Fellahs who work them.

In order to appreciate correctly the present and the future probability of Egyptian rivalry, it will be necessary to consider the area of cotton-land now under cultivation in that country, its character and capacity, the peculiarities of culture there, the kind of labor employed, the net results, the possibility of its extension, comparing all these with our own.

These topics will be treated in subsequent papers, in which will be given the result of personal observations extending through several years spent in Egypt by the writer, whose earlier days were passed in the cotton growing portion of the Southern States.—Hearth and Home.

AN EXCELLENT FERTILIZER.—The Journal of Chemistry says that one of the very best fertilizers used upon the farm for all the cereal grains and root crops, may be made in the following manner: Take one barrel of pure, finely ground bone, and mix with it a barrel of wood ashes; during the mixing, add about three pailfuls of water. The heap may be made upon the floor of an out building or upon the barn floor; and by the use of a hoe the bone and ashes must be thoroughly blended together. The water added is just sufficient to liberate the caustic alkalies, potash and soda, and these act upon the gelatine of the bone, dissolving the little atoms, forming a kind of soap, and fitting it for plant aliment. In this way the most valuable constituents of the bone can be made immediately available, and the addition of potash and soda aids in the formation of a fertilizer of inestimable value. A gill of this mixture, placed in a hill of corn, will work wonders. It is also excellent for garden vegetables and for all kinds of roots. It will be ready for use in a week after it is made.—Southern Cultivator.

THE following reference, in the columns of the New York Independent, occurs in a description of the inauguration of President Grant:

"Great was the surging against the brass doors of the Senate house, whose most significant carving is Washington's rebuke of General Lee, inserted either prophetically or as a just constructive censure of America's rebuke of his descendant for 'greater audacity and treachery.'"

The General Lee rebuked by General Washington at the battle of Monmouth, which is the subject of the historical carving on the bronze doors of the Senate chamber, was an Englishman by birth, and no relation to General Robert E. Lee. General Robert E. Lee's father was General Harry Lee, who, so far from ever incurring or meriting a reproof from General Washington, was the nearest and most intimate friend of that great man during his whole life, and was selected by the unanimous vote of Congress to deliver the funeral discourse at his burial. It was in that discourse the memorable sentiment was first uttered: "First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen." Such a gross historical blunder as this would be disgraceful in a frontier village newspaper in the South; but its appearance in one of the leading journals of Radicalism at the North is quite natural.—New Orleans Times.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of.....$10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of..... 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of..... 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of..... 25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1.25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway

NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

A CHALLENGE TO THE WORLD!

We challenge the world to produce a better or a stronger recommendation for any article, for any purpose, than the following:

NOVEMBER 1, 1868.

We very cheerfully unite our testimony in favor of the great merits of the valuable disinfectant manufactured by Professor Darby, and known as DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID. From the reputation of Professor Darby as a scientific gentleman, from our own knowledge of this preparation, and from the general esteem in which it is held wherever known, we have no hesitation in recommending it as one of the most valuable household articles with which we are acquainted.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT

Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, musquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300. PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at no extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

HOMES IN BRITISH HONDURAS.

FREE FROM TAXATION.

THE PUTNAM IMMIGRATION ASSOCIATION (Limited) of the ize, British Honduras, has been founded, under the laws of that Colony, with a Capital Stock of $500,000, only in five thousand shares of $100 each.

The Association has purchased of the Colonial Government an area of about 500 square miles of territory, comprising some of the choicest Sugar, Tobacco, Corn, Rice and Cacao lands in the Colony.

The Association will sell to each family that will locate upon and occupy the land between this and the 12th of July next, 160 acres at 50 cents per acre, payable in Five Years from date of settlement, without interest. The Association will donate to every Parent and Child of each family, who may be living on the land at the end of the second year from date of settlement, one Share of the Association's Stock, the value of which will be greater than the price paid for the land.

An adult male member of each family who will locate, put up a cabin, and clear enough land to provision his family, will be recognized as a bona fide settler.

These lands will produce from three to five hogsheads of Sugar per acre, without cultivation. Sugar boiling can be carried on during eight months of the year. Two crops of Tobacco, Corn, Rice, Plantains and many kinds of vegetables can be made in a year. The country is healthy, and white men can work to better advantage in the warm months than in the Southern States. These facts are demonstrated by the experience of 350 Southerners how settled in the Colony.

No family should go that has not means sufficient for its support for twelve months after locating on the land.

The steamship Mexico will leave New Orleans for Belize on the 20th of February, the steamship Trade Wind on the 24th of February, and make the trip in five or six days. First class passage, $40, greenbacks; second class, $25. The Trade Wind makes a monthly trip.

Communications should be addressed to the undersigned, care of B. L. MASS & Co., No. 83 Magazine street, New Orleans.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT

Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $10 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Benners.

SIGN OF THE BIG TEA POT.

I would respectfully announce to my friends and the public generally, both in the city and country, that after an association of over twenty years, under the name and style of Austin & Goodwyn, formerly corner of Customhouse and Front Levee, I have permanently located as above, and shall continue my old business of

MANUFACTURING TINWARE,

in all its branches, as heretofore, and in addition will endeavor to keep at all times a full and complete stock of the best, as well as the latest and most approved

COOKING STOVES.

The names of a few will suffice to give an idea of the great variety constantly kept on hand:

The Charter Oak,	The Good Samaritan.
The Revenue,	The Torchlight,
The American,	The Brilliant,
The Magnolia,	The Fashion,
The True Kentuckian,	The Farmer,
The Maid of Orleans,	The Southern States,
The Mutual Friend,	The Sunny South,

and many others, too numerous to mention, all of which will be sold at

THE LOWEST MARKET PRICES,

for cash or approved city paper.

Being ever grateful for the liberal patronage bestowed and confidence reposed in me during my former copartnership, I would most earnestly solicit a continuance of the same, and shall pledge myself to do my utmost to maintain the reputation of the old house.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE, Staunton, Virginia.

The next session begins on the 21st day of SEPTEMBER, 1868, and closes on the 24th of June, 1869.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with a Faculty of twelve professors, teachers and matrons.

This is a Female College of the first rank; one of the most flourishing in the South; young ladies here from nearly all sections of Virginia, and various Southern States. Method of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Health and comfort of pupils unsurpassed. Those from the Gulf States, especially, have greatly improved in health. No social disquietude. The population of this great Valley is nearly all white. This institution is an educational home for the daughters of the South.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited only a moderate degree of activity since our last issue, but there has, nevertheless, been a fair amount of business in most branches of the wholesale trade. Sugar and molasses have continued quiet, with ample supplies of the former, and only a limited demand; and with operations in the latter restricted by light receipts. There has been but little movement in Western produce. A fair amount of business has been done in corn, and bacon has been in more lively demand, but very little has been reported in other leading articles.

The river has risen six inches since our last report, and is now two feet six inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the 26th instant:

Louisiana and Missis-ippi ....bales..	5598
Lake	11
Arkansas	626
Mobile	346
Florida	43
Texas	44
Total	6668

On Saturday the movement commenced with considerable spirit, buyers for Havre operating freely, and there being also a fair demand for Liverpool, and notwithstanding more stringent pretensions on the part of factors, the business summed up 4,500 bales at a general improvement of ⅛ to ¼c., low middling selling early in the day as low as 27c., but closing at 27¼ to 27½c., and middling ruling at 28¼c., but with an upward tendency. On Monday buyers again came forward ready to go on at the previous improvement, but factors further advanced their pretensions to figures above the limits of the pending orders. The demand consequently subsided and the sales were confined to 2,500 bales at rather stiffer prices, low middling ruling at 27¼ to 27½c., but selling in some instances as high as 27¾c. for strict classification, and middling commanding 28¼ to 28½c. On Tuesday, under the encouraging tenor of the early dispatches from Liverpool, the market opened with an active demand, and the subsequent telegrams being of a still more favorable character, the movement continued animated throughout the day, 8,000 bales changing hands, while, notwithstanding the upward movement was checked by a decline in foreign exchange, prices exhibited an irregular advance of ⅛ to ⅜c.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 15,000 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 713,545 bales, against 533,952 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 134,167 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is a decrease of 8,752 bales to France, of 282,092 to Great Britain, and of 23,925 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	25 to 26
Good ordinary	26¾ to 27
Low middling	27½ to 27¾
Middling	— to 28¼
Strict middling	— to 29

SUGAR.—The stock on hand is large but the market continues dull, without any change in prices. Some 300 hogsheads Louisiana were sold on Saturday and Monday at 9c. per pound for inferior, 12o. for good common, 12½c. for fair, 13½c. for fully fair, and 14c. for prime. On Tuesday 65 hogsheads sold at 12¾c. for fair. Of Cuba sugar there have been some sales in store, about 1,000 boxes, all the particulars of which are suppressed.

MOLASSES.—The supplies are light and sell quite readily, although the demand is limited.

FLOUR.—With large receipts and a limited demand holders have been unable to sustain prices since our last review, although double extra has been in fair request.

CORN.—The market has been in good supply, but with only a moderate demand prices have ruled lower since our last review.

OATS are in good supply, but the market is dull and prices have ruled lower.

BRAN.—This article has been in good supply on the landing since our last review, and has met with quite ready sale at firm and full prices.

HAY has continued in good supply and fair demand since our last review.

VOLUME XV.—NUMBER 14.
WHOLE NUMBER..... 746.

NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, APRIL 10, 1869.

$3 00 A YEAR IN ADVANCE.
OFFICE—112 CAMP STREET.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—Morning. House.—Passed the Senate bill reviving the grants of railroad lands to Alabama, with amendments.

Also, a resolution authorizing the Election Committee to investigate the Louisiana elections during recess.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—Evening. Senate.—The chaplain to-day prayed that the patriot arms of Cuba might be strengthened and the isles of the sea delivered from their oppressors.

A joint resolution was offered authorizing the President to appoint a commission to report on the ship canal across the isthmus.

The bill reorganizing the judiciary passed with several amendments and goes back to the House.

The following message of the President was received by Congress at four o'clock this afternoon:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

* * * I have no doubt that you will concur with me in the opinion that it is desirable to restore the States which were engaged in the rebellion to their proper relations to the government and the country at as early a period as the people of those States shall be found willing to become peaceful and orderly communities, and to adopt and maintain such constitutions and laws as will effectually secure the civil and political rights of all persons within their borders.

The authority of the United States, which has been vindicated and established by its military power, must undoubtedly be asserted for the absolute protection of all its citizens in the full enjoyment of the freedom and security which is the object of a Republican government, but whenever the people of a rebellious State are ready to enter in good faith upon the accomplishment of this object in entire conformity with the constitutional authority of Congress, it is certainly desirable that all causes of irritation should be removed as promptly as possible, that a more perfect union may be established and the country restored to peace and prosperity.

The convention of the people of Virginia, which met in Richmond on Tuesday, December 3, 1867, framed a constitution for that State, which was adopted by the convention on the 17th of April, 1868, and I desire respectfully to call the attention of Congress to the propriety of providing by law for the holding of an election in that State at some time during the months of May and June next, under the direction of the military commander of the district, at which the question of the adoption of that constitution shall be submitted to the citizens of the State, and if this should seem desirable I would recommend that a separate vote be taken upon such part as may be thought expedient, and at the same time and under the same authority, there shall be an election for the officers provided for under such constitution, and that the constitution, or such parts thereof as shall be adopted by the people, submitted to Congress on the first Monday of December next for its consideration, so that if the same is then approved, the necessary steps will have been taken for the restoration of the State of Virginia to its proper relations to the Union.

I am led to make this recommendation from the confident hope and belief that the people of that State are now ready to co operate with the national government in bringing it again into such relations to the Union as it ought as soon as possible to establish and maintain, and to give to all its people those equal rights under the law which were asserted in the Declaration of Independence in the words of one of the most illustrious of its signers.

I desire also to ask the consideration of Congress to the question whether there is not just grounds for believing that the constitution framed by a convention of the people of Mississippi for that State and once rejected might not be again submitted to the people of that State in like manner, and with the probability of the same result.

U. S. GRANT.

Nominated to-day: P. B. S. Pinchback, register of the land office of New Orleans; Charles M. Loomis, register of the land office of Jackson, Mississippi.

Confirmed: Wm. Stedman, consul at Santiago de Cuba; O. M. Long, consul at Panama, and fifty others.

Considerable feeling was created in diplomatic circles by the presence of Cuban partisans and exiles in the diplomatic gallery of the House to-day, introduced there by Banks.

The following is the first section of the tenure of office act, as "suspended:"

SEC. 1. Be it enacted, etc., That every person holding any civil office to which he has been, or hereafter may be, appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall have become duly qualified to act therein, shall be entitled to hold such office during the term for which he shall have been appointed, unless sooner removed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or by the appointment, with the like advice and consent, of a successor in his place, except as herein otherwise provided.

SENATOR SPRAGUE'S SPEECH.

Several facts give emphasis to this "deliverance." The Senator gave more to support the war than all the Senate together—this he affirmed in the speech. He voted to impeach President Johnson. He is the richest manufacturer in New England. He is the son-in-law of the Chief Justice of the United States. He was in all the secrets of the management, and purposes of the war, as carried on by the government. He declares that "no aristocracy ever exercised such complete power and jurisdiction over everything that concerned a people as was now concentrated in the hands of the dominant party." The dissentions between the two wings of the Radical party may yet save the Constitution. We give extracts from this important utterance:

"He is a bold man who attempts to assert himself on this floor at any time contrary to the prejudices or the general opinion of the majority, or a preponderating proportion of this body. * * * *

"When I listened to the arguments that were urged upon this body by the Senator from Michigan, (Mr. Howard,) when he made use of the expression, 'where thrift may follow fawning,' it made an impression on my mind that stands with me to day. If this body needs such a correction as these words admit, it is a body that ought not to have the charge of the distribution of the honors, the emoluments, and the prerogatives of office. * *

"I for one, in looking back upon the past history of this country—and the people, whatever philosophers may say, will come to the same conclusion—have come to believe that your war has not been won for the liberties of any class of people; your war that you have just partially concluded has had no high virtuous principle at the bottom of it. It has had simple contentious for power, for place, and for occupation, commencing in this body, and permeating throughout the country.

* * * * * *

"For six years, for myself, I would rather have stormed a triple line of presented bayonets or a park of artillery in full play than to have stood on this floor and advocated any ideas that I might have had. In advocating those ideas, commencing at the beginning, I should have lost them, from the indifference, from the inattention, and from the contempt received by one not educated to familiarity with debate and the confidence of the floor. It is not only in my own person that I have witnessed this inquisitorial policy. There are those around me who have not yet recovered from the stings of the influence of the majority of this body for standing up, as they were determined to do, for their duty as they understood it.

"You have, by the contentions beginning here, through the ambition of one class of men, built up two great, two powerful bodies of men; and you have built them up for a purpose, that they might unite with your own ambitious ends for office, and place, and power; and you have gone from here to your respective peoples, both North and South, in order to create great opportunities, that you might go on in that way prospering in employment and in office. * * *

"You fight against titles and aristocracies. There never were titles and aristocracies that exercised the complete power and jurisdiction over everything that concerned a people that is concentrated in this body to-day. * *

"Sir, the position in which, so far as I am a judge, the people of the North were placed at the beginning of the late war, was disgraceful to all legislation of the past. Did you who now sit in your seats tell us that this war was pending? Did you ever tell us that we were at any time on the brink of a fearful convulsion? We rushed into that war without discipline, without preparation, without knowledge of the impending catastrophe. Is it fair, is it just, is it generous, that that policy should be pursued hereafter? Such, sir, was my knowledge of it. Nobody ever told me, or those whom I now represent, of the ruin that four short years brought upon us. * * *

"Sir, all have studied the results of the inquisition, commencing with the fourth century and ending in this. Obnoxious and cruel as the result of that action suggests itself to every man's mind, I do not believe that its action caused more anxiety, more trouble, more terror than the acts of Congress applied to the people during the war, both North and South, and since the war has ended; far if there was any tyranny exercised, either by one man or by a set of men, aiming at a given purpose, that tyranny was exhibited over the people of this country, South and North, in the exactions made upon them while the war was pressing, and since then in the adjustment of their material interests. The troubles, the anxieties and the uncertainties which have operated upon the minds of business men and their families have been unknown in the history of any other nation that has ever existed."

THE MISSISSIPPI BILL DEFEATED.—The vote in the House of Representatives on the infamous Mississippi bill is suggestive of returning reason and decency on the part of a portion of the Republicans. Mr. Farnsworth, of Illinois, moved to postpone the bill until next December, and on this motion an excited debate arose. Mr. Ward, of New York, accused Mr. Farnsworth and Mr. Dawes of "Conservative" tendencies, and Butler referred to them as allies of the Democracy. Even Schenck could not stand the bill—Schenck who could even find courage to defend the whisky ring—and of him the grieving Ward exclaimed, "And thou, too, Brutus!" But all was of no avail. Carpet baggery and scalawaggery had made themselves so ineffably repulsive, even to their inventors, that these turned from them with loathing, like Frankenstein from the monster which he had fashioned. When the vote was taken Mr. Farnsworth's motion to postpone prevailed by 103 to 62, and of the majority 54 were Republicans.—Crescent.

"EGO ET REX."—Age and mental incompetency are no bar to holding the office and emoluments of an English bishop. The Bishop of Winchester has had a severe stroke of paralysis, and is bordering on the age of eighty; the Bishop of Salisbury, both in mind and body, is prostrate; the Bishop of Bath and Wells is now quite inefficient; and the Bishop of Exeter, who has arrived at the advanced age of ninety, has ceased for twelve years to discharge the duties of visitation and confirmation. For upward of thirty years he has lived at Torquay, which is in a corner of the diocese and inconvenient to the clergy, though a considerable sum has been advanced—of course, public money—for repairing the palace at Exeter. The salaries of these prelates are said to amount to $100,000, and they are virtually the salaries of superannuated public servants.

THE COLENSO CASE.—Another important step has been taken in the Colenso case. The Metropolitan of the Anglican dioceses in South Africa, after excommunicating Colenso, and deposing him from office, has now consecrated another bishop for Colenso's diocese. This is probably the first instance of a bishop of the Church of England within the British dominions having been appointed by the ecclesiastical instead of the secular authority. It is clearly a serious blow to the principle of State churchism. Many High and Low Churchmen, though strenuously opposed to the theological views of Dr. Colenso, have therefore taken the alarm and petitioned the home government against the recognition of the new bishop.

PRESIDENT GRANT did not so much resent being unable to get a seat in his own pew at the new Methodist cathedral on the Sabbath after its consecration as to stay away the next Sabbath. He found the pew empty, swept, and garnished. What would they think in the courts of Europe of the chief executive and his family being obliged to leave the church, because on coming to his pew he found it occupied and all the other seats were crowded?—New York Independent.

APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION.

MR. EDITOR: The following editorial, from the Southern Churchman, is a clear and candid statement of facts connected with the history of the modern doctrine of the "apostolic succession." It sets forth the utterly absurd position of those men in the Protestant Episcopal Church who hold and teach this doctrine. After such a presentation of facts, for facts they are, and not mere opinions—and this is not a tithe of them—it requires great power of face to urge such an opinion upon intelligent people. Indeed I do not see how a man can do it and possess common honesty; for he must know, if he has taken pains to inform himself, that this is not the doctrine of his church, but only of a faction in it. This notion has no authority from antiquity. It never was taught in any church until set forth by Bishop Bancroft in 1582.

HONESTY.

Our neighbor, the Church Journal, under the rather quaint title of "Line and Plummet," discusses the subject of the ministry; and affirms the absolute necessity, and under all circumstances, of having bishops in factual succession with the apostles, if a society is to be any part whatever of the church of Christ.

We will present a few difficulties in the way of maintaining such views which seem to us insurmountable.

1. We can hold nothing as necessary to the existence of the church which is not enjoined in Scripture; and by being enjoined, we do not mean "in so many words," but even by way of necessary inference. That the apostolic form of government was what we now understand by Episcopal, we have no doubt. Nor have we any doubt that "love feasts" and the "kiss" were apostolical; but unless there be something more than apostolic custom for episcopacy; if, in other words, the divinely commissioned apostles have not laid down episcopacy as absolutely necessary for the church, we must be excused from believing it, because some, not inspired at all, have chosen to do so. Article VI., "Of the Sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures for Salvation," tells us what cannot be proved thereby is not to be required of any man, that it should be believed as an article of the faith. And Palmer in his learned work on "The Church," introduced by the present Bishop of Maryland, High Churchman as he is, only goes so far as to say that bishops alone are empowered by divine right, at least in ordinary cases, to ordain. I say, "in ordinary cases," because, etc. * * * Nor does it seem that this opinion, if rightly understood, and discreetly advanced, involves any consequences injurious to religion, etc.—vol. 2, 388-9—which it would if it were absolutely commanded in Holy Scripture.

2 Another difficulty besides the one from lack of command on the part of Christ and his apostles is, that the Episcopal Church teaches no such doctrine. If episcopacy be of the essence of the church, we have the unaccountable fact that the Prayer Book undertakes (as in the XIX Article) to define the church and leaves out one of its essential notes—a piece of stupidity which we would be very slow to accuse the Prayer Book of. And as her definition of the church is taken from the Lutheran definition of the same, it is only the plainer that the church teaches no such doctrine as the indispensable necessity of episcopacy. So Harold Browne affirms; and so did our own Bishop White; this latter saying if any one taught episcopacy as necessary, it was his own private opinion.

3. Besides the fact that neither the Bible nor the Prayer Book teaches this doctrine, the authors and compilors of the Prayer Book do not teach it, but teach the reverse; and it is a very poor apology for this fact to say, as does the Church Journal, "we think it very doubtful whether even the Reformers themselves were as well read in regard to the true nature of the ministry as men in their position might have been." Whether the Reformers were ignorant or not, the fact that they did not hold the doctrine taught by our neighbor, is pretty good proof as to how the Prayer Book is to be interpreted; and therefore the difficulty under No. 2 is the more apparent.

4. We have another difficulty in not believing the indispensable necessity of episcopacy under all circumstances; and that is, not only did not our Reformers believe it, but neither did the theologians of the English Church, who disputed with the Puritans, believe it. Our contemporary seems to intimate that the Reformers had so much to do with transubstantiation and the pope, that they had no time for research on questions afterward debated by the unappeasable Puritans. But then the doctors who did debate with the Puritans did not believe it.

We have three very large and closely printed volumes of Archbishop Whitgift's disputations with these Puritans, and he tells them "that any one kind of government is so necessary that without it the church cannot be saved, or that it may not be altered into some other kind, thought to be more expedient, I utterly deny;" and his reasons among others are: "because I find no one certain and perfect kind of government prescribed or commanded in the Scripture to the church of Christ; which no doubt should have been done, if it had been a matter necessary unto the salvation of the church."

We have nearly if not quite as much written against these same Puritans by Hooker; and he tells them that the only thing which can utterly cut off any man from the church is apostacy; while according to the Journal it is "no episcopacy;" and Hooker not only says there may be good grounds for allowing ordination without a bishop, but he affirms the mutability of all laws of church government: "If, therefore, we did seek to maintain that which most advantageth our own cause, the very best way for us, and the strongest against them (Puritans) were to hold even as they do, that in Scripture there must needs be found some particular form of church polity which God hath instituted and which for that very cause belongeth to all churches, to all times." This he would not do and did not do; though the Church Journal does. And moreover, it was this that the Puritans did; maintain there was in Scripture a certain form of church government which could not be altered. Our neighbor of the Church Journal, in the lapse of ages, has come to stand on the side of the Puritans; he is maintaining the Puritan doctrine, while we Reformed Churchmen stand with the Bible, the Prayer Book, and the learned doctors of the church against the Puritans.

6. But our difficulties are not ended here. Not only did not the Reformers and our divines who disputed with the Puritans hold the indispensable necessity of episcopacy, but we are at a loss to find but very few of our writers who did. This is one of the novelties in the church which Bishop Hopkins, twenty-five years ago, pointed out and wrote against. Field held no such views; the extremists, Laud and Montagne, held no such views; how many and who were they who did hold them? The Archbishop of Canterbury in 1853 wrote: "I hardly imagine that there are two bishops on the bench, or one clergyman in fifty throughout our church, who would deny the validity of the orders of those pastors solely on account of their wanting the imposition of episcopal hands." Now if our learned contemporary, the Church Journal, will begin at the beginning of the Reformation, and give us his catena of witnesses who held the absolute necessity of episcopacy to constitute a church, we shall be very much obliged to him; especially if he will give us volume, edition and page on which such sentiments are to be found. Believing, therefore, with Bishop Hopkins, that such notions are a novelty, this is another difficulty in the way of our holding them; they are both novel and puritanical.

7. We have other difficulties that look to us insurmountable. We will suppose that A. B. is baptized by a non-Episcopal minister; a layman, therefore, according to the Journal; a baptism which the Prayer Book once required in case of necessity; and which in court has been proved not contrary to the teaching of the church; and a baptism acknowledged valid by nearly every respectable theologian. Well—into what society is A. B. baptized? Is this baptized Christian a member of the church or not? And if of the church, of what church, if not the Catholic Church of Christ? Hence episcopacy, we would say, was not necessary to the existence of the church; because A. B. is in the church, and yet not a member of any Episcopal Church.

But if this non Episcopal minister can give valid baptism and all the grace connected therewith (which seems to be the teaching of the church universal,) why may he not also give a valid communion or Lord's Supper to this Christian man he has baptized, and the grace connected therewith? If he has the power to give valid baptism without episcopal ordination, why has he not the power to give validity to the other sacrament? If there be any difference between the two sacraments, baptism is really more important than the other. For our part, we are unable to see why he cannot; if the validity of non-Episcopal baptism is granted; which is the teaching of every branch of the church of Christ—Roman, Greek (we believe) and English. But if this non-Episcopal baptism be valid and this non-Episcopal communion be valid, and non-Episcopal preaching be valid—and a number of Christian persons be gathered together in the use of these sacraments—why here we have a church; and a church without episcopacy; so that we cannot see how episcopacy be absolutely necessary.

We are very far from apologizing or seeming to apologize for schism; it is a great and grievous sin; but schism is a separation in the church and not from it. We greatly deplore that in these United States a commissioner of the census should inform us he had received reports from one hundred different Christian sects. This is a sad fact; but we cannot mend it or even alter it by taking the ground of our highly respected contemporary, the Church Journal.

One would suppose that the most necessary thing to make a true church of Christ was communion with Christ, and holiness of life. But on the supposition, this is not at all necessary to constitute the church. It is not baptism; it is not faith in Jesus, nor love for Him, nor obedience to Him, nor all Christian graces—nay, nothing of the kind—it is episcopacy! We are sure the Journal will excuse us if we say that our mind cannot believe this, any more than it can believe four and five are fifteen. And certain we are, that no Christian man ought to believe it, unless impelled by arguments too convincing to be gainsaid. But we are not only unable to see the force of these arguments, but are unable to discover any catena of Episcopal theologians who did. For these reasons and others, we cannot hold the views taught by our contemporary with his "Line and Plummet." His line is not long enough, nor his plummet heavy enough to measure the extent, or sound the depths of that church for which the Lord of glory lay down his precious life.

The church of Christ mystical, teaches our judicious Hooker, consists of all who shall inherit eternal life; the church of Christ visible, says the same authority, consists of all who by eternal profession be Christians; yea, although they be impious idolaters, wicked heretics, persons excommunicable, yea, and cast out for notorious improbity. Heretics, therefore, are not utterly cut off from the visible church of Christ.

THE "Manuel of Presbyterian Foreign Missions" gives a summary of Protestant missions throughout the world, according to which there are 571 Presbyterian foreign missionaries, of whom 275 are from Germany (German Reformed, probably,) 71 from the American Old School, 43 from the New School and under the American Board, 86 from the three branches of Scotch Presbyterianism, 10 Irish Presbyterian, 9 English Presbyterian, 21 from France, and 14 each of the American United Presbyterian and Reformed (Dutch) To the Congregationalists the same authority credits 399 missionaries, of whom 156 are under the London Missionary Society, (but of these "some are Presbyterian,") 102 under the American Board, 69 are English Baptists, and 59 are American Baptists. Of 340 Episcopal missionaries the United States send out 19, and England 312. The Methodists are credited with 279, of whom 74 are from America and 205 from England. In all there are 1,777 Protestant missionaries; of whom 533 are in India and Ceylon, 277 in Southern Africa, 217 in Guiana and the West Indies, 196 in the Islands of the Pacific and the China Sea, 133 in China and Japan, 132 in Western Africa, and 89 in Western Asia. The large number in Southern Africa and in other British colonies includes many Episcopal pastors of feeble churches of English settlers, who are not really foreign missionaries.

HIS PROVIDENCE.

Here is the table every morning spread
With food that is sufficient for the day;
Bitter may be the draught, and black the bread,
And yet I must not, cannot turn away.
Perchance I thought, "My father is a king,
And I on choicest dainties shall be fed!"
And it may seem to be a cruel thing
To hunger even for a crust of bread.
Ah me! the thorns are for the children's feet;
The crown of suffering they are doomed to wear;
The earthly discipline must be complete
Ere they the heavenly recompense can share;
And I, a child, too weak to understand
The merit of the grace for which I plead,
Can only say, and clasp the extended hand,
"My heavenly Father knoweth what I need!"

At times I feel my faith grow cold and dim
When each petition of its answer fails;
But what is dark to me is light to Him
Before whose eye eternity unveils.
Each day beholds some mystery disclose,
As in the soul new purposes are wrought;
And in a different way from that I chose,
I find myself possessed of what I sought.
Yet every day I fail to learn my part,
And seem to pray and labor all in vain,
Until God's grace illuminates my heart,
And then the lesson is once more made plain.
'Tis written all along my pilgrim way;
At every step His providence I read,
And He who guides enables me to say,
"My heavenly Father knoweth what I need!"

This is the spirit of the lowly one
Who eats the crust in thankfulness of soul,
And feels a higher life on earth begun,
In meek submission to supreme control.
The meanest hovel and the scantiest fare,
A hidden treasure often have confessed,
When saints and martyrs congregated there,
And welcomed Jesus as their reverend guest
Though painful now the pathway that I tread,
And few and transient be the hours of bliss,
I'll follow in the way my Saviour led
Until I reach a better home than this.
If I am bending 'neath a heavy cross,
I know the crown in glory shall exceed,
And come what may, of recompense or loss,
"My heavenly Father knoweth what I need!"

BIOGRAPHICAL.

IN MEMORIAM.

Died, at her residence in Greenville, Mississippi, March 6, 1869, at half-past ten o'clock P. M., Mrs. EVIE H. COMSTOCK, daughter of Mrs. S. Myra Smith, aged twenty-one years.

The subject of our sketch was born and raised in this (Washington) county. Up to her nineteenth year she was not religious, though well instructed both by the precept and the example of a devoted Christian mother. Strength and brilliancy of mind, tempered by rare common sense, made her stand first in the circle of her associates. In the summer of 1867 she determined to join the church and seek religion—yielding to the influence which her mother's pious training and earnest prayers had long exerted upon her. In this frame of mind she moved into Greenville, just before the week of prayer appointed by our bishops in the August of that year. At the first opportunity she came resolutely forward and joined the church. For many days and nights she wrestled for the blessing of pardon as if her mind and heart were wholly engrossed in it. At length, while singing the hymn, "Jesus, I my cross have taken," etc., she was fully assured of her acceptance, and seemed never afterward to doubt it for a moment.

Throwing herself, with all the enthusiasm of her strong nature, into the service of the church, she seemed to forget worldly pleasures, and sought happiness only in religion. She declined no duty that was presented, but with alacrity and efficiency sought out and pursued every means of doing good. Her class at Sunday school will not forget her punctuality, her faithfulness, and her interest in them. At prayer meeting, at class meeting, and at preaching her presence will be sorely missed.

Though enthusiastic, there was not a tinge of fanaticism in her religion. Though earnest, her zeal was characterized by prudence and sobriety. In the most perplexing circumstances she exercised a Christian discretion which could only spring from a deep well of love and patience, replenished continually by intimate communion with God.—None but those who saw her inner life imagined what a depth of earnestness was in her Christian character. She was a devoted wife and a devoted daughter, but her warm human affections never came in competition with her devotion to the Saviour. I verily believe that she could have given up all for Christ, tenderly as her affections clung to their dear objects. I have dwelt thus long upon her life because it was necessary in order to explain the manner of her death. It is not the partial hand of friendship, but truth that has guided my pen.

When informed that she had pneumonia, calling her mother and husband to the bedside, she told them that it was evidently impossible for her to recover, asked them to pray that the Lord's will might be done, whether that were for her to live or to die, and then turned her mind to prayer, saying, "I know I have not been such a Christian as I ought, and now I will prepare my soul for heaven." During most of that day she was silent, engaged in prayer. While parched with thirst, and pondering upon the pain she would have to endure, the most comforting Scriptures came into her mind; as, when thinking of her burning thirst, she seemed to hear the Saviour saying to the woman of Samaria at Jacob's well, "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give shall never thirst;" it shall be "a well of water springing up unto eternal life." After this period of silent prayer she became perfectly happy, saying that she felt Jesus to be right there with her. She was triumphant. Once afterward, indeed, she felt a pang at parting with all that was dear. She had been married only a year. She had lately moved into a delightful home, furnished with every comfort by a fond husband, and she had an infant a week old. Thinking of these ties, she enumerated them aloud: "Here is my comfortable home; here is my dear husband and my little baby." Then raising her hands and eyes to heaven, she cried out: "Oh, Father, loose the cords, loose the cords." Afterward she seemed to forget everything earthly, and to be ravished with the name of Jesus. She plead with those who came near her to live more for Jesus, and begged her young religious companions not to live so far from God. She sent messages of similar purport to many whom she did not see. Jesus was her theme. "Jesus, the name that is above every name," and many quotations like this were constantly on her lips. While no one was present but her mother and husband, she once opened her eyes from apparent sleep and simply uttered the words, "Blessed Jesus!" And again, when no one was there but her husband, without opening her eyes, she pressed his hand and whispered, "Jesus, sweet Jesus!" When she had delivered the messages to all, she said, "Now, my Christian friends, I have said all I wished to say. Let me rest." After that she had not many conscious moments. Her strength gradually declined until death prevailed over the mortal part. The beautiful light of her eyes was quenched, and the music of her sweet voice died away in groans and was hushed. I stood by the bed and looked upon the cold, still form, and thought how a husband's passionate heart was surging with a storm of grief; how a mother's life was spoiled of its light and its comfort, and how the little infant, sleeping near, would never know the precious love of a mother. But, after all, I could not feel as if I was in the presence of death. The bright smile that had lit up her face in the last hours of victory still lingered there after the pulses were stopped, and the eyes were closed from beholding the light. That smile seemed to say: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" It has a voice in my ear—the echo of the victor's shout. The last enemy was destroyed.

W. W. DRAKE.

REV. PETER JAMES, next to the last, it is believed, of the original members who constituted the old Mississippi Conference, embracing the States of Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, died on the evening of the 18th of March, 1869, in peace of mind, and an assurance of his interest in Christ and the resurrection of the just, in the eightieth year of his age.

Some time before his death, in conversation on the subject of his approaching end, he told his son Peter that he wanted no pompous parade of burial, no funeral discourse, nor even an extended obituary notice; that as he had lived for many years in obscurity, so he wished to die without observation; that he only wished that his surviving brethren might be informed by a brief obituary notice that he had passed away in the faith which he had preached, and at peace with God and all mankind. He frankly confessed and bitterly regretted his unfaithfulness and inefficiency in the work of the ministry. Far better, he said, would it have been had he given his time and attention chiefly to the preaching of the Gospel, and less to the business of this life. He regarded himself as having been severely chastised for his delinquencies. But we have good reason to believe that the great Shepherd most graciously restored his soul, and took him to the bosom of His redeeming love.

On a visit to his sick-bed, some weeks before his death, by an old brother preacher, whom he recognized by the reminiscence of certain scenes of past years, with which the names of Winans, Drake and Haney, a junior colleague, etc, were connected, he clapped his hands and said with great emotion, "I am happy in the anticipation of my eternal rest in heaven." Only a few hours before he breathed his last breath, being questioned by the same brother, "Father James, do you know that you are dying?" he answered very distinctly as follows, "O yes, yes." "Do you feel that all is well with you?" "Yes, yes." "Then you feel that Jesus is yours?" "Yes, yes, yes. That has been attended to long ago." "Then the struggle of life will soon be over with you, and your warfare at an end." "Yes, I could not do it now"—understood to mean that he could not prepare for death in his present condition, had he neglected it. O may his living and dying words profit us who are following him to the grave!

H. TOWNSEND.

RICHLAND CIRCUIT, Miss. Conference.

THERE are to be, we trust, no more missionary complications in China. Earl Clarendon's sensible dispatch requires that, except in cases of immediate danger to life, no consul shall take upon himself the responsibility of using force to secure the rights of Englishmen. All such cases must be referred to the foreign office. This is not only a step toward recognizing the rights of China as an independent nation, but will avoid the discredit to Christians which has followed when consuls, willing to magnify their office, have interfered, as at Yang-chau, to right the wrongs of missionaries. If they are willing, like their Master, to do his work in dangerous places, they must risk the danger. This liability they assume; and, though they possess treaty rights, they ought to be and are slow to demand them at the expense of force and bloodshed. We have been ashamed to see the Gospel of Peace compromised by the action of Mr. Medhurst and the naval force at his command. Prince Kung and the Imperial Council at Pekin showed themselves ready to listen to reason and to do what was right.

AS A PROOF of the reason of brutes being perfectible, and thus something more than instinct, it is said that a bird's first nest is often injudiciously placed and badly made. Little by little the work improves, and the feathered artist attains his ideal. The bird of prey teaches its young ones to launch into the air, to guide, to hover, and to measure the distance at which a victim is to be struck. Young swallows, who have never effected a migration, are trained by repeated evolutions performed in troops. After a sufficient number of trial trips, the united army takes its departure under the guidance of experienced leaders. The wolf, in spite of his keen appetite for flesh, requires a long apprenticeship to become a skillful hunter.

THE Court of Appeals at Naples has decided that the marriage of a priest is allowable, and has directed the ceremony to take place in the case of the priest who wished it. In his defense it was asserted by his counsel that Christ chose married men for his disciples, and the attorney general, in his speech, said that he would far sooner hold out his hand to a priest who took his wife to church than to one who took his concubine. These sentiments were received with shouts of applause. Celibacy is one of the questions to be discussed at the approaching council at Rome.

ONE OF MANY.

MR. EDITOR: Some time since I wrote a paragraph headed "A Half Hour with Bad Books." It was the experience of a minister, who stated that some twenty years before a corrupting book fell into his hands, and he spent half an hour in its perusal, and that in that time he had received an injury from which he had never recovered, and he felt he never should. He felt what many others have found to be true, that there are many things which ought never to be known. Their knowledge is pollution. Let the young curb their curiosity. H.

INFIDEL AND FICTITIOUS READING.

The wholesome and soul-reviving truths and instructions contained in many of our religious periodicals are too much supplanted by secular, fictitious and infidel prints, that are flooding our country in every direction, and poisoning the minds of our youth and those of riper years.

My mind was forcibly impressed on this subject, something more than a year since, on being called to stand by the bedside of a dying fellow-youth, in the place of my former labors. He was a graduate of Union College—the youngest son of respectable and wealthy parents, residing in Onondaga county, New York. No money or pains had been spared by these indulgent and pious parents to qualify this "Benjamin" of their old age for future usefulness. But while absent from the parental roof, during his academic and collegiate career, he found access to the writings of infidel poets and skeptics of different ages, in connection with much of the light reading of the day, in the frequent perusal of which he contracted a taste for this kind of reading and amusement, which strengthened and matured the native skepticism of the heart to that extent that the restraints of Christianity were measurably thrown off, and infidelity reigned triumphant. Denying, as he did, the immortality of the soul, of course looser rein was given to the baser passions. And cherishing a roving desire, which was also gratified, he soon found himself mingling in many of the amusements and games of the South; and in those hot-beds of vice and destruction the germs of premature disease and death were fast matured. On returning home, the wreck of blasted hopes and fondest anticipations, having, like the "prodigal," wasted his substance and ruined his character, he lingered here awhile under the hand of consumption's doom seal, occasionally lamenting his folly, and struggling to be released from the fatal grasp of infidelity, which had so strongly environed his soul.

When about to take his leave of the world he called the writer to his bedside, having previously sent him a request to preach his funeral sermon from a text of his own selection—Job vii. 21—and desired the privilege, through the preacher, of warning his young friends, on that occasion, to avoid the course which he had pursued—the rocks on which he foundered. Hear him on this point, as I recorded the sentiment from his lips:

"I ought to have been a bright and shining light in the world. My advantages have been good, but my life, for the most part, has been dark and dreary, for want of a firm belief in the Christian religion. Had I another life to live I should pursue a different course; and to all skeptics I would say, the safer side is that of piety and religion. It is now too late with me to recall the past—the experiment is tried; through what scenes I am now to pass is to me unknown. That fearful word eternity rings in my ears. Fictitious and skeptical reading has been the Bohun Upas of my soul! Warn the young everywhere to avoid this whirlpool of destruction—this rock upon which I foundered!"

THE Sultan of Turkey has ordered the abolition everywhere throughout his empire of the regulations which prevented Christians from entering mosques. The only condition exacted is that all Christians who avail themselves of this privilege shall act in a becoming manner while visiting the buildings—a stipulation which will press very heavily on a certain class of tourists most of us have seen striding and stamping through churches on the European continent.

A PLEA FOR GETTING UP.

The London Daily News discusses the change that has taken place in modern habits in regard to early rising. Swift declared that he never knew any man arrive at greatness who was not an early riser. Frederick the Great got up every morning at four o'clock, and so, we believe, did John Wesley, who, by the way, made early rising a religion, and preached against lying in bed as a sin. Peter the Great always rose before daylight, and Dr. Doddrige claimed to have added ten years to his life by cutting off two hours of morning sleep every day for forty years. As to our ancestors in the heroic times, they would be ashamed indeed even of the early risers among their degenerate children. Bluff Harry and his wives and courtiers had their breakfast at the unearthly hour of seven, and had got their dinner well over before noon.—Good Queen Bess, and the scholars and wits, and great generals and statesmen who surrounded her, dined between eleven and twelve, and took their supper between five and six in the afternoon. Early to bed and early to rise has made England what she is, and would make all who adopted the principle first and foremost among their fellows.

The fact is, that as life becomes more concentrated and its pursuits more eager, short sleep and early rising become impossible. We take more sleep than our ancestors, and we take more because we want more. Six hours' sleep may do very well for a plowman or a bricklayer, or any man who has no other exhaustion than that produced by manual labor, and the sooner he takes it after his labor is over the better; but for a man whose labor is mental, the stress of whose work lies on his brain and nervous system, and who is tired in the evening with a day of mental application, neither early to bed nor early to rise is wholesome. He needs letting down to the level of repose. The longer the interval between the active use of his brain and his retirement to bed the better his chance of sleep and recruitment. To him an hour after midnight is probably as good as two hours before it, and even then his sleep will not so completely and quickly restore him as it will his neighbor who is only physically tired. He must not only go to bed later, but lie longer. His best sleep is probably in the early morning hours, when all the nervous excitement has passed away, and he is in absolute rest.

There is, therefore, a good deal to be said in favor of the late habits of modern life. It was all very well for Englishmen to go to bed early and get up early in the times of the Tudors, Plantagenets and Stuarts. Their lights were bad, and it was expensive work to make a room light enough to be pleasant. They did not turn night into day as we do; but it was probably because they did not know how to do it as we know. Gas is responsible for a good deal of our love of the long evening hours. A London house, at this time of the year, is never so bright as it is after dark. When the blinds are down and the shutters are closed, and the snug curtains are drawn, and the room is flooded with brilliant gaslight, and the bright fire is stirred up in the shining grate, nobody regrets the sickly daylight which all day long has been feebly struggling through the fog and smoke. Why should a man wish to shorten the brightest hours of the twenty-four for the sake of an extra hour or two of foggy, ineffectual morning? It is not mere retaliation on our ancestors; it is simply the adaptation of their maxims to our modern needs to say that, for many of us, one waking hour after ten at night is worth two hours before nine in the morning. We live double at that social evening time, and to waste such hours in sleep, when there is a spare hour in the morning which may be just as well spent in bed, is an unwise substitution of old maxims for new experience. No doubt the old maxims were wise, and would still be wise if our conditions were those of our great grandfathers; but while the maxims stand, the times have changed, and we have changed with them. We must have society, and we can only have it at night; we must take ample rest, and we can only take it in the morning. The stress of life with us is on the brain and nerves, and they can only bear the pressure by being allowed to sleep their sleep out. For a man whose work is intellectual, to have his sleep violently cut short every morning would be half equivalent to suicide. True wisdom teaches us to adapt ourselves to our circumstances. Nature does not change, and what was good for our fathers is doubtless good for us, provided the conditions are the same. But when this is not the case, we must not allow their example to become a tyranny. Modern habits are not more really indulgent than the habits of earlier times, and they best suit modern needs.

Another Wonderful Speech by Senator Sprague.

In the course of a debate in the United States Senate on the 24th, Mr. Sprague administered a rebuke to the galleries for laughing at him, the other day, for saying that they reminded him of the idiotic inmate of a burning dwelling, who laughed at all warning and perished in the flames. He said he would, nevertheless, repeat the warning. The affairs of the Congress were being mismanaged by lawyers. He felt interested in the success of the Republican party in the past, and had contributed to it, he thought, as much in character, and a good deal more in money, than other Senators. Indeed, he believed his contribution of the latter had been greater than that of all other Senators combined.

He denied that Congress had restored harmony or prosperity to the country, and asserted that the people in the South are robbers in a state of chronic revolution, and that there was no justice for the poor man, or protection for the rights and liberties of the citizens in this boasted land of freedom. Immigration had fallen off. The industry and agriculture of the country were so prostrated at the West that immigrants cannot find remunerative employment, for they cannot sell the products for enough to supply themselves with the necessaries of life. The reason is, that legislation and administration were so shaped as to encourage capital to speculate upon every industrial occupation in the country. If this course was to be continued, in less than five years there would be a clamor for a tariff to keep out foreign cotton. But great as was the mismanagement of our affairs in every department, the greatest abuses were in our financial policy.

That policy was directed and controlled by the bankers. They, no doubt, gave as good advice as they could, but experience had always shown dealers in money knew little or nothing about the relation of money to other occupations and interests. The bearing of all this was, if the legislators of the country had done their own work so badly how could they dare to assume the powers and duties of the executive also? The social condition of the country was quite as bad as the financial condition. There were less virtue and morality in American society than in any other civilized society on the face of the earth. The prevailing demoralization was frightful. What mother could send her son out into the world with any confidence that he would be able to resist the temptress that would surround him? What husband could close his door?

The country was on the brink of a precipice, and unless the people could be roused from their apathy all was lost. He had wished for and aided in the election of General Grant to the Presidency because he believed he (President Grant) had not been contaminated by the politicians and had the capacity required to see through and defeat their machinations. He had listened to the inaugural address with intense interest and been pleased by the President's expression of his purpose to be independent in the discharge of his official duties; but when he heard the passage asserting the sacredness of the public debt, he had gone away disheartened and sorrowful, because it had shown him the canker that possessed the American body-politic had got possession of the President also. He was not without hope. He hoped the President would yet discover the great error into which bad advisers had led him, and would turn away from this policy as from a charnel house. With an interesting biographical sketch of him Mr. Sprague finished his speech.

THE Ecumenical Council will meet in the right transept of St. Peter's which will accommodate over two thousand people. Subscriptions are to be called for to pay the expense of $50,000 in providing stalls for the accommodation of the prelates as well as the other enormous expenses.

THE Emperor of the French has at last, it would seem, grown tired of Baron Haussmann's pulling down and building up, and says that the game is hardly worth the awful waste of candle. "Our task is ended," says Haussmann grandly. "No," says M. Thiers, very drily, "but your resources are."

SCIENTIFIC.

POPULARIZING ART.

CHROMO LITHOGRAPHY,

by which our houses and school rooms are now filled with beautiful pictures, is a combination of Senefelder's invention with an ancient method of printing in colors by using two or more blocks. Antiquity, however, only gave the hint, which has been developed with wonderful rapidity by accomplished artists and artisans in Germany, England and the United States—the German Eogelmann being the chief originator of methods. The first patents relating to chromo-lithography bear date 1835, and in these forty four years the art has made such progress that copies of fine oil paintings are now daily produced which contain all of the original picture which the public can see, and which none but a close observer can tell from the original. At Prang's manufactory of chromos, in Boston, there is a gallery in which the proprietor sometimes hangs, side by side, an oil painting and the chromo-lithograph taken from it, both framed alike. I think that not even the artist who painted the picture could always tell them apart, and I am sure that few others could. It would be a safe thing to wager that the critics who have endeavored to write down these beautiful productions would not be always able, without handling them, to decide which was brush and which was printing press.

The process by which these chromo-lithographs are produced is simple, but it is long, delicate and expensive. One of the chromos most familiar just now, to the public is that of the boy referred to above, in the painting of which Mr. Eastman Johnson endeavored to express upon canvas that which Mr. Whittier had already written in verse:

"Blessings on thee, little man,
Barefoot boy, with cheeks of tan;
With thy turned-up pantaloons,
And thy merry-whistled tunes;
With thy red lip, redder still
Kissed by strawberries on the hill;
With the sunshine on thy face,
Through thy torn brim's jaunty grace.
From my heart I give thee joy;
I was once a barefoot boy!"

It is a small picture—about thirteen inches by ten—but to reproduce it in chromo lithograph requires twenty-six slabs of stone, weighing not far from two tons, and worth $1,400. The time occupied in preparing these stones for the press is about three months; and when once the stones are ready, an edition of a thousand copies is printed in five months more. And yet, although the original is worth $1,000, and the process of reproduction is so long and costly, a copy is sold for $5—a copy, too, which, to nineteen-twentieths of the public, says as much, and gives as much delight every time it is looked at as the original work could. It may be possible, in a few words, to convey some idea of the manner in which this particular boy, standing barefoot upon a rock in a brook, with trees, a grassy bank and blue sky behind him, is transferred from a thousand-dollar canvas to whole stacks of five-dollar pasteboard.

As far as possible, the chromo-lithographer produces his copy by the method which the artist employed in painting the original. One great difference between painting and printing is, that the printer puts on all his color at once, while the painter applies color in infinitesimal quantities. One crush of the printing press blackens the page; but a landscape grows and brightens gradually under the artist's hand, as the natural scene which he is representing ripens and colors under the softer touches of the sun, the warm winds and gentle showers of April and May. As far as possible, I say, the chromo lithographer imitates these processes of art and nature by applying color in small quantities and by many operations. He first draws upon a stone, with his pencil of soap and lampblack, a faint shadow of the picture—the outline of the boy, the trees and the grassy bank. In taking impressions from this first stone an ink is used which differs from printers' ink only in its color. Printers' ink is composed chiefly of boiled linseed oil and lamphlack; but our chromo-lithographer, employing the same basis of linseed oil, mixes with it whatever coloring matter he requires. In taking impressions from the first stone in laying, as it were, the foundation of the boy, he prefers a browned vermilion. The proof from this stone shows us a dim beginning of the boy in a cloud of brownish red and white, in which can be discerned a faint outline of the trees that are by and by to wave over his head. The face has no features. The only circumstances clearly revealed to the spectator are, that the boy has his jacket off, and that his future trousers will be dark. Color is placed, first of all, where most color will be finally wanted.

The boy is begun. He wants more vermillion, and some portions of the trees and background will bear more. On the second stone, only those portions of the picture are drawn which at this stage of the picture require more of that color. Upon this second stone, after the color is applied, the first impression is laid, and the second impression is taken. In this proof the boy is manifestly advanced. As the deeper color upon his face was not put upon the spots where his eyes are to be, we begin to discern the outline of those organs. The boy is more distinct, and the general scheme of the picture is slightly more apparent.

As yet, however, but two colors appear—brown vermilion and white. On the third stone the drawing is made of all the parts of the picture which require a blue coloring—both those that will finally appear blue and those which are next to receive a color that will combine with blue. Nearly the whole of the third stone is covered with drawing; for every part of the picture requires some blue, except those small portions which are finally to remain white. The boy is now printed for the third time, a bright blue color being spread upon the stone. The change is surprising, and we begin now to see what a pretty picture we are going to have at last. The sky is blue behind the boy, and the water around the rock upon which he stands is blue; there is blue in his eyes and in the folds of his shirt; but in the darker parts of the picture the brown vermilion holds its own, and gains in depth and distinctness from the intermixture with the lighter hue.

Stone number four explains why so much blue was used upon number three. A bright yellow is used in printing from number four, and this color, blending with the blue of the previous impression, plasters a yellowy disagreeable green on the trees and grass. The fifth stone, which applies a great quantity of brown vermilion, corrects in some degree this dauby, bad effect of the yellow, deepens the shadows and restores the spectator's confidence in the future of the boy. In some mysterious way, this liberal addition of vermilion brings out many details of the picture that before were scarcely visible. The water begins to look like water, the grass like grass, the sky like sky, and the flesh like flesh. The sixth stone adds nothing to the picture but pure black; but it corrects and advances nearly every part of it, especially the trunks of the trees, the dark shade upon the rocks, and portions of the boy's trousers.—Stone number seven gives the whole picture, except the figure of the boy, a coat of blue; which, however, only makes that bluer which was blue before, and leaves the other objects of their previous color, although brighter and clearer. The eighth stone merely puts "madder lake" upon the boy's face, hands and feet, which darkens them a little, and gives them a reddish tinge. He is, however, far from being a pleasing object; for his eyes, unformed as yet, are nothing but dirty blue spots, extremely unbecoming. The ninth stone, which applies a color nearly black, adds a deeper shade to several parts of the picture, but scarcely does anything for the boy. The tenth stone makes amends by putting upon his cheeks, hands and feet, a bright tinge of blended lake and vermilion, and giving to his eyes a somewhat clearer outline.

To an inexperienced person the picture now appears to be in a very advanced stage, and many of us would say, Put a little speculation in that boy's eyes, and let him go. Trees, rocks, grass and sky look pretty well—look a thousand times better than the same objects in paintings which auctioneers praise, and that highly. But we are only at the tenth stone. That child has to go through the press sixteen times more before Mr. Prang will consider him fit to appear before a fastidious public.

Stones number eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen and sixteen, all apply what seems to the uninstructed eye mere black. The colors are, indeed, extremely dark, although not pure black, and the chief object of these six impressions is to put into the picture those lines and shadows which the eye just mentioned cannot understand, but only enjoys. It is by such minute applications of color that a picture is raised from the scale of merit which escapes censure to that which affords delight. The last of these shading stones gives the boy his eyes, and from this time he looks like himself.

The seventeenth stone lays upon the trees and grass a peculiar shade of green that corrects them perceptibly. Number eighteen just touches the plump cheeks, the mouth and toes of the boy with mingled lake and vermilion, at which he smiles. The last seven stones continue the shading, deepening and enriching of the picture by applying to different parts of it the various mitigations of black. It is then passed through the press upon a stone which is grained in such a way as to impart to the picture the roughness of canvass; after which it is mounted upon thick pasteboard and varnished. The resemblance to the original is then such that it is doubtful if Mr. Eastman Johnson could pick out his own boy if he were surrounded with a number of copies.

It is not every picture that admits of such successful treatment as this, nor does every chromo lithographer bestow upon his productions so much pains and expense. A salable picture could be made of this boy in ten impressions; but, as we have seen, he receives twenty-six; and the process might be prolonged until a small quarry of stones had been expended upon him. Some landscapes have been executed which required fifty-two stones, and such pictures advance to completion by a process extremely similar to that employed by an artist. That is to say, color is applied to them very much in the same order, in the same minute quantities, and with an approach to the same intelligent delicacy of touch. It is an error to regard these interesting works as mechanical. A mere mechanic, it is true, by a certain Chinese servility of copying, can produce an extremely close, hard imitation of an oil painting; and much work of this kind is done in Germany and England. But in our Boston establishment no mechanic puts pencil to one of the stones employed in producing fine pictures. The artistic work is executed by artists of repute, who have themselves produced respectable paintings of the kind which they are employed to imitate. Any one who watches Mr. Harring transferring to a long series of lithographic stones Mr. Hill's painting of the Yosemite Valley will perceive that he is laboring in the spirit of an artist and by the methods of an artist. It would be highly absurd to claim for any copyist equal rank with the creator of the original, or to say that any copy can possess the intrinsic value of an original. But it is unjust to reduce to the rank of artisans the skillful and patient artists who know how to catch the spirit and preserve the details of a fine work, and reproduce in countless copies all of both which the public can discern.

This art of chromo lithography harmonizes well with the special work of America at the present moment, which is not to create, but to diffuse; not to produce literature, but to distribute the spelling book; not to add to the world's treasures of art, but to educate the mass of mankind to an intelligent enjoyment of those which we already possess. Our poets, most of them, are gray-beards, and it does not yet appear that their places are to be filled when they are gone. Our few literary men of established rank are descending into the vale of years, and their successors have not emerged into view. In the region of the fine arts there are indications of more vigorous life; but our young artists do not seem so willing as the great men of old to submit to the inexorable conditions of a lasting and a growing success—a simple, inexpensive life, steady toil, Spartan fare, and a brain uncontaminated by narcotics. And if, in the department of original science, we can boast of one great name, it is the name of a person whom we only had the sense to appropriate, not the honor to produce. Meanwhile, what our sweet and tenderly beloved Tory friends amiably style "the scum of Europe" pours upon our shores, chokes up our cities, and overspread the Western plains. When a Tory speaks of "the scum of Europe," or of "the dregs of the people," he merely means the people whom his barbaric and all grasping meanness has kept ignorant and poor. These people, as well as the emancipated slaves of the South, it devolves upon us of this generation and the next to convert into thinking, knowing, skillful, tasteful American citizens. Mr. Prang has finished his new manufactory just in time. By his assistance we may hope to diffuse among all classes of the people that feeling for art which must precede the production of excellent national works.

The public have shown an alacrity to possess these beautiful pictures. In April, 1861, Louis Prang was proprietor of a small lithographic establishment in the fourth story of a building in Boston. The impending war had not merely injured his business, but brought it to an absolute standstill. His presses were covered with dust; he had dismissed his workmen; no one came near him; and, being still in debt for his presses and stones, he was not to be reckoned, just then, among the fortunate of his species. One day, at the time when all eyes were directed to the pregnant events occurring in Charleston harbor, when Sumter and Moultrie were on every tongue and in every heart, a friend chanced to show the anxious lithographer an engineer's plan of that harbor, with the positions of all the forts, shoals and channels marked, with a map of the city in its proper place, drawings of the forts in the corners, and the distances indicated. "This would be a good thing for you to publish," said his friend. It was an oar thrown to a drowning man. A few days after, the occupants of the lofty building in which Mr. Prang had his small shop were at first surprised, and then annoyed, by the thunder of newsboys and errand-boys tramping up and thumping down the stairs leading to the lithographer's room. Four presses were soon running. The master of the shop, with surprise and pleasure beaming from his countenance, of late so dejected, was handing out copies of the map by ones, twos, dozens, twenties and hundreds, damp from the stones, as fast as the presses could print them. On the first day, before the map had got into the shop windows and upon the news stands, so large a number of single copies were sold, at twenty-five cents each, by the publisher himself, that he had at night a hatful of silver coin. The flow of cash came so suddenly and so unexpectedly that he did not know where to put it, and was obliged to use his hat, for want of a reservoir more convenient. The little map was a marvelous hit. It sold to the extent of forty thousand copies before the public mind was turned to other scenes.

And you may be sure that, when the public mind had gone over the Long Bridge into Virginia, Mr. Prang was ready with another map, and that during the four years which followed it was not his fault if the people did not perfectly comprehend the various seats of war. One of his maps, drawn so that each person could mark for himself the changing positions of the two armies, was in such demand that he had six presses running upon it, night and day, for several weeks, and sold hundreds of thousands of copies. When maps flagged, he started those card portraits of popular generals, of which millions were sold, at ten cents each, chiefly to the army. Then followed sheets of heads—fifty heads upon one large card—which had considerable success.—Atlantic Monthly.

NIGHT WORK.

Tom Moore spoke truly when he said that the best of all ways to lengthen our days is to steal a few hours from the night. Only we must steal for a good purpose, not for pleasure or dissipation, else we are losers instead of gainers by the theft. Moderate night work does no hurt to bodily or mental health, but rather to the contrary, I fancy, and I speak from experience. Note how well, and to what old age, nocturnal toilers and watchers retain their strength and faculties. Look at astronomers, whom, in our mind's eye, we always regard as snowy-locked, yet vigorous minded, strong-framed men. And are they not, as a rule? Remember Galileo living to seventy-eight, Hevelius watching till he was seventy six, and Copernicus till he reached seventy. Take our English astronomers royal, too. There was Flamsteed, who, in spite of a disordered body, toiled by night and by day, harder, as he said, than a corn-thresher, and yet reached seventy-three; Bradley, who did as much night watching, ran out the allotted period of threescore and ten years; and his successor, Maskelyne, told fourscore, all but one year. Then call to mind grand old Herschel, whose daily labors and night watchings lasted so long, and were performed so well that he may be said to have done the work of three lives, and he reached the good age of eighty-four. And have we not his son, a giant in science, who stole hour after hour from the starry nights of his youth, and gives us now sparkling essays and sound lessons, fraught with the experience which seventy-six years have gathered to his garner? Lastly learn that Mædler, who is now seventy-four, came to the British association meetings a few weeks back, and told the savans something that proved his eye—after an operation for cataract—and his intellect to be as good as they were when, thirty years ago, he made his noble map of the moons, a work that must have involved night watching enough to send an ordinary eight-hour sleeper into an everlasting doze. Whoso wishes to rob the night to the best advantage, let him sleep for two or three hours, then get up and work for two hours and then sleep out the balance of the night. Doing thus, he will not feel the loss of the sleep he has surrendered.

A vessel is fitting out in the Sandwich Islands to catch sharks. The oil will be extracted from their livers, and the fins dried for the China trade. Celestials love shark-fin soups.

Of Lord Brougham's fearlessness in his best days, when as yet he had not begun to "gloze," we have here a good example:

"About this time he resented in a very marked manner what he considered a piece of impertinence in H. R. H., the Duke of Cumberland, afterward king of Hanover. While the chancelor was addressing the House very calmly, and very much to the purpose, the duke called out, 'Question, question.' Chancellor in furore: 'I ask your lordships whether there is decency in that call?' Not contented with this expression of resentment, he lay by for an opportunity of still further punishing the royal delinquent; and soon after, speaking on the slavery abolition bill, he said: 'It would give the man of color as clear a right to sit in that house (if his majesty should so please) as either of the illustrious dukes now present (Wellington and Cumberland,) whether the illustrious duke who is illustrious by his deeds, or the illustrious duke who is illustrious by the courtesy of the House.'"

We find in Missionary Papers a very suggestive comparison between the Congregational churches of Minnesota and missionary churches of Turkey. There were in September, 1868, sixty-three Congregational churches in Minnesota, also sixty-three churches in Turkey. Minnesota had two thousand eight hundred and sixty five members, Turkey two thousand seven hundred and sixty-six. Minnesota had five settled pastors, Turkey thirty-six. Minnesota had eight self-supporting churches, Turkey twenty one. The average income of the Minnesota families (reduced to gold) was $550, of the Turkish families $250. The total contributions in Minnesota for all religious purposes was $15,536 (gold,) in Turkey $13,055. The comparison speaks well for the Turkish churches, if not for the American; and we are confident that the Minnesota churches are fully equal to any others in the country in their earnestness and liberality.

There are now twenty-six stations connected with the Waldensian mission in Italy, being four more than last year. They have an agent in every large town except Rome. Last year the number of members admitted to the church was one hundred and thirty-three, this year it was three hundred and twenty four, and the total number of communicants was one thousand eight hundred and forty-six, and the pupils at the week and Sabbath day schools numbered one thousand four hundred and fifty-two and eight hundred and fourteen respectively. Of the twenty-four millions in Italy nineteen millions cannot read. The Waldensian Theological School in Florence has eleven students. The British and Scottish Bible societies employ forty-eight agents in Italy, while the Italian publication society is busy translating and printing religious books and tracts.

A tooth of Sir Isaac Newton was sold in 1816 for the sum of £730. It was purchased by a nobleman, who had it set in a ring which he wore constantly on his finger. The prayer book used by King Charles I, when on the scaffold, was sold in London, in 1825, for one hundred guineas. The hat worn by Napoleon Bonaparte at the battle of Elylu was sold in Paris, in 1825, for one thousand nine hundred and twenty-five francs (about £80.) The two pens employed in signing the treaty of Amiens were sold, in 1825, for £500. The pens used in Paris for signing the treaty of peace, concluded after the Russian war, were presented to the Empress Eugenie, by whom they have no doubt been certainly preserved. A wig that belonged to Sterne was sold at public auction in London for two hundred guineas.

Mr. E. P. Wright, who has been dredging off the coast of Portugal at a depth of two thousand eight hundred and eighty feet, brought up live specimens of the glass sponge, which has hitherto been known only from Japan. He also found that at this depth live small fish, coral, and even a shark. In the gulf stream, at a depth of three thousand one hundred and twelve feet, Mr. L. F. Pourtales, of the United States coast survey, found a few mollusks, radiates and crustaceans, and especially a minute Globigerina, whose silicious shells have formed a thick deposit on the bottom of the channel. Some light must penetrate to this great depth of over half a mile, as the animals have large, well-developed eyes. The prevailing colors were white, pink, orange, and a pale green. Blue was found in a small sponge.

The government in Madagascar has ordered the markets held on Sunday to be closed, and directions have been given to hold them on Monday—directions of which both Christian and heathen approve. The schools are being rearranged in the mission, the revision of the New Testament has been completed, the demand for books and Scriptures continues unabated, and the second memorial church has been completed. The queen's royal speech on her coronation contained the following assurance of religious freedom: "This is my word to you in regard to the praying: it is not enforced, it is not hindered, for God made you." The missionaries were heartily welcomed to the ceremony, and were invited to share in the national rejoicings.

The Metropolitan Coptic Bishop of Cairo, when lately visiting Osiout, a station of the United Presbyterians in Upper Egypt, did not hesitate to confess privately that he was as thorough a Protestant as any of the American missionaries, but he was unwilling to declare this publicly. A company of a dozen men of influence and position in Osiout, who are not yet ready to meet at the residence of the missionaries, meet every night and on Sabbath afternoon, to study the Bible, each session lasting over three hours, and led by one of the Coptic converts. The mission school is constantly attracting its best scholars from the Coptic school.

Covering for Tents.—The best and lightest material for covering a tent is a thin India rubber coated fabric, sold by all dealers in India rubber. It is very light, and quite impervious to both rain and light. Black twilled calico, coated with boiled linseed oil, will form a rain-tight cover. Cloth may be rendered waterproof in a variety of ways; for example, brushing it over on the wrong side with a solution of gelatin, followed when dry by an application of an infusion of nut galls. If one is not afraid of an unpleasant smell (of short duration,) make a varnish of India rubber dissolved in bisulphide of carbon, and apply it to the cloth.—Scientific American.

An interesting article in the American Naturalist describes the habits of the chimney swallow. This swallow gets the twigs with which to build its nest by flying with all its might against the end of a dry twig, and catching it in its bill. Sometimes several efforts are necessary to break off the twig. These sticks are glued together, and to the side of the chimney, with a viscid substance supplied by their salivary glands. A few days after the young are hatched the male bird takes charge of them, and the female builds another nest for her next brood.

The convent case of Miss Saurin attracts much attention in England. Another convent case has been trying at the same time in Dublin, involving a young lady of sixteen, who wished to leave the convent school in Rathfarnham, but with whom her friends were not allowed to communicate. Yet a third case is before the Belgian courts, where a nun belonging to one of the best families was kept in a damp underground cell, and denied communication with her friends. At last the police were summoned, and she with several others were rescued.

A company has been formed in this city to bring fresh meat to this market from Texas. The entire hold of their vessels is lined with a non conducting felt; and by chemical means a cold below the freezing point will be kept up, yet not so low as to freeze the meat. The first vessel, which sails for Texas next month, will be able to bring four hundred tons of carcases, and land them here twelve days after they are killed.—New York Independent.

France has now eight hundred and twenty Protestant Sunday schools, Germany one hundred and fifty, Switzerland two hundred and fifty, Holland two hundred and eighty-six. In France the growth of the cause has been comparatively rapid. In 1852, about the time of their first establishment, there were but two hundred scholars. In Germany a good degree of progress is noted. Berlin is to hold a national convention in the coming fall.

The Metropolitan Methodist church of Washington has invited the wealthy members of other Methodist churches to unite in organizing its church. Zion's Herald is surprised at the "unintentional oversight" which omitted to include the leading families of Asbury and other strong colored societies. What would Wesley say of that church?

A Methodist ministers' meeting in New York has discussed the question, "What shall be done for the salvation of the rich?" The question usually has been, "How shall we reach the poor?"

OUR MISSIONARY SECRETARY.

We have the pleasure of announcing that the Rev. Dr. Munsey will preach in Carondelet street church on April 18th. We shall heartily welcome the Dr., as will hundreds in the Southwest—first for his cause-sake, and next for his own. And if he did not represent so great a cause we should have reversed the numbers of this sentence. We had the pleasure of hearing the Dr., more than a year since, in Baltimore, and will say that we would go as far on foot to hear him as we would to hear any other preacher in Methodism; and in saying that we think that we say a good deal.

We are delighted to see the prompt movement of the Rev. Dr. For the present, motion is what we want in a missionary secretary. Our people need everything short of lightning's flash and charge to quicken them into life—into a true concern for the heathen. By and by the secretary may need to stay at home and direct from his study the movement of the great campaign, but just now his presence will do much toward marshaling and understanding his resources.

We hope that the preachers in this city will avail themselves of his aid in taking up their annual missionary collection for our foreign missions. And we hope that the members of our city churches will give a sum of money to this great cause worthy of themselves, of being the key-note of the year's foreign missionary collection.

HIRAM ANDERSON.

We are pained to learn of the death of this good man and valuable citizen. He died at Franklin, Louisiana, on the 24th ultimo, after an illness of twenty-two hours.

There are few men anywhere who, for good sense and hearty worth, can be compared with him. The Lord will not forget the family of his faithful servant.

THE project of raising half a million dollars for Methodist Church extension in New York is progressing favorably. A board of five trustees has been chosen to hold the funds.

NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT SABBATH SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The committee appointed by the district meeting present us, this week, with their programme for the convention to meet on the 14th of May, in Carondelet street church. It will be an occasion of much interest, and will be, doubtless, the first of many gatherings of this kind. It is another symptom of that widening and deepening influence of the Sabbath school—an influence to whose value and power the church is just fairly waking up. So far the Sunday school has been regarded as a valuable appendix to churches and the ministry of the Gospel. It has scarcely risen, in the estimation of our people, to the consideration of a corporate and essential element of every properly constituted church. The "pillars" of our societies are rarely seen engaged in the active support of this most beautiful part of the house of our God. With preachers, as a general thing, the more experienced appreciate the children of the church; but the younger men turn away from this luxuriant field of nodding grain, and prefer to work among the stubble, where once in a great while they get a lean handful of dried "colonels," "judges" and "majors." Then they feel as if something was being done. Are they not securing the "mere influential and wealthy" part of the community? May be so; but we would not give half a dozen youths, from the age of fifteen to twenty, soundly converted at the altar, who have been trained in the Sunday school, for a log meeting house full of country or city magnates, who have joined the church after their joints are stiff, their habits fixed, and their knowledge of this wicked world well nigh perfected. We know the spirit of God, that raiseth the dead and quickeneth stiffened corpses into living men, can and does change the stone into flesh, and can make vastly more out of a time-worn sinner than one could ever believe was in him, so that he can by grace cast his old shell and renew his youth. But it always seemed as if there could be no surplus of mercy in such a case—that it would demand all that he could acquire for his own needs; whereas with a young life and fresh heart it looks as if one might save himself and others. The wiser a man becomes in the things of Christ the more will he long to win the first fruits of vital force to the service of the Master. The Saviour intended that his people should always keep young by living in contact with youth, by tending budding flowers, by watching with solicitude the first openings of the folded forms of faith, and hope, and love, which dwell in the bosom of childhood, and by training the tendrils which almost ask to be supported. Until Paradise comes back again, He intends that his tried and loving servants shall walk in and out among these gardens of amaranth and breathe their immortal fragrance.

Sabbath School Convention.

The New Orleans District Sabbath School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at the quarterly meeting of March last, resolved to hold a Sabbath school convention, in this city, on the 14th, 15th and 16th of May next, and appointed the undersigned committee to make the necessary arrangements therefor.

The convention will be held in Carondelet street Methodist church, and the following will constitute mainly the order of exercises:

THURSDAY, MAY 13.

Half-past seven o'clock P. M.—Introductory address by Rev. J. B. Walker, D. D. Subject: What is the Influence of the Sabbath School upon the well-being of Society?

FRIDAY, MAY 14.

Half-past five o'clock P. M.—Organization of the convention. Devotional exercises. Seven o'clock P. M.—Address by Rev. A. E. Goodwyn. Subject: What is the Relation of the Sabbath School to the Church, and what is the duty of the Pastor and Members of the Church toward the Sabbath School? Half-past seven o'clock P. M.—Open discussion. Subjects: 1. Teachers, their Qualifications and Duties in and out of School. 2. The best Method of Securing and Retaining Competent Teachers. 3. What is the best Method of Teaching in the Sabbath School?

SATURDAY, MAY 15.

Half-past five o'clock P. M.—Devotional exercises. Six o'clock P. M.—Open discussion. Subjects: 4. How can Singing be made more Efficient of Good in our Sabbath Schools? 5. What Constitutes the best Sabbath School Library? 6. What is the best Method of Obtaining Money for Sabbath School Purposes? 7. What is the best System of Carrying on the Missionary Work in our Sabbath Schools? Eight o'clock P. M.—Address by Rev. J. Hamilton, D. D. Subject: Personal Piety in the Sabbath School, its Influence and how to Increase it.

SUNDAY, MAY 16.

Nine o'clock A. M.—Regular exercises in all our Sabbath schools, visited and addressed by members of the convention. Eleven o'clock A. M.—Preaching in all our churches by members of the convention, on the subject of Sabbath schools, and collections taken up for the benefit of the Sabbath School Union. Half-past three o'clock P. M.—The twenty-third anniversary celebration of the New Orleans District Sabbath School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

In the exercises of the anniversary celebration all the schools of the Union will take part, and the addresses, recitations and songs will be by the children; and thus will conclude the exercises of the convention.

The convention is not limited by the bounds of the New Orleans Sabbath School Union, nor by those of the Louisiana Conference. It is desired that the convention shall be a success, and its influence for good upon the cause of Sabbath schools be felt far and wide upon city and country. The invitation is, therefore, extended to the neighboring cities and all the country around, and we hope to have a large attendance of ministers and laymen interested and engaged in the Sabbath school work.

Provision will be made for the accommodation of visitors, the same as on the assembly of our Conferences.

On arriving in the city members of the convention will please call at the Southern Methodist Depository, No. 112 Camp street, where they will receive the attentions of the committee.

NEW ORLEANS, April 6, 1869.

PERSONAL.

The Rev. W. G. Veal, of the Texas Christian Advocate, has been spending some days in the city. Among many other good things we have to say of him is that he has been aiding Brother White, at Morcau street, in a protracted meeting during the week.

The Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall is attending the fair, and is brimful of Southern life and inventive power. He has taken out several valuable patents, of which we will speak hereafter.

The Rev. Mr. Hamilton, of Holly Springs, is in the city, attempting what should immortalize every man—that is, collecting money for building a church.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Messrs. Hathorn & Pierson, commission merchants and wholesale dealers in groceries, oils and drugs, 95, 97 and 99 Gravier street. We heartily commend this house to our friends.

THE Persian fireside is a round hole in the earthen floor of an apartment, an iron vessel being set into the hole and filled with fuel. Over this is placed a low table, covered with a thick mat or quilt reaching nearly to the floor. By this means the heat is condensed and retained so as to warm the room. If one wishes to toast his toes, he thrusts them under the quilt; and if severely chilled, he creeps under it bodily.

IS THE GAME GONE?

The New York Christian Advocate has the following instructive comment upon the Congregational organ of the black Republican party:

"The Independent takes its seat upon the 'opposition' benches. Its last issue contains six leading editorials, all of them political, and the leader of these leaders makes a most decided onslaught upon President Grant and the ruling party in Congress. Of the former it remarks:

'The stoic and passionless West Point officer, who is now experiencing the difference between a civil magistracy and a military generalship, needs for the success of his administration just such a moral support as he is peculiarly unfit to inspire. Of course, as he cannot change his nature, we must take him for what he is; but we doubt if he or his immediate friends are aware that his own lukewarm, half-chilling personality is to be the chief obstacle in the way of his civil career. It is hard to hold this fickle nation steadfastly to a moral purpose when its chief magistrate has no genuine sympathy for moral ideas.'

"We suspect that General Grant's greatest fault, as above estimated, is that, unlike a certain dog once made famous through the Independent, he declines to bark at the same hole long after the game is gone from it. The negro question is forever settled, and the President has the sense to perceive it, and to act accordingly. Hinc illæ lachrymæ."

We doubt not the correctness of the diagnosis of the New York Advocate—the "opposition" attitude of its illustrious confrere. For years they have hunted together; one opened instinctively at the same moment with the other. It must go hard with each of them to now find that their noses lead in opposite directions. One stays at the hole where the negro is supposed to be; the other scents a fresh trail. We suppose the New York Advocate has found the game: General Grant has a pew in the great Metropolitan, and is under the spiritual oversight of Dr. J. P. Newman. No wonder the Independent stays at the hole. There is no other alternative—Hinc illæ lachrymæ. The Methodists have succeeded; Bishop Simpson and Bishop Ames and the president of the Thompson Biblical Institute will heartily sustain the administration. Having gained the chief end of the African trail, we do hope they will henceforth get their consent to imitate General Grant, look at things in a dry light, and occasionally use "two g's in speaking of the negro." Now that "the game is gone," and the hunt is up, do let us call a horse, a horse.

We should be glad, indeed, to believe with the New York Advocate that "the negro question is forever settled, and that the President has the sense to perceive it;" for, to tell the truth, we had supposed that it had proved too valuable a discovery to the black Republican party to be ever allowed to settle. In England the politicians of the abolition school still reckon the West India emancipation act as their strongest claim upon the regards of the people. We of the South have come to consider it as the one inalienable and interminable basis of qualification to every office in this republic, that a man should have denounced American slavery and have drawn his sword in the interest of its extermination. The great grandfathers of the men who have just shed torrents of blood to secure this wondrous mercy, were the identical and only persons in this country who owned the vessels, imported the negroes, and witnessed the horrors of their middle passage. If having to do with the African could entitle men to distinction, surely these persons have doubly earned it, first by the services of their forefathers, and next by their own.

It is not long since the New York Advocate announced the negro as the "coming man." If this be true we do not wonder that the Independent continues "to bark at the same hole;" and we question if, after all, there is not much more game in the hole than there is out of it. The negro is a tremendous, all-pervading certainty: if a blessing, a very large one; if a curse, one of the heaviest that ever befell a nation. He may be either, has been both. When made an article of commerce, whether by Englishman, Spaniard or New Englander, he degrades commerce into piracy; if regarded politically, he fills the fairest land of earth with fratricidal war; and, if regarded ethnologically as the equal of the white man, he is made the occasion and instrument of the most corrupt and tyrannous domination ever witnessed in time of peace. Whatever the wit, the covetousness or the passions of men choose to make the negro, he is. This truth was long since graven upon the walls of Egyptian catacombs, and may be seen freshly written upon the tombstones of Confederate and Federal cemeteries. He is too purely dependent, too anciently ignorant, too hopelessly and unalterably himself to support a character of his own. Socially, religiously, politically, industrially, he is nothing, only just as the New York Advocate or New York Independent makes something of him—he is either in the hole or out of it, according as the nose of Dr. Curry, or that of Mr. Tilton may indicate.

AN EMPIRE!

Among items of news which daily present themselves to the thoughtful citizen, as straws in an atmosphere heavy with storm, the prospects below is by no means the least significant. The speech of Senator Spragne as indicative of a public impatience of the state of affairs, even among prominent politicians of the North, and the overwhelming gold power of those who hold two thousand millions of United States bonds, must be added to the present insupportable condition of affairs in every Southern State of the Union to account for the boldness which issues such a publication in this country at this time. The legislative wisdom of Congress and the States is not such as to inspire the people with confidence. But were this far greater than it is, the more serious cause of distrust is to be found in the unprecedented corruption which has found its way into every department of both general and local government, whether the executive, the legislative or the judicial. Men begin to ask, can a republic continue with so little virtue? And if the men in prominent places are to be taken as a just exponent of the whole state of society, the question might be enlarged into a wonder whether a people can exist long who are so morally unsound. But we are not yet prepared to believe that the body of the people are as bad as those men are who live by public office. The salt of this country is to be found, not in the people who live in the Fifth avenue, whose eyes stand out with fatness, not in the stock and gold rings of New York, not in the halls of Washington, nor in the State capitols, but among the thousands of industrious men, merchants, professors and agriculturists, who have no aspiration for the favors of politicians or the honors of office. There are thousands of God-fearing men in every State who do not receive bribes, who do not live by gambling or robbery, who struggle bravely against vice in all its forms, who daily read the Scriptures and teach their children to be honest, industrious, sober and law-abiding. It is true these men are seemingly borne down by the volume and flood of evil which assail them on every side. Still there is great elasticity in good principles, and they will in the end assert their native right to command the floods.

The difficulty we now struggle with is in obtaining a true expression of the moral opinions of the country. The rulers of it are in advance of the masses in evil practice. We will not despair yet of extrication from our present dangers without foolishly going into yet more dreadful anarchy and its resultant monarchy. It is possible to change the party in power; and we will still have hope of the republic until we have at least seen its management under some other representatives than those who import the passions and practices of war into the councils of peace.

THE IMPERIALIST.

The public and the trade are hereby informed that arrangements for the publication of the Imperialist are now fully completed, and the first number of this long-expected journal will be issued on Saturday, April 3.

For the first time in the history of the United States an American journal dares to proclaim as false, and pernicious in their influence, the Democratic dogmas of popular sovereignty and equality; and to demand that, on the ruins of this unfortunate republic, shall be reared the firm and substantial structure of an empire.

The creed of the Imperialist is revolutionary; its mission to prepare the mind of the American people for the revolution that has already began throughout the country.

The conductors of this journal believe Democracy to be a failure. Though theoretically plausible, in its practical workings it has been found totally inadequate to the wants of the American people.

We believe that the national faith, if left in the keeping of the populace, will be sullied by the sure repudiation of the national debt, and that an imperial government can alone protect the rights of national creditors.

We believe that an imperial government, in its paternal relation to the people, will care equally for all citizens, and, while guaranteeing security to the rights of capital, will jealously protect the interests of the industrial classes.

We believe that the republic means lawlessness, corruption, insecurity to person and property, robbery of the public creditors and civil war; that the empire means law, order, security, public faith and peace.

This creed the Imperialist will advocate earnestly, fearlessly and without compromise, and many will find in it the open expression of convictions and opinions long held and cherished in secret. Its columns will be free from the low vulgarisms which have heretofore disgraced American journalism, and, in the discussions of political and social questions, will unite the high tone and thorough culture of the English weekly press, with the more popular features of the best current literature of the day.

The Imperialist will be published weekly, on Saturday. It will be promptly forwarded to other cities, and sold by newsdealers throughout the country.

All orders and business communications may be addressed to the Imperial Publishing Company, No. 37 Mercer street, New York city.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

HER MAJESTY'S TOWER. By William Hepworth Dixon. New York: Harper & Bros. 1869. 12mo. pp. 263. From G. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street.

The London Tower is "a prison, a palace, or a court," as we read it in the various lights which history throws upon its venerable pile. Here the stoutest kings, the noblest knights, the most ghostly bishops and the most queenly women have flourished an earthly career; and here, too, many illustrious ones have left the record of their lives in the compressed agony of their prison-wall inscriptions. As we can easily imagine, a narrative of the deeds in the tower would be a very complete account of the several reigns of the kings and queens of England. The author has the qualities and genius that should be brought to such a task, and he has executed it with signal ability. We have read the whole of it with increasing delight, and have already quoted from it in the ADVOCATE.

COMMERCIAL CONVENTION TO MEET AT MEMPHIS.—Excellent arrangements are in progress for the great Commercial Convention to meet in Memphis on the 18th of May next. The objects of the convention are defined to be: To secure the co-operation of the Ohio and Mississippi valleys in an effort to build up direct trade with Europe through South Atlantic seaports; to discuss the necessity for a railroad from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean; also to discuss the importance of leveeing the Mississippi river cotton lands. The committee suggest that the Governor of each State and Territory will appoint a delegation, not exceeding ten, for the State at large, and one for each Congressional district; in cities, two for five thousand population and one for each two thousand above; railroad, steamboat and other incorporated companies, two; Chambers of Commerce, one for each hundred members.

AN OLD LADY who died in London, in 1794, bequeathed a considerable sum to one church on condition that her coffin, in the church vault, be dusted on every anniversary of her birth. The conditions have been carefully observed.

Annual Report.—Board of Domestic Missions.

MR. EDITOR: I have received the annual reports of the Boards of Domestic Missions for the year 1868-69, from the following Conferences, viz.:

Louisville, Northwest Texas, West Texas, Little Rock, Montgomery, North Georgia, Holston, Pacific, Trinity, Arkansas, North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia—13.

No reports from the following Conferences: Baltimore, Western Virginia, South Georgia, Mobile, Louisiana, Mississippi, Memphis, Tennessee, Kentucky, St. Louis, Missouri, Florida, Texas, East Texas, Columbia, Illinois—16.

The Indian Mission Conference is not expected to report to the Parent Board of Domestic Missions. Of those whose duty it is to report, you see that not quite one-half have yet done so. The time has come for the annual report of the Parent Board, but how can it be made?

J. B. McFERRIN,
Sec. B. D. M.

The treasurers of the following Conferences have made no returns: West Texas, St. Louis, Missouri, Texas, East Texas, Columbia and Mississippi. J. B. M.

MARRIED.

In Baldwin county, Alabama, March 10, 1869, by Rev. T. S. Armistead, Mr. WILLIAM S. BAREFIELD, of Clark county, Alabama, to Miss MARY KROUSE, of the former county.

On the 24th of March, by Rev. Jas. C. Bradley, Mr. JOHN GUILLET to Miss LIZZIE MCKINNEY. [St. Louis Christian Advocate please copy.]

On the 3d of March, in Warren county, Mississippi, by the Rev. John W. Jones, Mr. JACKSON L. HOUSE to Miss BARBARA ANN CATHIE.

By the same, at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. W. B. Smith, in Yazoo county, Mr. ROBERT W. BAINE to Miss ELIZABETH SMITH.

OBITUARIES.

J. MURPHY LEWIS, aged twenty-five years, third son of the late Judge William B. Lewis, of Opelousas, Louisiana, died January 25th, at Lake Charles, Louisiana, after a protracted illness of several months. He was a young man of vigorous constitution till his captivity, during the recent war, in Camp Chase and Fort Delaware. Since then his health declined slowly; but he suffered so little that he had no consciousness of the nearness of death even in his last hours. He literally faded away. In his last days he often talked affectionately of his aunts, Thompson and Jewel, who treated him so kindly and prayed with him so often during his stay in Memphis some while back. He also made frequent mention of an army comrade named Lyman Reed, of New Orleans, to whom he was greatly attached. That young man's truly pious deportment in the army had begotten in the deceased a yearning for experimental religion and exercised a hallowing influence upon him down to the grave. O how much there is in example—what preaching so effective! Last year Brother Lewis joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South at this place. From conversations with him then and since I know he was in earnest as a seeker of religion. A short time before his death, his grief-stricken mother tells me, he gave unmistakable evidence of having experienced that blessed change of heart which alone maketh meet for the kingdom of heaven. All through his sickness he exhibited remarkable patience, and frequently gave thanks to God for sparing him from pain. Toward the last he delighted to look out from his bed on the bright, beautiful sunshine, and calmly watch the light, fleecy clouds floating along the sky. Ah! the spirit was then planing for its upward flight. The deceased was greatly beloved, so gentle was he of disposition and so full of large heartedness. So utterly unselfish was he, even in his sickness, that he was ever occupying himself in sending some little presents or other to everybody who showed him any kindness. We may truly say in his case what we also said of his dear father's death one short year ago—his end was peace. J. W.

OPELOUSAS, LA., March 22, 1869.

Died, at the residence of Monroe Worlds, Noxubee county, Mississippi, February 4, 1869, Mrs. NANCY ANN SKIPPER, aged seventy-four years, ten months and fifteen days.

Deceased was born in Williamsburg district, South Carolina, March 17, 1794 where she lived until her marriage, when she removed to Honey district, in the same State. Here, shortly after her marriage, she attached herself to the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which she continued to be a member until her decease. In 1834 she removed to Perry county, Alabama, where she remained until her removal to this State, which occurred in 1853.

Throughout the whole of her life, from the time of her connection with the church until her death, her conduct was ever that of an exemplary mother and Christian lady—always ready to minister to the wants of her suffering fellow creatures. For the mourner she had always words of advice and consolation, and many of the followers of the lowly Jesus can refer to her with gratitude as being the first to encourage and console them in the dark hour of spiritual suffering and distress.

Her exertions in this respect were not confined solely to individuals, for she frequently made public exhibitions of her devotion to the cause of her Master and Saviour, exhorting sinners to fly to the refuge offered by Jesus.

As a mother she was strict, yet kind and indulgent, inculcating in her children from the earliest age, the principles of truth, honesty and sobriety.

Plain and unpretending in her manners, amiable and affable in social relations, she enjoyed the respect and confidence of all who knew her.

She has left behind her a number of relatives, among others the aged companion of her trials, sorrows and joys, who indeed mourn her loss and regret her departure from among them. But their sorrow is not like that of those who have no hope. They feel confident that the aged and devout follower of the Saviour is reaping her reward where the "wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

May the confident hope expressed by her on her dying couch be fully realized. May her pure soul enjoy that communion with its Maker which it so sincerely desired. A FRIEND.

WHITEFIELD, Miss., Feb. 9, 1869.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Again has a member of this quarterly conference been called to give an account of his stewardship to our heavenly Father. Since last we met our beloved brother and friend, Captain CHESLEY S. COFFEY, has died.

It behooves us to acknowledge the hand of God in taking away so good a man from the midst of his usefulness.

We will miss his wise counsels, his earnest zeal for the church, and his example of piety in our community.

Resolved, That in his death our church has lost an efficient and zealous member, a firm, consistent and devoted member of his family, a beloved husband and parent, and the community a patriotic, public spirited and faithful citizen—one who gallantly periled his life for his country.

Resolved, That we tender to his family our deep sympathy in this their irreparable loss.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be recorded on the minutes, and that one be forwarded to our esteemed sister, Mrs. M. S. Coffey, and also to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication. Q. C.

CATARRH.—Catarrh is a dangerous disease; yet it can be cured by the use of DR. WOLCOTT'S ANNIHILATOR, a different remedy, and unlike PAIN PAINT. Thousands suffer without knowing the nature of this universal complaint. It is an ulceration of the head.—Its indications are hawking, spitting, weak or inflamed eyes; soreness of the throat, dryness and heat in the nose, matter running from the head down the throat, ringing or deafness in the ears, loss of smell, memory impaired, dullness and dizziness of the head, pains in the left chest or side and under the shoulder blades. Indigestion invariably attends Catarrh; a hacking cough and colds are very common. Some have all these symptoms, others only a few. Very little pain attends Catarrh until the Liver and Lungs are attacked in consequence of the stream of pollution running from the head into the stomach. It ends in Consumption.

Bronchitis is the legitimate child of Catarrh. Troches and all palliatives cannot in any case reach the fountain in the head, where the polluted festering, corrosive matter issues. Snuff or dust of any kind aggravates, and never cures the disease.

A sneeze is nature's emphatic warning, and is produced in consequence of an irritation of the head. Nature speaks out and says No! at every sneeze. She opens the water ducts and floods the nostrils with water to drive out the intruder, just as the ducts of the eye are opened when dust affects that organ. Taking snuff will produce Catarrh. The patient feels dull, heavy, stupid and sleepy; his fears are not aroused until perhaps too late.

He catches cold constantly in the head, sometimes running at the nostrils; the breath sometimes reveals to his neighbors the corruption within; while the patient has often lost the sense of smell. The disease advances cautiously, until pain in the chest, lungs or bowels startles him; he hacks and coughs; has dyspepsia, has liver complaint, wants to take a blood purifier, or cod liver oil. Bosh! The foul ulcer in the head cannot be reached by such nostrums. He becomes nervous, his voice is harsh and unnatural, feels disheartened, memory loses her power, judgment her seat, gloomy forebodings hang overhead; hundreds, yea thousands, seek a rope, a river, a revolver or a razor, and cut the miserable thread of life. The world looks on and wonders that a man surrounded by all the charms and opulence that gold can give, should deliberately choose a quiet grave; others drag on a weary life and sink under lung complaints by inches. Many hire some miserable scamp or some big sounding charlatan, having such a string of promotions from Europe that they actually bewilder and dazzle their victim, who at once comes down with the dust, pays $5 for a useless examination, $50 more as part payment for a job cure. Of course the dupe is not silly enough to pay the balance, but thanks God he was not killed outright by the outrageous treatment. The villains coolly write a flaming certificate, and attach thereto the victim's name.

Thousands are restored to health whom doctors call hopeless victims of Consumption.—Physicians think the lungs affected, when the liver is the only cause of pain in the majority of cases, and the patient is perfectly curable. No lung complaints can exist unless caused by Catarrh. But the liver is always first attacked. Medicines taken in the stomach are worse than useless. Physicians know nothing, comparatively, of the symptoms of this disease—its cause or cure—and few are bold enough to deny this assertion. Many physicians have Catarrh themselves and do not know it; those of the highest standing buy "Annihilator" to cure it.

For all afflicted with this disgusting complaint, DR. WOLCOTT'S ANNIHILATOR affords a safe, sure and speedy cure, when no bones have come from the head. The nostrils must be rinsed with Annihilator, by snuffing through to the throat, and spit out the nasty corruption instead of swallowing or allowing it to run down the throat, and thus keep the ulcers clean of matter, and they heal permanently. Also for weak Nerves, Chronic Headache and Neuralgia, it is invaluable. Twelve pints should be used for Catarrh, one pint each week.

The Annihilator is sold at fifty cents, and full pints $1 a bottle, with full directions. Pints hold three fifty cent bottles. Buy none except in pure white wrappers.

Six pints of Annihilator for Catarrh or Colds in the Head, or one pint of Pain Paint, double strength, sent free of express charges on receipt of the money; or one gallon of Pain Paint, double strength, for $20. Small bottles sold at all Drug Stores. R. L. WOLCOTT, Inventor and Sole Proprietor, No. 181 Chatham Square, New York. ap10 4tr

THE NEW METHOD FOR THE Piano-Forte, by WILLIAM MASON (the distinguished pianist) and E. S. HOADLY, is a great improvement upon all previous works, and is used and recommended as such by the best teachers. It preserves what is valuable in previous books, and adds many new features. It is the only modern piano forte instructor published, presenting the technics of modern piano forte playing. It is easier to teach and learn from, and secures more rapid and thorough progress than any other book. No teacher of the piano-forte can afford to do without its aid. It is the best book for beginners and the best for those who have made progress. Price, $4. To facilitate its examination by teachers, we will, until July 1st, send a single copy to any teacher of the piano-forte, by mail, postage paid, for half price, $2.

An edition is published with European fingering, and one with American fingering.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

EVANGELA'S PRAYER.

BY JULIA M. THAYER.

Beside her little couch she knelt,
In childish innocence and grace;
The grief her gentle spirit felt
All pictured in her tearful face.

With folded palms and lifted eye
She softly breathed her simple prayer,
To Him who hears the sparrow's cry,
And clothes the lilies sweet and fair.

"Please, Lord, may some dear angel come
To watch o'er little Sister Bess,
Since our own mamma has gone home;
For I'm so small, and she's still less.

"She's such a tender little thing;
O make her way all smooth and bright;
Close sheltered by his brooding wing,
She'll never wander from his sight.

"And make me strong to do and bear;
And good, that so she'll learn to be;
And if a cross fall anywhere,
O not on her, please, but on me."

She closed her drooping lids and slept,
One cheek upon the snowy spread,
While softly in a moonbeam crept,
And wove a halo round her head.

And now her dreaming soul to bless,
There came a vision bright and fair;
'Twas all about the little Bess,
And seemed an answer to her prayer.

She saw the child in slumber sweet,
Upon a little golden bed;
An angel watching at her feet,
Another watching at her head.

A heavenly radiance filled the room,
And perfumes floated on the air;
'Twas night without its shadowy gloom,
'Twas day without its scorching glare.

And ever when the infant flung
Her arms about, with restless throes,
A little song the angels sung
That lulled her softly to repose.

And when with hunger she awoke,
They gave her heavenly wine and fruit;
And one in tender accents spoke,
And one played sweetly on her lute.

Thus on and on, for many a day,
The angels hovered o'er the child;
And so she trod life's desert way,
Alike unharmed and undefiled.

Then woke the dreamer, and she blest
The loving Lord who heard her prayer,
And laid her down to quiet rest
Without a sorrow or a care.

—Little Corporal.

ON THE TRACK.

The other day I heard a mother ask her little son to do something. "In a minute," he said. She spoke again. But it was one, two, three, four, five minutes before he obeyed her.

It makes me think of the switch-tender's boy What if he had waited a minute before minding his father? A switch-tender in Prussia was just going to move the rail in order to put the coming train on a side track, when he caught sight of his little son playing on the track The engine was in sight, and he had not a moment to spare. He might jump and save his child; but he could not do that and turn the switch in time; and if it was not done the on-coming train would meet another train, and a terrible crash and smash would take place. The safety of hundreds of lives depended upon his fidelity. What could he do? What did he do? "Lie down! lie down!" he called with a loud voice to the child; and seizing the switch, the train passed safely on its proper track.

Did the heavy train run over the little boy? Was he killed? Was he crushed to pieces? No, for he did just as his father told him, and did it instantly. He fell flat between the rails, and the cars went high over his head; and when the anxious father sprang to the spot, there he was alive and well—not a hair was touched. It was his quick obedience, you see, that saved his life. He did not stop a minute. Even a moment's hesitation would have been too late.

A NOBLE BOY.—A crippled beggar was striving to pick up some old clothes that had been thrown from the window, when a crowd of rude boys gathered about him, mimicking his awkward movements, and hooting at his helplessness and rags. Presently a noble little fellow came up, and, pushing through the crowd, he helped the poor crippled man to pick up his gifts, and placed them in a bundle. Then, slipping a piece of silver into his hand, he was running away when a voice far above him said, "Little boy with a straw hat, look up." A lady, leaning from an upper window, said earnestly, "God bless you, my little boy! God bless you for that!" As he walked along he thought how glad he had made his own heart by doing good. He thought of the poor beggar's grateful look; of the lady's smile, and her approval; and last, and better than all, he could almost hear his heavenly Father whispering, "Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy." Little reader, when you have an opportunity of doing good, and feel tempted to neglect it, remember the "little boy with the straw hat."

FARM AND GARDEN.

KITCHEN GARDEN.

Manure and thorough cultivation are the requisites to success, after good seed or good plants have been obtained. We can here enumerate only some of the leading sorts Some sub-tropical things omitted in the present enumeration will be given next month. While we have given here only a few standard varieties, we advise the trial of novelties by those whose tastes and means allow them to do so. To us one of the great charms of gardening is the trial of varieties we have not before grown. Send to some reliable seedsman for a catalogue, and make a selection of things for trial.

Plant in rows as much as possible, if horse implements are to be used in cultivating.

Seed beds will be needed for such plants as are started in the open air, and then transplanted. The soil of these should be rich and light.

Asparagus.—Remove the litter from old beds, and fork in the manure. Salt, at the rate of five bushels to the acre, is beneficial. Sow seed in fifteen-inch rows, to get young plants. Conover's Colossal is said to be large and prolific. Make beds of year-old plants, setting them in well-manured soil, in two foot rows, fifteen inches apart

Beans.—Plant as soon as danger of frost is over. Early Valentine is a standard sort. Fejee is highly commended. Plant in drills two feet apart. Leave Limas until the ground is well warmed.

Beets.—Sow in drills a foot apart, Bassano, Simon's early turnip, or other early sort.

Carrots.—Shorthorn is best early. Sow as beets.

Cabbage.—Transplant from cold frame or hot beds; make the rows two feet apart, and set the plants sixteen inches apart. Sow seeds in seed bed. Wakefield and Little Pixie are good early; Winnigstadt, medium; Marblehead, Drumhead, and others, late, not forgetting the Savoys. Next month is soon enough for the late sorts.

Cauliflower.—Treatment the same as cabbage. Erfurt for early, and Lenormand for late, are best.

Celery.—Sow in seed bed, Dwarf White, Solid, Boston Market, etc The turnip-rooted variety is sown the same.

Corn.—Early Dwarf Sugar, Farmers' Club, and Stowell, are all good. Mexican is the sweetest of all the varieties we have tested, though, being black, its appearance may be objected to.

Cress or Peppergrass.—Sow the curled every week or two, in drills six or eight inches apart.

Cucumbers.—Start on sods, as directed last month. White Spined is the best for table use; Early Russian, the earliest.

Egg Plant.—Always started under glass. New York Improved is the standard. Black Pekin and Large White are both fine varieties.

Horseradish.—Putting the sets in manured trenches, and filling in as the plant grows is a good way.

Kohlrabi.—Sow in May and June, in eighteen-inch rows.

Leek.—Sow in seed bed; the Flag is best.

Lettuce.—Transplant from cold frame, a foot apart each way. Sow in seed bed. Curled Silesia and Simpson are the earliest. See catalogues for numerous sorts.

Onions.—Put out sets of Top and Potato Onions, in fifteen-inch rows.

Parsley.—Sow in cold frames; curled is best.

Parsnip.—The Hollow-crowned, the best. Sow in fifteen-inch drills. Use last year's seed only.

Peas.—By all means try dwarf sorts for family gardens. Among these the Little Gem is the best. Sow in drills a foot apart. For late sorts, choose from the catalogues. We have yet to see a better pea than the Champion of England.

Peppers.—Sow in hot bed, Squash, for pickles, Sweet Mountain for stuffing, and other varieties.

Potatoes.—The Early Rose is the best of all the early potatoes generally obtainable. Those who feel they can afford the high price at which the seed is now sold should experiment with it. Early Goodrich was generally bad last year, but good heretofore. Dykeman is popular around New York. There are other early sorts offered. Early varieties only should go in the garden.

Rhubarb.—Fork plenty of manure into the bed, which can hardly be made too rich. Divide old roots, so as to have a bed to each piece, putting them four to six inches apart each way, according to the size of the variety.

Salsify.—Sow fresh seed and treat like carrots.

Spinach.—Sow the Round-leaved in eighteen-inch drills. Try the New Zealand later.

Sweet Potatoes.—Start the tubers in hot beds, for sprouting about the middle of the month. Lay them nearly touching on two inches of good compost, splitting the large ones lengthwise. When the buds begin to start, cover with an inch of compost. Nansemond is the best variety.

Tomatoes.—Read all that has been said about the varieties of tomato, and then plant Early Smooth Red for general crop, and try some of the newer sorts. We have tried in vain to get at the bottom of the tomato question. Sow in hot bed, if not already done. Prick out those early sown into another hot bed, when large enough to handle.

Turnips.—Sow early sorts in fifteen-inch drills. The Early Red and White Top are among the best.—American Agriculturist.

FIFTY WAYS OF COOKING MEATS.

NUMBER ONE.

BEEF.—To Choose Beef.—Good beef will exhibit an open grain of deep coral red in the lean, and the fat will be white rather than yellow, the suet firm and white. Yellow fat is a test of meat of an inferior quality.

In the present fashion of cooking apparatus, there are few who have any conveniences for roasting meat, and baking has so universally superceded that manner of cooking, that it has also adopted the name.—Roasting is cooking meat, placed on a spit, before an open fire. Baking is done in an oven. Meat carefully and properly baked, is almost, if not quite, equal to roast; and in these receipts we shall only describe that method, although we shall adopt the usual term of "roasting."

1. Roast Beef.—The sirloin, first and second cuts of the forequarter, are the best pieces for roasting. The third and fourth cuts are good. Rub with salt, put a pint of water in the dripping pan, and baste the meat frequently while cooking. If the beef is a thick piece, allow fifteen minutes for each pound to roast; if thin, less time will be required. When cooked, thicken the gravy with flour, adding more water, if necessary. Serve with potatoes and other vegetables, and garnish with horseradish.

2. Beefsteaks, Rolled and Roasted.—Cut steaks from the rump; make stuffing of equal parts of ham and veal, well peppered; stew it for a short time, and pound it in a mortar with bread steeped in milk, a lump of butter, and the yolks of two or three eggs; spread this force-meat over the steaks; roll them up and tie them tightly, and roast in a hot oven for an hour and twenty minutes or an hour and a half. Baste well with butter, and serve with brown gravy.

3. Corned Beef.—Soak well, boil slowly for three or four hours, and skim carefully.

4. Beef Tongue Boiled.—Soak in cold water for twelve hours. Put in cold water and boil slowly for three hours. Serve with mashed Irish potato. Garnish with parsley.

5. To Collar a Flank of Beef.—Rub well with a large portion of saltpeter and common salt; let it remain ten days, then wash clean; take off the outer and inner skin of the gristle, spread on a board, and cover the inside with the following mixture: parsley, sage, thyme chopped fine, pepper, salt and pounded cloves; roll it up, sew a cloth over it, and bandage that with tape. Boil gently five or six hours. When cold, lay on a board without undoing it; put another board on the top, with a heavy weight on it; let it remain twenty-four hours; take off the bandages, cut a thin slice from each end; serve, garnished with green pickle and sprigs of parsley.

6. Beef Stewed and Spiced.—Take four pounds of the thick ribs of beef, or any part, put in the pan with a pint of water, a teaspoonful of allspice, two of salt, two bay leaves, two eschalots, or a little garlic; stew three hours, either in oven or on the fire, keeping the cover well closed. Half an hour before it is done, add a teacupful of the raspings of bread, half a pint of vinegar, two teaspoonsful of sugar, simmer; dish up, and sauce over.

7. Beef Stewed.—Four pounds of beef, season with salt and pepper, add chopped parsley and chopped onions; a little spice may be added. It may be stuffed by making an incision in the lean part, and binding up with a string. Place in pan with water, and stew in oven or on stove one hour.

Yorkshire pudding and potatoes may be baked at the same time. The pan may be divided in two, one side for pudding, the other for potatoes. All joints may be done the same way.

In broiling meat, let the bars of the gridiron be all hot through, but yet not burning hot upon the surface. Have the gridiron clean and well greased. Broils must be brought to table as hot as possible.

8. Beefsteaks Broiled.—Steaks cut from the sirloin are the best; from the rump the next best; those from the round are not so good, but usually can be bought for a less price. Cut three-quarters of an inch thick, place on a hot gridiron over a good bed of coals, sprinkle with pepper and salt, and turn the moment the fat begins to drop. Turn constantly until done. Place on a hot dish, spread with butter, and serve. They may be sprinkled with shallot or onion cut very small, and sent to table with oyster sauce, a dish of greens, and boiled potatoes. May be garnished with scraped horseradish.

9. Place the steak in a pan in which is an ounce of hot butter or fat. Fry ten or twelve minutes, turning on each side three times, and watching that the meat does not burn. Season with salt and pepper. After removing the meat, a gravy may be made by adding a little water, and thickening with flour rubbed smooth in water.

This dish may be varied by adding a few chopped onions, parsley, mushrooms or pickles, semi-fried at the same time, and poured over the steak.

10. Beef Kidneys Stewed.—Cut two beef kidneys in slices, and lay them in a stewpan; put in two ounces of butter, and cut into very thin slices four large onions; add them with pepper and salt, stew about an hour; add a cupful of rich gravy to that extracted from the kidney; stew five minutes, strain it, and thicken the gravy with flour and butter; give it a boil up. Serve with the gravy in the dish.

11. Beef Collops.—Any part of beef which is tender will serve to make collops; cut the beef into pieces about three inches long, beat them flat, dredge them with flour, fry them in butter, lay them in a stewpan, cover them with brown gravy; put in half a shallot, minced fine, a lump of butter rolled in flour, a little pepper and salt. Stew without suffering it to boil; serve with pickles, or squeeze in half a lemon, according to taste. Serve hot, in a tureen.

12. Beef a la Mode.—Take part of a round of beef, bone it, and make incisions, which are filled with a stuffing of bread, butter, thyme, pepper, salt, a little minced onion, and yolk of egg. After the meat is stuffed, bind it with tape, and put in an oven, with water enough to cover it, and let it stew slowly for three hours. Add water if needed. The gravy will require no thickening.

13. French Steak.—Cut thin slices of cold roast beef, and put in a chafing dish; season with salt, pepper, walnut catsup, a little vinegar, a little warm water and plenty of butter, with some browned flour rubbed into it. The meat should be entirely covered with the gravy. Light the lamp and put on the lid of the chafing-dish, and let it steam thus, until the gravy is reduced two-thirds.

14. To Bake a Beef's Heart.—Cut it open, remove the ventricles, and let it soak an hour in lukewarm water. Wipe dry with a cloth, and parboil for twenty minutes. Make a rich stuffing, fill the heart with it, and secure it with a string. Let it bake an hour and a half or two hours, with half a pint of water in the pan. The gravy will not need any thickening. Serve with currant or any acid jelly.

15. Beef Liver.—It should be cut across the grain in slices half an inch thick. Then put into a deep plate, and pour boiling water over it. Drain, and season with pepper and salt. Dip each piece in flour, and drop in hot lard. Make a gravy as for beef, and pour over it. Onions may be fried and added to the gravy.—Arthur's Home Magazine

LOUISIANA WINES.—Upon a small vineyard of five acres, near Bastrop, Morehouse parish, Louisiana, the property of Mr. J. J. Schardt, there was a yield this year of five thousand gallons of wine. This is a refreshing evidence that the grape can be cultivated successfully and profitably in our State, and we may, therefore, look forward to a time not far distant when its culture will have become very general. Mr. Schardt has placed upon our table several bottles of the vintage of '68 of the Catawba and Pauline wines, both finely flavored and nice tasting.—New Orleans Picayune.

THE Protestant place of worship in Madrid is far too small, and larger accommodations will be sought. On the second Sabbath two thousand were unable to obtain entrance. A disturbance had been threatened. Rivero, the chief alcalde, and now president of the Constituent Cortes, issued on Sunday morning a proclamation that the right of free worship must be defended, and sent officers with swords to guard the room, inside and outside, and to accompany the ministers to their homes. In Cordova the meetings are crowded, and the demand throughout Spain for Gospels and Bibles has exceeded the supply.

THE Japanese government are growing parsimonious. Lately they sent some young Japanese to London, Paris and St. Petersburg for education. Now the young scholars are all recalled, the expenses of their instruction proving rather heavy.

TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of Mushroom growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK,
ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of.....$10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of..... 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of..... 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of..... 25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1860.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

DARBY'S

PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

A CHALLENGE TO THE WORLD!

We challenge the world to produce a better or a stronger recommendation for any article, for any purpose, than the following:

NOVEMBER 1, 1868.

We very cheerfully unite our testimony in favor of the great merits of the valuable disinfectant manufactured by Professor Darby, and known as DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID. From the reputation of Professor Darby as a scientific gentleman, from our own knowledge of this preparation, and from the general esteem in which it is held wherever known, we have no hesitation in recommending it as one of the most valuable household articles with which we are acquainted.

THE THIRTY FIRST ANNUAL Session of the

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE,

MACON, GEORGIA,

Begins on OCTOBER 5, 1868, under the direction of the following

FACULTY.

Rev J M Bonnell, D D, President.
Rev C W Smith, A M, Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy.
Rev W C Bass, A M, Professor of Natural Science.
O Schwartz, A M, Professor of Latin and Modern Languages.
Mrs A R Peak, Assistant in Literary Department.
Carl Hintz, Musical Director, (with ample assistance.)
Mrs E T Crowe, Teacher of Drawing and Painting.

CHARGES—There are three terms in the scholastic year. For each term the charges, which are to be paid at the beginning of the term, are as follows:

Regular tuition, $30. Board including washing, fuel and lights, $75. Incidental fee charged to day scholars, $1.

The following are optional: French, $15; Instrumental Music, $25; use of Instrument, $3; Vocal Music in class, $2—not charged to those who take Instrumental Music; Drawing, $15; Painting, $20.

Pupils who take French may be excused from Latin without affecting their graduation.

Special advantages provided in the departments of French, Music and Painting. For further information address the President.

J. M. BONNELL,
se p5 tf President.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300. PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

CHURCH OF THE STRANGERS, New York.—Visitors to the city of New York are informed that they will find divine service every Sunday, in the large Chapel of the University, Washington Square, at ten and a half A. M. and at seven and a half P. M. The evening service in summer is at eight o'clock. Waverley Place, immediately north of the New York Hotel, cut of Broadway, runs west to Washington Square, on the east side of which is the University. The entrance to the church is the main door of the University. University Place cars run from the door of the Fifth Avenue Hotel to the door of the church. From the St. Nicholas and Metropolitan, take the cars corner of Broadway and Broome, leave at Waverley Place, and go west one block. At the Astor House take University Place cars, leave at Waverley Place, and go west one block. Strangers will find cordial welcome and polite attention.

The pastor is Rev. Dr. DEEMS, who devotes himself to the spiritual interests of strangers. If any be sick, let them address him a note by mail, as "Pastor of the Church of the Strangers, New York," and it will reach him. The ladies who compose the "Society of the Sisters of the Stranger" procure medical, legal and spiritual help for strangers in perplexity, distress or sickness. Address "Sisters of the Stranger," care Rev. Dr. Deems, New York.

If you are coming to New York soon, cut this out and paste it in your memorandum book.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Benners.

The names of a few will suffice to give an idea of the great variety constantly kept on hand:

The Charter Oak,	The Good Samaritan,
The Revenue,	The Torchlight,
The American,	The Brilliant,
The Magnolia,	The Fashion,
The True Kentuckian,	The Farmer,
The Maid of Orleans,	The Southern States,
The Mutual Friend,	The Sunny South,

and many others, too numerous to mention, a of which will be sold at

for cash or approved city paper.

Being ever grateful for the liberal patronage bestowed and confidence reposed in me during my former copartnership, I would most earnestly solicit a continuance of the same, and shall pledge myself to do my utmost to maintain the reputation of the old house.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market continues to exhibit a moderate degree of animation, there being still a fair demand from country merchants for spring goods, or to replenish their broken stocks, while city dealers have operated more freely. The State Fair, now open at the Fair Grounds, is expected to attract a large number of visitors from the country, and materially increase the general animation of trade. Sugar has continued dull, the sales from first hands being hardly equal to the limited receipts. Molasses has been in moderate request at previous rates. We have but few changes to notice in Western produce. Flour has stiffened, and corn has been firm at previous rates, but without much movement. Provisions have been dull, without any material change in prices.

We regret to notice that the planters in St. Landry parish have been interrupted in their plantation work, and suffered serious losses from heavy rains and storms to such an extent that unless the weather prove more propitious they apprehend a failure of their crops. The most violent storm is reported to have extended through the parish of Rapides and Texas. Nothing of special interest has been reported from other localities, excepting reiterated complaints of inauspicious weather.

The river has risen three inches since our last report, and is now two feet three inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 2d instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales.. 5693
Lake	119
Tennessee	600
Mobile	259
Florida	14
Texas	66
Total	6751

On Saturday the Liverpool and New York accounts being encouraging, buyers came forward with a disposition to operate freely at previous rates, but factors were more stringent in their pretensions, which checked the demand, and the sales did not exceed 2,100 bales, while prices rose a shade higher, good ordinary closing at 26⅛ to 26¼c., and low middling at previous rates, but very little to be had at inside figures. On Monday, although an advance in foreign exchange was calculated to stimulate the demand, yet the Liverpool and New York telegrams being unfavorable, buyers came forward with less spirit, and in order to effect sales factors were compelled to make concessions of ⅛ to ¼c., and in some cases more, good ordinary closing at 26¼ to 26⅜c., and low middling at 27 to 27¼c., but with only a limited amount at the inside rates; the business being confined to 1,900 bales. On Tuesday the market opened with a moderate demand at lower prices, buyers predicating their claims for further concessions on the unfavorable tenor of the Liverpool and New York telegrams, the effect of which was only partially neutralized by an improvement in foreign exchange. Factors, however, were unwilling to give way, but were finally compelled to submit to irregular reductions of ⅛ to ⅜c., at which 2,200 bales changed hands, mostly for Great Britain and the continent. The bulk of the stock is held above the ruling rates.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 6,200 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 725,818 bales, against 544,021 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 129,736 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is a decrease of 3,664 bales to France, of 290,771 to Great Britain, and of 26,984 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	25 to 25¾
Good ordinary	26 to 26¾
Low middling	26¾ to 27¼
Middling	28 to —
Strict middling	28¼ to —

VOLUME XV.—NUMBER 13.
WHOLE NUMBER..... 727.

NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, APRIL 17, 1869.

$3 00 A YEAR IN ADVANCE.
OFFICE—113 CAMP STREET.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

San Francisco, April 7.—Yellow Jacket Mine, at Gold Hill, Nevada, took fire this morning. The fire extended to Kentuck and Crown Point mines.

Eleven bodies have been removed and others seen at the bottom of Kentuck shaft, but the spectators were unable to remove them in consequence of the intense heat.

Latest from Gold Hill reports thirty-six known to be dead.

Hopes are entertained that the flames will soon be subdued, but when the hope of saving life is abandoned the mouth of the mines will be closed, to smother the conflagration.

The three burning mines are unconnected with others under ground. Virginia City is deserted, the people having gone to render assistance.

The scenes at the mouth of the mine are fearful from the number of frantic wives and children. The confusion is so great that the rolls cannot be called.

San Francisco, April 8.—The fire at the Gold Hill mines still rages, but is confined mostly to the Yellow Jacket mine Owing to a cave the firemen are unable to reach the flames. Eighteen dead bodies have been taken from the burning mines, nine from one drift.

Washington, April 12.—It is given out by the friends of the administration that General Grant intends to adopt as the basis of his course in regard to Cuban affairs the resolution offered in the House by General Banks, in relation to the recognition of Cuban insurgents, and has instructed Admiral Hoff, commanding the Gulf squadron, to demand the release of American citizens and the restoration of their property.

Justice Chase delivered an opinion in the Texas bond case, holding that the annexation of Texas made it a State in the Union, and that no act of the citizens and government of Texas alone has, or could, dissolve that relation; that the ordinance of secession and all legislative acts in aid of the rebellion were void; that the Legislature was an illegal body; that the United States bonds in controversy were the property of Texas at the time of secession; that the law of Texas which required their transfer was illegal, and therefore the State of Texas has a right to recover the bonds and perpetuate the injunction. Decree accordingly. The court held that Congress had a right to adopt measures of reconstruction.

Grier dissented as to the merits and jurisdiction of the case, holding that Texas was not in fact a State in the Union. Justice Swayne and Miller dissented as to jurisdiction only.

In the Supreme Court Chase dismissed the appeal in the McCardle case for want of jurisdiction.

Washington, April 13.—The Alabama claims treaty was rejected by a vote of 54 to 1.

Sprague's speech attacks capitalists' monopolies, congressional corruption, and his colleague Anthony. His speech is a column long.

The Democrats re elected to the Indiana Legislature refuse to attend the sessions of that body. Thus there is no quorum, and the fifteenth amendment cannot be ratified. The Democrats were elected to stay away and thus prevent the consummation of this gross fraud on the people of the State and of the country. When Indiana votes for a new Legislature, the ratification of the amendment will be a main issue in the canvass, and there is little doubt that the verdict will be against it.

Havana, April 12.—The Diario reports the insurgents at Los Nosa. The woods around Puerto Principe are on fire.

The insurgents are concentrating at Cinco Villas.

The steamship Teutonia, from New Orleans for Hamburg, arrived to-day.

Many small bands of insurgents are operating near Cinco Villas. Their numbers are increasing in the vicinity of Santiago de Cuba. It is supposed they are going to Cinco Villas, where they will mass their forces. This movement explains the recent disappearance of the rebels from the jurisdiction of Jiguave. The report in circulation yesterday that Cespedes was captured proves to be unfounded.

Washington, April 14.—Chandler and Morton desired to debate the Alabama treaty with open doors, but failed.

Sumner made a two hours' speech. He said England should be called upon to admit that she was in the wrong in recognizing the Confederates as belligerents. Rebel cruisers were built in British forts, equipped with British armaments, manned with British seamen, got to sea under British colors, sheltered and provided with stores in ports of British islands and colonies, and though well known to have first escaped to sea in violation of England's neutrality laws, were permitted by British vessels of war to pursue their career of destruction without molestation.

Chandler made a fierce attack on England and her course, and expressed the belief that there was not room enough on this continent for any nation which had so grossly insulted the United States. He had long believed the struggle would come over Canada, and he now believed it would come in his day.

Fessenden endorsed the views of Sumner, that the treaty on this subject should rise to the full dignity and importance of the international questions involved, and that the nation with a due regard to its own honor could not consider it upon any lower grounds.

The President has directed the Secretary of War to order General Reynolds to proceed with the registration in Texas preparatory to an early election. It is understood, but not known, that similar orders have been issued regarding Virginia and Mississippi. It is also stated that the President will be governed by the advice of the commanding generals regarding the proper time for elections.

Great importance seems to be attached to points of the constitutions which shall be submitted to separate votes. The Wells party of Virginia are here in strong force canvassing the matter. The absence of the Virginia nine and the moderate men from Texas and Mississippi pending the decision on these vital questions excites comment.

Montgomery, April 14.—Yesterday a slight frost fell and this morning a more severe one, seriously damaging the new cotton and fruits, rendering replanting cotton necessary.

The South and North Railroad is now under contract, insuring the completion and equipment of the whole line by December, 1871.

Rome, April 12.—The pope pardoned many political offenders on Sunday.

London, April 14.—The civil war in Japan is raging with increased violence.

London, April 14.—In the House of Commons this evening the married women's property bill was introduced by Russell Gurney and was read a second time.

Paris, April 14.—The Presse says the rejection of the Alabama claims treaty by the United States Senate will be the cause of great prejudice against the United States in Europe.

SPAIN.

In spite of the general belief that the Spanish throne would be offered to the Duke of Montpensier, the monarchical majority of the Cortes resolved to tender the crown to Don Ferdinand of Portugal, and a deputation was appointed to proceed to Lisbon and make a formal offer in the name of the Spanish people. There has always been a large party in Spain anxious to accomplish what is called Iberian unity—that is to say the union of the whole Peninsula under one government. Very naturally this feeling was strong in Spain, but very naturally, also, it has been weak in Portugal. Spain is the stronger of the two countries and the united nation would be essentially Spanish. Portugal is the weaker, and a union with Spain would result in a more or less complete submergence of a nationality of which the Portuguese are proud and tenacious. The election of Don Ferdinand to the Spanish throne would place the two countries, not actually under one government, but under two branches of the same dynasty, and thus make a future union at least possible. It is quite possible that the invitation to Don Ferdinand was extended as an offer of conciliation to the Iberian sentiment, but with a conviction that the pressure of Portuguese opinion would prevent its acceptance. This seems to be probable in view of the fact that, whilst the offer to Don Ferdinand was made with unanimity, Serrano, Prim and Topete, the leading and most influential members of the Cortes, were known to be devoted to the aspirations and interests of Montpensier. Let this be as it may, Don Ferdinand has declined the dangerous honor of a seat on the Spanish throne, and the Cortes will now, in all probability, carry out the programme which had been arranged by the great military chieftains.—Crescent.

THE INVENTORY COMPLETED.

An inventory of the contents of the bundle of papers found concealed in the building corner of Royal and Conti streets, by the police on the night of the 10th instant, and claimed by G. M. Wickliffe, late auditor, as his private property, was completed yesterday by James Graham, Esq., notary public, at the Governor's office.

The package was found to contain auditor's warrants, coupons cut from levee and other State bonds (coupons all due,) and license receipts amounting in the aggregate to $153,090 03, together with other documents pertaining to the auditor's office.

The inventory having been completed the package was sealed by the notary public and returned to the custody of the Governor, he being considered the proper custodian of papers relating to public business.

AUDITOR WICKLIFFE TO BE TRIED.

In a brief, but pregnant opinion delivered yesterday morning, Judge Abell, of the First District (criminal) Court, overruled the demurrers filed by the accused in the several cases therein pending against Auditor Wickliffe, and he will therefore be put on trial before a jury under the charges contained in the indictments or informations, without the benefit of the delay which would accompany a previous impeachment and trial by the Legislature. Picayune, April 15.

The New Orleans, Mobile and Chattanooga Railroad.

This company is proceeding rapidly with the work laid out and undertaken by it with so much vigor and spirit. It has more than three thousand hands at work, distributed along the whole line. The work, especially the bridging of the various large streams between this city and Mobile, is of a very extensive character, but with the great resources of the company, and the skill, experience and energy of its admirable engineering corps, these difficulties become quite insignificant. If some unforeseen accident or interruption does not occur, we expect, in a year from the present date, to be able to leave this city in the morning by this road and dine with our friends in Mobile. What an immense benefit and blessing will it be too to our jaded citizens, during our long summers, to be able to reach, in a few hours, the various delightful seaside resorts which have heretofore been so difficult and vexatious to get to. Instead of the noise, bustle, confusion, delays of the old mode of travel by that antiquated concern, the old Pontchartrain Railroad, and then on the steamers, to be tossed about on the too frequently agitated waves of Lakes Pontchartrain and Borgne, with all the dangers of storms, grounding and other perils of steam boats, and with the vexation of being crowded in close cabins with children, nurses, dogs, birds, etc., we shall then only have to get into a fine car, and after four or five hours of steaming through our picturesque swamps, across the Rigolets, and through the fragrant pine forests, and within view of the lake and gulf, and presently we are at Bay of St. Louis, next at Pass Christian, and so on to Mississippi City, Biloxi, Ocean Springs, Pascagoula, and, finally, at Mobile.—Surely this will open a new, a bright and happy era to our city. Hitherto the great difficulty of living comfortably and pleasantly on the seashore has been the uncertainty of regular communications with the city. Many of the most desirable localities are very difficult of approach by steamers, owing to the shallowness of the bays and bars. People residing there are seriously inconvenienced in getting their supplies. All these objections to seaside residence for our citizens, who do not like to be separated long from their families, but wish to secure the fresh air of the country and enjoy the bracing breezes of the gulf and the many marine pleasures, will disappear when the work now being prosecuted with so much vigor by the New Orleans, Mobile and Chattanooga Railroad Company shall be finished.

The accomplishment of this work will be, to a company of the resources and capacity of this, a mere earnest of still greater undertakings, of even more importance to our city. When like evidences of honest and sincere purpose are given by other aspirants for the great honor and achievement of securing for this city uninterrupted railroad communication with Texas, we shall believe in the probability of that great result being accomplished by other associations as well as by the New Orleans, Mobile and Chattanooga Railroad Company. New Orleans Times.

To Prevent Kerosene Explosions.

Ammoniacal gas is the most powerful extinguisher of fire there is. Now, I add to one gallon of ordinary kerosene six ounces fluid of liq ammonia (worth nine cents) and three-quarters of an ounce of muriatic acid. Before adding these ingredients you will find that you can set fire to coal oil with a match immediately—at least, to all I have lately seen. Now, after adding these, I have poured into a tin cup a small quantity, and lighted a match and held it close to the oil. It would not set fire to it till I had burned nearly three matches, or, in other words, until the oil got very hot. I find in burning it gives a brighter flame, and, of course, a better light, in consequence of the chlorine present in the oil. The addition of muriatic acid forms muriate (chloride) of ammonia, and with the quantity I use leaves an excess of ammonia in the oil. There is no precipitate formed, but the oil, when burned out dry, will leave a crust of salt of ammonia behind, which can be cleaned out with water. The can in which the oil is kept should be kept stopped tight to prevent the ammonia evaporating. It is impossible for any lamp to explode which burns this oil. The combustible gas is burned out by the wick, leaving some free ammonia and chlorine gas in the lamp, and in the presence of these every chemist knows that explosion or even combustion is impossible. So much for this, then Now, please let me call attention to the importance of ammonia as an extinguisher of fire from any cause. I speak from experience, as it saved a gallery from burning out last winter at the Naval Academy, Annapolis. The coal lamp fell down by accident in a dark room and broke. The oil caught fire, and in a moment one third of the room was in a blaze. I threw a blanket over it; no use, it had proceeded too far, and the blanket would not cover it all. I immediately seized the ammonia bottle near at hand, with about six ounces ammonia in it, smashed it into the blaze, closed the door to shut off the draft, and within two or three seconds the fire was smothered by the ammonia gas.

Of course there was a strong smell—ammonia, you know, has a strong odor—but the fire was out, and the wooden building saved. Now, sir, with a quantity of this in every house, two thirds of all the kerosene fires could be prevented. This is no new theory of mine, but a chemical fact, only it has not been very extensively applied heretofore. Correspondent of the New York News

The Dagger of Cortez.—It may interest some to learn that the dagger of this celebrated conqueror of Mexico is still in existence. This deadly weapon is of peculiar construction, the handle being of open filagree work in steel, surmounted by a Spanish crown, with curious steel pendant ornaments within it. The cross bar, like the rest of the instrument, is of polished steel, finished with a crown at either end; and above this is an oblong structure, four inches in length, containing a piece of mechanism by which, on being pressed, the blade was opened when it entered the wound. The blade, properly so called, springing from this, is eight inches long, and opens like a pair of scissors. When thus opened in the wound, a liquid poison, previously placed in a deep groove, running down the center of the blade, would be emitted, causing certain death. This dagger, which is well authenticated, descended from an ancient Mexican family (Alvarez) to the Bishop of Mobile, who deposited it in the museum of the University of St. Louis, where it remained sixteen years, when it came into possession of the present owner, a gentleman residing at Aldershott. No other dagger of similar construction is at present known to exist.

Mr. Mackonochie and his Lights.—He will discontinue the two lights upon the altar, but he will substitute in their place a larger number of lights above and around it. And as he is forbidden to have candles lighted, he will keep the lamps which are to supply their places always burning, day and night, so that, being always alight, they will never need to be lighted. It almost sounds like a joke; yet this is the Ritualistic notion of obedience. It is about the same as if a man who was told that it was wrong to get drunk should suppose that he fulfilled the moral law by keeping himself continually drunk, and so never having to undergo the process.—Record.

Withdrawal from the Episcopal Ministry.

The Rev. Marshall B. Smith, for a number of years rector of St. John's church, Passaic, New Jersey, an alumnus of the Theological Seminary of Virginia, and for two years the working editor of the Protestant Churchman, has written the following letter to Bishop Odenheimer, in which he withdraws from the ministry of the Episcopal Church.—Episcopalian.

To the Right Reverend William Henry Odenheimer, D. D., Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the diocese of New Jersey:

My Dear Bishop: Having, after much prayerful deliberation, finally determined to withdraw from the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church, it is my duty to communicate the fact to you, to whom I have sustained a canonical relation for nearly eight years, as having ecclesiastical jurisdiction in the premises.

In making my decision known to you, it is not my purpose to burden you with a history of mental conflicts, or with a discussion of church principles. My views on the questions that agitate our church have been again and again expressed to you or to others in your presence. A few brief statements, however, are necessary as explanatory of the course which I feel called upon to pursue.

My entire religious life has been in connection with the Episcopal Church. I was baptized and confirmed in it, graduated from one of its oldest theological seminaries, was ordained by one of its most devout bishops, and, in a ministry of more than ten years, have endeavored, according to my measure, to preach Christ crucified, and have, with strict fidelity to canonical requirements, devoted my energies to the service of our church.

For some time I believed that the Book of Common Prayer was consistently and thoroughly Protestant, and, therefore, in harmony with the Low Church theory; but after a thorough study of the Prayer Book, in its history and phraseology, it has become evident to me that the unfinished work of the Edwardian Reformers has been made less Protestant by each succeeding revision, our American revision included, and that the baptismal, communion and other offices of our church, are more in harmony with the views of High Churchmen than with the views which I have always conscientiously held. "Priest," "altar" and "sacrifice" stand forth throughout, either in the letter or in the spirit of the liturgy and service book. As a true Protestant, both by choice and inheritance, I can no longer give to the present Book of Common Prayer, containing as it does germs of Romanism, my hearty endorsement, or honestly use certain expressions which it contains.

The canons passed by the last General Convention, which was the legally elected and true legislative body of this church, are some of them antagonistic to the Protestant articles of religion of this church, and are also such that I cannot conscientiously obey them. The teachings of your Third Triennial Charge, inculcating the duty of unconditional submission to ecclesiastical authority, and the action of the last annual convention of this diocese, I cannot, with a clear conscience, endorse or submit to—adhering, as I do, to the truth as taught in the Gospel, and in its epitome, those noble Protestant formularies, the Thirty-nine Articles, which savor neither of Arminian nor Romish error, and which shine in the midst of the Book of Common Prayer as a light in a dark place.

Having no disposition to violate law, or to question the legal right of the majority to make canons and enforce them, there is no alternative for me, as an honest man, but to withdraw from the service of a church whose offices I can no longer use, and which has refused to myself and many others—although we respectfully appealed to the General Convention—the liberty to use alternative expressions: a church whose boasted catholicity and comprehensiveness have vanished at the bidding of ecclesiastical power.

I say this without the least diminution of personal esteem for those from whom I differ, especially my reverend brethren of the diocese of New Jersey, with whom, notwithstanding my well known views, my relations, as a member of the convention, and as a member for several years of the Standing Committee, have always been not only intimate, but such as to awaken only pleasant recollections.

I love the mode of worship of our church, and could never leave it, did I see any possibility of a revision of its offices, the suppression of Romish and other corrupt practices, and a just guarantee of liberty to the evangelical clergy; but I have ceased to hope for any such result. To leave a church, endeared to me by so many precious memories and associations of private and pastoral life, is no easy matter, and involves a solemn responsibility; but fidelity to an honest sense of duty and the obligations of conscience compel the sacrifice. I censure none who differ from me or who may misconstrue my motives; to Christ, the Judge, they and I are alone accountable.

I therefore withdraw, not from the ministry of Christ, but from the ministry of the particular church known as "The Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America," and desire that you will take action, in accordance with the canon, at as early a date as may be convenient to yourself. I have only to add that it is my express desire that the notices of my displacement, whether privately or publicly given, be accompanied by the statement that it was at my own request, and for reasons not affecting my moral or religious character.

With the kindest feelings toward yourself, and with an earnest desire for your temporal and spiritual prosperity and happiness, I remain, affectionately yours in Christ,

Marshall B. Smith,
Presbyter.

Mr Jefferson on Appointing His Relatives to Office.—A Letter to His Kinsman, George Jefferson.—The following letter is taken from Randell's Life of Jefferson, volume 2, page 662:

Dear Sir: I have to acknowledge the receipt of yours of March 4, and to express to you the delight with which I found the just, disinterested and honorable point of view in which you saw the proposition it covered. The resolution you so properly approved had long been formed in my mind. The public will never be made to believe that the appointment of a relative is made on the ground of merit alone, uninfluenced by family views; nor can they ever see with approbation offices, the disposal of which they intrust to their presidents for public purposes, divided out as family property. Mr. Adams degraded himself infinitely by his conduct on this subject, as Washington had done himself the greatest honor. With two such examples to proceed by I should be doubly inexcusable to err. It is true this places the relations of the President in a worse situation than if he were a stranger; but the public good, which cannot be effected if its confidence be lost, requires this sacrifice. Perhaps, too, it is compensated by sharing in the public esteem. I could not be satisfied till I assured you of the increased esteem with which this transaction fills me for you. Accept my affectionate expression of it

Th. Jefferson.

The Coming Councils.—The Roman correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette writes under date of February 12th:

"The Marquis de Lavalette has addressed to the Marquis de Banneville a dispatch relating to the Œcumenical Council, which has given occasion to several interviews between the ambassador and Cardinal Antonelli. The dispatch, after expressing the satisfaction of the French government at the progress made in the preparations for the assembling of the council, and promising a guard of French troops to ensure liberty to its deliberations, expresses a hope that the Holy Father will not permit the introduction of topics calculated to disturb the harmony prevailing among the French clergy. The subject of Gallicanism is named as one of these questions. The French minister states that its discussion would divide the bishops of France into two hostile camps, nor would they be less disunited in their views on the organic laws, and the dogma of the infallibility of the sovereign pontiffs. This dispatch is regarded at the vatican as an attempt at dictation, and has excited a deep feeling of resentment. In fact, it strikes out the chief propositions in the pope's programme, and all that remains is but leather and prunella. From any other power such interference would be answered by severe rebuke, but it is necessary to keep on terms with France, and Cardinal Antonelli and the pope are deliberating how they can shuffle out of the difficulty."

They have stylish parties in Boston, at which no one worth less than $250,000 is admitted.

HARSH JUDGMENTS.

O God! whose thoughts are brightest light,
Whose love runs always clear,
To whose kind wisdom sinning souls
Amidst their sins are dear!

Sweeten my bitter-thoughted heart
With charity like Thine,
Till self shall be the only spot
On earth which does not shine.

Hard-heartedness dwells not with souls
Round whom Thine arms are drawn;
And dark thoughts fade away in grace,
Like cloud spots in the dawn.

Time was when I believed that wrong
In others to detect
Was part of genius, and a gift
To cherish, not reject.

Now, better taught by Thee, O Lord,
This truth dawns on my mind:
The best effect of heavenly light
Is earth's false eyes to blind.

He who no praise can reach is aye
Men's least attempts approving;
Whom justice makes all-merciful,
Omniscience makes all loving.

When we ourselves least kindly are,
We deem the world unkind;
Dark hearts, in flowers where honey lies,
Only the poison find.

How Thou canst think so well of us,
Yet be the God Thou art,
Is darkness to my intellect,
But sunshine to my heart.

Yet habits linger in the soul;
More grace, O Lord! more grace!
More sweetness from Thy loving heart!
More sunshine from Thy face!

THE MINISTER'S CARE.

Mr. Editor: Some people think it a pleasant thing to be a minister of the Gospel. To live in a parsonage provided and furnished by the church, to visit among the members and be received by them as their pastor, to stand before them on the Sabbath and minister to them in holy things, looks very nice on paper. I suppose this is what they call the "sunny side." There is also a "shady side," even in the best circuits and stations, where all the necessaries and comforts of life are provided by an appreciative people. There is the Sunday school, and the prayer meeting, and the public worship to be provided for and attended to, which require much study, labor and anxiety. And there is the indifference of many of the members of the church to these interests of religion to struggle with, and, if possible, remove. Then there are discordant elements in the church to be watched and held in check, for the minister is the watchman, and he must discover the evil in its buddings, and nip it ere it injures the interests of the church of God.

Again, some of the members will have their way about everything, or fly off on a tangent. Others are dictatorial and uncharitable. They are always ready to make unkind speeches about those persons and measures that do not exactly suit them. Others, again, are foolishly sensitive. They see in everything done or said a design against them. If there is an organ in the church, that is almost sure to be a source of trouble, for choirs will have their feuds. I never knew it otherwise.

Now all these things come directly to the preacher's ears, and, if he cares for the church, to his heart also. He must bear the burden. His heart must bleed to see Christianity wounded in the house of its friends. He must endeavor to quiet the troubled waters, for the interests of the church are involved, and upon him devolves the care of the church. "Who is weak, and I am not weak? Who is offended, and I burn not?" I know a respectable minister of the Gospel who will not visit his flock except in cases of sickness, because in doing so he finds out too many unpleasant things. St. Paul said, "Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes, save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep. * * Besides all those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches." This was the greatest of all his trials—first, because it came upon him daily; secondly, because while those things first mentioned were without, this, "the care of all the churches," was within. It came "upon" him, but it entered his heart—it was a wasting "care." There is not a faithful minister of the Gospel anywhere who does not suffer daily under the same "care." But much of this is unnecessary. If the members of the church would observe the following rules they would lighten the burdens of their pastors:

1. "And we beseech you, brethren, to know them which labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake.—I Thessalonians, v, 12, 13.

2. "I, therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace."—Ephesians iv, 1-3.

3. "Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving; withal praying also for us, that God would open unto us a door of utterance, to speak the mystery of Christ."—Colossians iv, 2, 3.

WHAT HARM IS THERE IN IT?

Mr. Editor: Hearing this expression so often used by professors of religion has prompted me to say a word. It seems to me the question is not properly propounded; for, if we are trying to serve the Lord we should not look for harm, but good. We are seeking good, and not only good, but the greatest good. It is the duty of every Christian, not to see how near he may come to serving the devil, and not do it, but to see how perfectly he can serve God. This question is asked about a variety of subjects, a few of which are dancing, card playing, attending theaters, visiting on the Sabbath, etc. Now, should not the question be propounded thus: Is there any good in these things? In order to answer properly, we must have a proper conception of what is good; is it used in a spiritual or temporal sense? Therefore, good here means that which tends to our spiritual advancement and to the glory of God. Then the question may be changed thus: Do these things tend to our religious advancement and to the glory of God? If the question thus propounded can be answered in the affirmative, we may venture to participate, but if not we must in no wise participate. Now to apply the rule to the above subjects: Does dancing tend to our religious advancement and to the glory of God? Does card-playing, attending theaters, visiting on the Sabbath day? If not, let us not use any of them. If there seems to be a doubt in the mind about the matter, we should always give the doubt in favor of the safe side.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Mobile, April 7, 1869.

Mr. Editor: The services of our second quarterly meeting, at Franklin street, have closed, and I am glad to say we had a time of considerable interest and profit.

Brother James A. Heard, our presiding elder, was with us, preaching on Saturday, as well as on the Sabbath. Four persons connected themselves with the church—two by certificate—and one was baptized. The communion was specially impressive and profitable. The love feast, on Sabbath afternoon, was largely attended, and many were melted into tenderness and sacred love by the gracious presence of the Master. The burden of our prayer is, "O Lord, we beseech thee, send now prosperity."

Fraternally, J. Bancroft.

Greenville, Ala., March 17, 1869.

Mr. Editor: Some great teacher said, "Men love darkness rather than light," and it does seem, in some quarters, to be a fact. For instance, your publication of the financial operations of our Conference last year, as set forth in those startling characters, commonly called figures, has not been most pleasing to some I wot of.

Now on my circuit we have much improved in our devotion to the missionary cause. We have already raised and paid the presiding elder five cents and four mills per capita, instead of one and a half cents last year, and Brother John Sampy paid $5 of this amount. It is due him to mention this.

Again, in the minutes, is published, by the financial board, a paper recommending stewards to have an early meeting and raise something, to be handed the preacher when he arrives in his work. Now that would be pleasant, indeed, to some of that calling. But some are offended. They say you want to force them. True, you are forced to credit them to the end of the year, and sometimes a little longer.

Now I have fallen back for three weeks to work up even with board already had, while engaged in mind, soul and body, the first quarter-meeting every appointment at the time, and visiting and praying with more than three-fourths of all the Methodists in my circuit. The brethren and stewards kindly agreed to the arrangement; but a faithful presiding elder would not sanction it.

In due time I will return, the Lord helping, and hope to do good. I have been well received and well treated, so far as that is concerned, and am well pleased with the people, especially at Monroeville.

But all this does not remove some difficulties. For instance, I had to have a good character and be out of debt before I could be admitted into the Conference, which qualifications I supposed I must retain and maintain to continue in it. And now I am bound by law, it is said, to go into debt, and of course lose my character, or lose or neglect my work, and be hurled from the Conference as an unfaithful man—a rebel to the government and untrue to my vows.

Well, I give all concerned due notice, in good time, that from and after this year, as heretofore, I will neither beg nor steal, and do a man's work, all at the same time. Neither will I nor my family sponge on or swindle any man, while I am able to do, and am doing, work for other people. I scout and will not entertain the idea of inability to support me.

I would, so far as my being and well-being are concerned, rather cease to be on earth than cease to be an itinerant Methodist preacher. But I prefer to cease to be anything when I cannot be a man. It takes a man to make a Christian, with grace, and a man and Christian, with great grace, to make a minister of Jesus, worthy of the name and fit for the office.

Let the bishop, presiding elders, brethren, church, and the world understand me, and hereafter dispose of me accordingly.

Yours truly, in Christ Jesus,

J. W. Jordan.

A True Marriage.—I believe there are few thoughtful men who have not come to regard as one of the least explicable among the great riddles of the earthly economy the rarity of well-assorted marriages. It might be so different, one cannot help thinking. The adaptations for many so wonderful! The elements of happiness so manifold and so rich! Yet how often—how miserably sometimes—it all miscarries! The waters of Paradise turned to fountains of bitterness—the gifts of heaven perverted to curses on earth!

I do not mean that there are few unions yielding reasonable comfort, friendly relations, a life free from open quarrel or secret heart-burning; but I speak of every marriage, without flaw or jar—a mating alike of the material, with its intangible affinities and its wondrous magnetisms, and of the immaterial principle within, that survives the death change. I speak of a heart-home pervaded by harmony not only unbroken, but immutable as that of the spheres; felt to be so by those whom it blesses, calms, satisfies; a social state to which, when man and woman attain, there remains nothing in the way of earthly need or acquisition, save daily bread, to be coveted or prayed for.

Some think that, in this trial-phase of our existence, no such state of harmony and happiness is to be found. Among the few who do find it none of these skeptics will have place. There is no entrance into that temple except for those who believe!—Lippincott's Magazine.

VOLTAIRE'S DEATH-BED.

On the 25th of February, 1758, Voltaire penned the following blasphemy: "Twenty years more and God will be in a pretty plight." Let us see what was taking place precisely at the time indicated. On the 25th of February, 1778, Voltaire was lying, as was thought, on his bed of death. Racked and tortured by remorse for past misdeeds, he was most anxious to propitiate the God whom he had insulted, and the church which he and his had sworn to destroy; and hence he resolved on addressing himself to a minister of religion, in order to receive the sacrament of reconciliation. On the 26th, then, he wrote the following letter to the Abbe Gualtier:

"You promised me, sir, to come and hear me. I entreat you to take the trouble to call as soon as possible."

The abbe went at once. A few days after, in the presence of the same Gualtier, the Abbe Mignot, and the Marquis Villevielle, the dying man made the following declaration:

"I, the undersigned, declare that for these four days past, having been afflicted with a vomiting of blood, at the age of eighty-four, and not being able to drag myself to church, the Reverend the Rector of St. Sulpice, having been pleased to add to his good works that of sending to me the Abbe Gualtier, a priest, I confessed to him, and if it pleases God to dispose of me, I die in the Holy Catholic Church, in which I was born, hoping that the divine mercy will deign to pardon all my faults. If ever I have scandalized the church, I ask pardon of God and of the church. Voltaire.

"March 2nd, 1778."

This document was deposited with Mons. Momet, notary at Paris. It was also, with the permission of Voltaire, carried to the rector of St. Sulpice, and to the Archbishop of Paris, in order that they might say whether or not the declaration was sufficiently explicit and satisfactory.

Twice before, when dangerously ill, the wretched man had made abject retractions. But these he not only retracted when restored to health, but, passing from bad to worse, he poured out fuller vials of wrath against God and Christianity. It was then a necessity to receive the most solemn and full abjurations of past infidelities.

When Gualtier returned with the archiepiscopal answer he was refused admission to the dying man. The arch-conspirators trembled at the apostacy of their hero, and, dreading the ridicule which would fall upon themselves, it was determined not to allow any minister of religion thenceforth to visit him. Finding himself thus cut off from the consolations of religion, Voltaire became infuriated—no reproach, no curse being deemed bad enough for the D'Alemberts and Diderots who guarded him. "Begone," he said; "it is you who have brought me to my present state. Begone! I could have lived without you all, but you could not have existed without me; and what a wretched glory have you procured me!" And then praying, and next blaspheming—now saying, "O Christ," and next, "I am abandoned by God and man," he wasted away his life, ceasing to curse and blaspheme and live on the 30th of May, 1778.

These facts were made public by Mons. Tronchin, a Protestant physician from Geneva, who attended him almost to the last.—Horrified at what he had witnessed, he declared that "to see all the furies of Orestes, one had only to be present at the death of Voltaire"—("Pour voir toutes les furies d'Oreste, il n'y avoit qu'a se trouver a la mort de Voltaire.") "Such a spectacle," he adds, "would benefit the young who are in danger of losing the precious helps of religion." The Mareschal de Richelieu, too, was so terrified at what he saw that he left the bedside of Voltaire, declaring that "the sight was too awful for endurance."

Vilette, the friend of Voltaire, and, of course, his copier, Monke, denied these statements, just as the friends of Cæsar denied the resurrection of our divine Lord; but the great philosopher, Mons. de Luc, whose learning, integrity and position were of the highest, honestly repeated and confirmed what had been publicly and truthfully stated about the terrors of death which awaited Voltaire.

I will transcribe a small portion of his letter, dated Windsor, October 23, 1797: "Be at Paris in 1781"—De Luc was then in his fifty-first year—"I was often in company with Mons. Tronchin. He was an old acquaintance of Voltaire's at Geneva, whence he came to Paris, in quality of first physician to the father of the late Duke of Orleans. He was called in during Voltaire's last illness, and I have heard him repeat all those circumstances about which Paris and the whole world were at that time speaking, respecting the horrid state of this impious man's soul at approach of death. Mons. Tronchin did everything in his power to calm him, for the agitation he was in was so violent that no remedies could take effect. But he could not succeed, and unable to endure the horror he felt at the peculiar nature of his frantic rage, he abandoned him. Mons. Tronchin immediately published in all companies the real facts. This he did to furnish a dreadful lesson to those who calculate on being able, on a death-bed, to investigate the dispositions most proper to appear in before the judgment seat of God. At that period, not only the state of the body, but the condition of the soul, may frustrate their hopes of making so awful an investigation, for justice and sanctity, as well as goodness, are attributed to God; and He sometimes, as a wholesale admonition to mankind, permits the punishment denounced against the impious man to begin even in his life, the tortures of remorse."

Such are the facts relative to the wretched end of Voltaire—facts evidenced by Tronchin and Richelieu, and believed in, as De Luc assures us, by the whole of Paris, and spoken of throughout the world.

Rasoherina, the late queen of Madagascar, always lived as a heathen; but, as we learn from the following account in the Annals of the Propagation of the Faith, died a good Catholic, probably without being herself aware of it. Father Jouen, head of the Roman Catholic mission there, thus describes her unconscious conversion:

"Then it was that, in her extremity, M. Laborde approached the royal patient, who had recovered her full consciousness, and suggested to her some pious considerations, suitable to the great act that was about to be accomplished. She answered by raising her eyes and her arms to heaven. And then, as if he were about to magnetize her, he called for a vessel of water, dipped his hands in it, and washed Rasoherina's forehead while pronouncing the sacramental words. None of those present had the least suspicion that this pious stratagem was made use of to regenerate a soul. Thus was baptized the sovereign of Madagascar, on Friday, the 27th of March, 1868, at five o'clock in the morning, by virtue of the precious blood, the feast of which is celebrated on that day. Three days later, on Monday, the 1st of April, at eleven o'clock at night, she went to heaven, as we confidently trust, to exchange her title of queen for that of patroness of the great African island, a patroness all the more zealous for the conversion of her people, as no one knew better than she did the extent of their miseries and the depth of the darkness in which they are plunged. Glory be to God for all this! and may the noble-hearted man who so faithfully carried out the designs of divine mercy be held in grateful remembrance."

There are at the present time no fewer than thirty-two Bourbon princes and princesses in Paris, namely: the ex-queen of Spain, her husband and five children, the Count d'Aquila and his family, the Duke of Savilla, the Duke and Duchess of Madrid, the old Duke of Savona, the Count de Girgenti, and several others of the same family. Verily, the descendants of Louis the Fourteenth are no less numerous than they are unfortunate. And all these thirty-two Bourbons have to live in private houses within a few hundred yards of the Tuileries, where their ancestors resided in royal splendor.

So angry was Napoleon III with the Belgian government on account of the railroad bill, which has created such a sensation on the European continent, that he said to M. de Lagueronniere, in the most excited tone, "King Leopold will remember this." "Oh, he will remember this."

Petitions against freedom of worship are being numerously signed in some of the chapels of Madrid. The pope, it appears, has sent his blessing specially to all who affix their signature to those documents.

THE CONVENT CASE.

Will the sickening disclosures which have been made in the Court of Queen's Bench with regard to convent life lead to any practical result? Shall we continue stolidly to shut our eyes to the fact that conventual establishments are rapidly on the increase in Great Britain? In any one of these places, mistaken girls, who have taken upon themselves religious vows, may be enduring, without being able to communicate with their friends, indignities and persecutions like those heaped upon Miss Saurin. Whatever their sufferings, the public knows nothing of them; however sadly they may regret the haste with which they cut themselves off from the joys of family life, for them there is no other place of repentance than the one they so prematurely selected. Gladly, perhaps, would they make their escape from their miserable house of bondage; but the door which opened so readily to receive them, is as a wall of adamant before them when they attempt to depart. Can Englishmen, who, a few weeks ago, rejoiced so heartily in the extinction of religious houses in Spain, tamely submit to the existence of these secret prisons in their own free land, where, beyond the control of the law, all manner of cruelties may be perpetrated?—Though the name of religious liberty is desecrated, and made to subserve the ends of the most oppressive tyranny, ought we not at least to demand that these so-called religious houses should be thrown open to the light of the day? "He that doeth truth cometh to the light." If there is nothing to conceal, why should these retreats be so jealously guarded?

In the light of recent revelations, we may well ask, why should nunneries be barred against public inspection any more than workhouses, or lunatic asylums, or private retreats for the insane? The periodical visitation of these institutions exercises some kind of check upon officials, and gives the public a guarantee that abuses, wherever they exist, shall not be long-lived. The superiors of religious houses, however, have no such check placed upon them. If they are naturally of a mean or tyrannical disposition, they may give it the widest scope, without fear of being called to account. They are in an impregnable fortress, from which they can shoot out their arrows of destruction, and be unassailed in return. Any enormities may be enacted in the name of "discipline," and the world at large be none the wiser. All the liberty must be on their side, and they are martyrs the moment we seek to know how the inmates under their charge spend their time, and whether they are the willing victims of a life-long seclusion from the world. We trust that the monstrous privilege which our "reverend mothers" have so long enjoyed will be vigorously attacked, and that the British public will demand that they shall not systematically crush the life out of young hearts without being amenable to law. It so happens that the Court of Queen's Bench in Dublin has been occupied with a convent case while the court in London has been inquiring into the wrongs of Miss Saurin. A young lady of sixteen, in the Loretto Convent School, Rathfarnham, wished to leave, to reside with her mother. The mother had frequently written letters to her daughter, but they had all been returned unopened; even the mother's solicitor had not been allowed to deliver a letter to the young lady. Another case is about to be brought before the Belgian courts.

Facts like these point but in one direction, namely, the periodical visitation of nunneries by competent inspectors. We cannot agree with a contemporary that this duty may be assigned to Roman Catholic dignitaries, or, at all events, to visitors selected from their communion. We must have inspectors who will make known the truth, the whole truth, and nothing else but the truth; and we have had too much experience of Romish evasions to trust the evidence of Romish dignitaries when their own system is concerned.—Christian Times.

Victor Emmanuel has ninety-seven palaces. The emperor of Russia has sixty-two; the king of Prussia seventy-four; Napoleon eleven official ones, and ninety-three which he might occupy as chief of the State. Francis Joseph, of Austria, has upward of one hundred. Isabelle, of Spain, had fifty two, and she has now only one, which formerly was a private boarding house.

The wife of Marshal Valiant is dead. For many years past she shaved regularly every day, for she had a thicker beard than most men. During her last illness she did not shave at all; her beard was so bushy that when the physician who visits all the dead to see that they died a natural death examined her, he asked: "What was this gentleman's position?"

The Silver Plate of Quintilius Varus.

BY PROF. J A. REUDELT.

On the 17th of September last some Prussian soldiers struck, while engaged in digging a shooting place at the foot of the Galgenburg, near Hildesheim, Germany, at a depth of about ten feet, upon three urns, greatly corroded, and full of holes. These urns are about two feet high, and weigh, with their contents—cups, plates, chalices, etc., and fragments of them—nearly ninety pounds. The urns and smaller vessels are of massive silver, and their metalic worth is, therefore, considerable. But their value is almost infinitely enhanced by other considerations, viz: artistic and antiquarian. The first question that presented itself at the discovery of these articles was, of course, how have they come to this place? then, how long have they been there? When were they manufactured, and what period of civilization do they represent?

Before attempting to frame an answer to any of these questions, we shall give a short description of the principal vessels, and we may discover herein material from which we can frame, if not conclusive, at least highly probable answers to these interrogatories.

The most beautiful and valuable of the articles found is an urn of the shape of a bell, which would seem to have been used as a mixer. It is entwined with tender vines, issuing from the wings of a griffon, and in them are suspended children as cupids, that catch fish, and crabs, and winged insects.

The execution is faultless, and surpasses by far everything that has so far been attempted in imitation of the antique world.

Equally fine is the workmanship of a two-handled cup, that is about four inches high. It is covered with grape leaves, and has two theatrical masks in bold relief, of which both the expression and the execution are perfect.

A third vessel, a saucer, of about a span in diameter, has on its bottom the infant Hercules, throttling two dragons with his hands, and smiling bewitchingly at the danger he had been in, and at his easy victory. A somewhat larger vessel, of the same shape, has on its inside bottom the picture of Minerva, sitting on a rack, with her head turned to the right. The whole figure of the goddess is gilt; the goddess wears her usual dress, and the ægis hangs over her left shoulder, like a scarf. On her head she wears a helmet, with three horse tails, the middle one of which rests on a sphinx, while the two others have griffons for their bases. Her left hand grasps a large round shield, with the head of Medusa in its center, and its edges are wreathed with olive leaves; with her right hand she holds grasped, not, as usual, a lance, but something that we see in no other antique figure of the goddess, viz: a plow—perhaps it is a chandelier, or a rudder. This Minerva, then, is a Minerva of peace. The plow represents her as the goddess of agriculture. That she was worshiped as the goddess of agriculture may be presumed as being generally known, but it may be less generally known that only two ancient authors, and they only read by professional philologists, ascribe to her the invention of the plow, and we have herein an almost conclusive proof as to which period these articles do not belong. Should it turn out that it is not a plow, but a chandelier, or a rudder, the proof would be equally strong in the same direction.

We can impossibly describe, or even mention in detail, all the articles found, and leave off, therefore, here. As to the different questions that present themselves, we would state, partly in answer to them, that it was at first thought that all the articles in question were from the times of the so called renaissence, i. e., from the times in which Raphael, Michael Angelo, and Benvenutto Cellina revived Grecian painting and sculpture.

Gottingen professors, however, gave it as their opinion, after a thorough examination, that none of the articles in question could be of so late a date, but that all belonged to the palmiest period of Roman civilization, either to the days of Augustus, or of one of his immediate successors.

The following points can be assumed as settled:

1. All the articles found are kitchen and table uteusils, as they were used only by the ancient world.

2. The figures and other ornaments upon them point to the palmiest days of Roman art as the time of their origin, and some of them cannot possibly be the production of later ntensils, because they were unacquainted with certain myths and notions of the duties represented thereon. The uncommon skill displayed in the whole workmanship points to Grecian masters in the days of Augustus.

There are inscriptions on about twenty-four of these vessels, stating the weight, or giving the names of the artists. The weight is given in pounds, ounces and scruples, as was customary in imperial Rome. The name of one of the manufacturers is given as Bachus (a name frequently used within ancient Rome;) that of another as Marcus Aurelius Cotta; on another vessel is inscribed Mars, which is either an invocation of the god of war, or an abbreviation of Marsus. The letters are those of the old Roman alphabet. The inscriptions occur uniformly in the same spots and agree, in this respect also, with other antique works of similar character.

3. All the articles found formed part of the drinking and table utensils of a noble and wealthy Roman. Surpassing in every respect the discovery made in 1829 near Berncey, in France, and that made in Pompei in 1835, the worth of our discovery can scarcely be overestimated.

As to the question, how came these table and drinking vessels of a wealthy Roman to Hildesheim, the country of the Cheruski, where there was never a Roman colony? there can, for the present at least, no definite answer be given to it, and we are confined to mere hypothesis, however plausible one or the other may be. The whole treasure is now in the museum of Berlin, and subsequent researches may possibly remove all doubts. We give here what seems most probable.

The articles in question were found at a depth of about ten feet, and it is not likely that any one would have buried them so deep. But they may have been cast, for some cause or other, into one of the clay pits filled with water, which once abounded there, and in the course of centuries a ten feet thick humus may have settled over them. The urns are of massive silver, and yet they are strangely oxydized and in some spots completely eaten through—had they been but two or three centuries under the ground, this could not be the case.

In 9 P. Ih. the Roman proconsul, A. Varus, started on his expedition against the unruly Germans in Northwestern Germany. Having been proconsul in Syria, where he had to deal only with effemiuate nations, he anticipated here also an easy victory, and carried everything with him to which he was used as a wealthy luxurist, as delicacies, wines and his silver plate.

It is well known that Arminius retreated before him as far as the Teutoburger forest, when he attacked him on all sides, and, assisted by fearful storms and rains, annihilated Varus and his three Roman legions in three days. This took place near Detmold, which is not very far from Hildesheim. The inhabitants of what was afterwards called Eastphalia, were parties to the great Cheruskan league, and took part in that memorable struggle against Rome. It is probable that one of their chieftains or warriors possessed himself, in some way or other, of this treasure, carried it home, but buried it, for the time being, in one of the many clay pits, and was prevented, by death or some other cause, from disinterring it.

This hypothesis, in itself highly probable, receives additional support from the following circumstance. One of the smaller cups has the bust of a beardless youth with his face turned backward. Professor Wieseler has pronounced this youth the Deus Lunus, the moon-god of Phrygia. Another cup, of equal size, has a female bust, which the same authority has pronounced that of Rhea Eqbele, and the two pieces evidently belong together. But these two divinities have as yet nowhere else been found thus grouped together. But an artist that had his workshop in Syria, of which Varus was proconsul, may have conceived the idea of grouping them thus, not only because they were worshiped by the same peoples of Anterior Asia, but also because they were nearly allied to each other in their respective offices.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

THE JESUITS.—The total number of Jesuits employed on missions throughout the world is 3,429, of whom some have their own local mission which they carry on, while others are auxiliaries of the church. Of the former class are the vicariates of Hindostan and Bombay, 28 fathers; of Madura, 50 fathers; of China, 42 fathers; and of other places, including 8 vicars apostolic, 188 fathers, 46 scholastics not yet introduced to full membership, and 62 other coadjutors. Of the second class there are 139 fathers in England, 15 in Constantinople and the vicinity, 46 in New York, 90 in Maryland, 84 in Missouri, 35 in New Orleans, 34 in California, and 14 in the Rocky mountains. These places, we judge, are the names given to districts of the United States and include the whole country. Besides these there are many more scholastics and "brothers coadjutors."

GOOD NEWS FOR OFFICE SEEKERS.—The late discovery that Jesse Grant's great grandmother, by his mother's side, married a Smith—John Smith.

Cranmor, Latimor and Ridley.

The fact of Cranmer having been lodged in the Gate house, once known as the Garden tower, now as the Bloody tower, has not been noted by the thousand and one historians of his age. It was recorded at the time by a resident in the tower whose diary is still extant; and the fact now tardily recovered from the waste of time, may throw some light on a story which is confessed to be one of the puzzling pages in a great man's life.

From the day of his arrest, Cranmer appeared in a new part. He had never been deemed a coward. Even those who loved him least had given him credit for the virtues and the passions of a genuine man. As a student and a priest, he had been daring and original in a high degree. He had thought for himself. He had thwarted and opposed his clerical superiors. He had been bold enough to marry, not once, but twice. When every one else hung back in doubt as to the best way of dealing with the great divorce, his learning gave the clue, and his spirit supplied the force, by which Henry was delivered from his matrimonial chains. Since that time he had passed through a thousand of those trials which are said to temper and steel men's minds. He had sent brave knights to the block. He had knelt by the feet of dying queens. He had watched the flames lick up the flesh of martyred saints. Nothing in his course of life led any one to suspect that he feared to die. Up to the very hour of his arrest in council, his conduct had been stout; for, knowing how Queen Mary loathed him, he did not falter; and hearing of her march on London he did not fly. What hindered him from passing into France? To the friends who urged his flight, he proudly said, It was fit that he should stay, considering the post he held, and show that he was not afraid to own the changes which had been made in the late king's time.

Yet, from the day when he was seized and clapped in the Garden tower, his stomach began to fail. Brave old Latimer lay in the adjoining Garden house; and in a room which he could see from his window, dwelt the young and innocent Lady Jane. But the soul which animated Latimer and Lady Jane appears to have been scared out of Cranmer in that hour of need. No doubt the hardships of his cell were great, for the winter months were cold; and though he dined with the lieutenant, he was probably kept without a fire. Cranmer could not treat his situation as a theme for jokes. How could he tell whether some new Forrest might not break upon his sleep? He heard that the queen was thirsting for his blood; he knew that Renard, a minister to whom the assassin's knife was a familiar thought, was at her side. Yet seeing that the primate felt no hope, it would have been manlier in him to affect no fear. The queen, knowing how much he had been her enemy and her mother's enemy, was in no mood to forget her wrongs. Indeed, those wrongs were not of a kind which lonely and unhappy women like Mary can forgive, since they touched the honor of her birth, and the purity of her mother's name. With the dark blood, and the brooding passions of her mother's race, Mary had the strength to bear, but not the virtue to forbear. Nor, in such a case as hers, could a woman be expected to see the merit of an act of grace. Not only had this man's crafty brain suggested the scheme by which Catharine could be put away, but his audacious tongue had summoned that royal lady to his court, and on her failure to obey had given his judgment of divorce against her; branding her child, now queen, as a bastard; telling her, as a man of God, that while she had been calling herself Henry's wife, she had been actually wallowing in mortal sin. Could such an offender be forgiven? Mary told her Spanish adviser that until Cranmer was in the tower she had never known one joyful day.

In the middle of September he was lodged in the Bloody tower. Winter was coming on; and his health began to droop. In November he was suffered to leave his cell and walk in the garden below, under Latimer's window. The winter was so cold that Latimer sent his servant to tell the lieutenant, with pathetic humor, that unless he took more care he would give him the slip. When Sir John Brydges, fearing lest the prelate meant to escape, ran from his pleasant fireside to the Garden house, the good old man assured him there was no cause for fear. "They mean," he said, "to burn me; now unless you give me some wood in my chamber I shall die of cold."

On the arrest of Wyat and the Kentish men, the London prisons were so choked with inmates that many of the city churches had to be used as jails. One church received four hundred captives. The tower, especially, overflowed. Little Ease was crammed, and many of the Kentish gentlemen were thrust into the crypt. Some clergymen were sent to Newgate, some to the Fleet. Among other changes of cells and prisoners, Ridley and Latimer were put into Cranmer's room in the Garden tower; an opportunity of which they had never dreamt, and of which they made the highest use. Thrown together in the Garden tower, they kept up each other's spirits by holding conferences on faith and works, which their friends found means to copy down and print. At Sir John Brydges' table, to which they walked by way of the wall terrace, afterwards known as Raleigh's walk, they met the queen's confessor, Feckenham, who talked to them of the bread and wine, as he had done with Lady Jane, and strove to entrap them by his crafty words. Above all, they searched the Scriptures in their lonely rooms; but instead of finding in Holy Writ the evidence in proof of a bodily presence in the bread and wine, they satisfied their souls that mass could never be offered as a sacrifice for sin.

Yet Mary's end was gained, in some degree. The cold and misery of the Bloody tower broke Cranmer's spirit, as it had helped in some degree to break Dudley's spirit; so that the priest who, in Lambeth, had been little less than a hero, became, when he was removed to Oxford, little better than a craven. Mary felt that in Cranmer she could humiliate the reformation. And she was right. The high deeds of many years have not sufficed to cover the weakness of a day, when the chosen champion of religious freedom set his seal to a recantation and denial of the most cherished sentiments of his life.

The only excuse that can be made for Cranmer is, that his flesh was frail, that he was greatly tried, that his denial was drawn from him, as it were, on the rack. When he found the queen obdurate, he withdrew his denial, and met his death like a martyr. Peace to his soul!

Latimer and Ridley also passed through fire to their Father's house. W. H. Dixon, in Her Majesty's Tower.

THE CHICKEN QUESTION.—People having poultry yards, and who desire to secure high bred fowls, should now do this: Convert every rooster upon the premises into pot pie; replace each one thus removed by a high bred fowl, a Brahma or a Dorking. The result will be that all the chickens hatched next season will be valuable half breeds. Kill off the dung-hill roosters, anyhow, and replace with blooded. The result will be that next winter, where you now get half a dozen eggs, you will get a score, while a single pair of fowls will make an ampler roast than four of the kind now taken miscellaneously from a dung-hill roost.

President—And why should you challenge them?

Hiroux—Because all of them are my personal enemies.

President—How so?

FIFTY WAYS OF COOKING MEATS.

NUMBER TWO.

VEAL.—To Choose Good Veal.—When the kidney is well surrounded with fat, the meat is of good quality. There is a vein in the shoulder very perceptible, and its color indicates the freshness of the meat; if a bright red—or blue, it is recently killed; if any green or yellow spots are visible, it is stale.

16. Roast Fillet of Veal.—Take out the bone, and fill the vacancy with a dressing made of bread soaked soft, then squeezed out of the water, and mixed with chopped raw pork and two eggs. Season with salt and pepper, and add, if you like, sweet herbs. Put in the baking pan with a quart of water, cover the top with the dressing, and bake from two to three hours, according to size. Thicken the gravy, after taking up the meat, with some of the dressing; add a little butter and wine or catsup, if desired.

17. Veal Olives.—Take the bone out of the fillet, and cut thin slices the size of the leg, beat them flat, rub with the yolk of an egg beaten, lay on each piece a thin slice of boiled ham, sprinkle salt, pepper, grated nutmeg, chopped parsley, and bread crumbs over all; roll them up tight, and secure them with skewers; rub them with egg, and roll them in bread crumbs; lay them on a tin dripping pan, and set them in an oven; when brown on one side, turn them, and when sufficiently done, lay them in a rich, highly-seasoned gravy made of proper thickness; stew them till tender, garnish with force-meat balls, and green pickles sliced.

18. Fricando of Veal.—Cut slices from the fillet an inch thick and six inches long, lard them with slips of lean, middling of bacon, bake them a light brown, stew them in well-seasoned gravy made as thick as rich cream. Serve them up hot, and lay round the dish sorrel, stewed with butter, pepper and salt, till quite dry.

19. Veal Cutlets.—Cut the veal in slices three-quarters of an inch thick. Season with salt and pepper, and dip in beaten yolk of egg, and then in grated cracker or bread crumbs, and fry in hot lard. When the veal is done take it up, and pour into the gravy some cream or milk, a little cut parsley, and some salt and pepper. Let it boil a few minutes, and pour over the veal.

20. Knuckle of Veal.—Boil a half pint of pearl barley in salt and water till quite tender, drain the water from it, stir in a piece of butter, and put it in a deep dish. Have the knuckle nicely boiled in milk and water, and lay it on the barley; pour some parsley and butter over it.

21. Ragout of a Breast of Veal.—Separate the joints of the brisket, and saw off the sharp ends of the ribs, trim it neatly, and half roast it. Put it in a stewpan with a quart of good gravy seasoned with wine, walnut and mushroom catsup, a teaspoonful of curry powder, and a few cloves of garlic; stew it till tender, thicken the gravy, and garnish with sweetbreads nicely boiled.

22. Breast of Veal Stewed.—Put it into the stewpan with some white stock, add a bunch of sweet herbs, three onions, pepper and salt. Stew till tender, strain the gravy, and send to table.

23. Calf's Head Baked.—Butter the head, and powder it with a seasoning composed of broad crumbs, very fine, a few sweet herbs in sage, chopped very fine, cayenne, white pepper and salt. Divide the brains into several pieces, not too small; sprinkle them with bread crumbs, and lay them in the dish with the head. Stick a quantity of small pieces of butter over the head and in the eyes; throw crumbs over all; pour in three parts of the dish full of water, and bake it in a fast oven two hours.

24. Calf's Feet Fricassee.—Boil the feet till very tender, cut them in two, and pull out the large bones; have half a pint of good white gravy, add to it a spoonful of white wine, one of lemon pickle, and some salt, with a teaspoonful of curry powder; stew the feet in it fifteen minutes, and thicken it with the yolks of two eggs, a gill of milk, a large spoonful of butter, and two of white flour; let the thickening be very smooth, shake the stewpan over the fire a few minutes, but do not let it boil, lest the eggs and milk should curdle.

25. To Fry Calf's Feet.—Prepare them as for the fricassee, dredge them well with flour, and fry them a light brown; pour parsley and butter over, and garnish with fried parsley.

26. To Stuff and Roast a Calf's Liver.—Take a fresh calf's liver, and having made a hole in it with a large knife run in lengthways, but not quite through, have ready a forced meat or stuffing made of part of the liver parboiled, fat of bacon minced very fine, and sweet herbs powdered; add to these some grated bread and spice finely powdered, with pepper and salt. With this stuffing fill the hole in the liver, which must be larded with fat bacon, and then roasted, flouring it well, and basting with butter. Serve hot.

27. To Broil Calf's Liver.—Cut in slices, put over it salt and pepper, broil it nicely, and pour on some melted butter, with chopped parsley after it is dished.—Arthur's Home Magazine.

BOY EXQUISITES.

Girls, it is said, are superficial, given to dress, fond of gossip; as if boys were not all these things to the same degree, and as nearly in the same way as difference in the sex will permit. Fond of gossip forsooth! We were sitting once in a cafe of Delmonico's up town restaurant, near the table where five or six young sprigs were puffing away at their cigars after dinner. They seemed to be stranded on the shores of silence, and for five minutes not a word was said. At last one broached this deeply interesting subject: "I say, Bill," says he, "let's each of us tell how he undresses himself when he goes to bed!" Let not the delicate reader shudder in anticipation, or reproach us for treading on doubtful ground. It was a virginal discourse, and each of the six went through his dull narrative without a suggestion of impropriety. One of the dandies deposited his garments, as he removed them, in a certain defined order over a chair; another wandered about the room as he undressed himself, and gratified every chair with the guardianship of a separate piece of clothing. This one folded his things; another had heard some fellow say that wasn't healthy, and always hung his up. The one dawdled in undressing, the other one could undress in five minutes. Jack always wound up his watch at night; Tom always left his till morning; Dick always cleaned his teeth; Sam sometimes neglected that important duty. Six handsome, stout, well-to do, well-appointed young men in America, in the nineteenth century, driven to such desperate straits as this for something to talk about. And who that has ever made one of the parties of young men in society that meet on Sunday afternoons, whose bedroom commands a fashionable street, but will laugh at the notion that girls have a monopoly of the art of gossip. There isn't a fault that girls have, nor a defect, that can't be matched easily with a fault on the young men's side. All that is needed in the right training of girls is needed just as imperatively in the right training of the boys. Girls are commonly reproached with being fond of dress, extravagantly fond; but, the truth is, that young men are every whit as fond of it, and so far as they are able, give as much anxious thought and as much time to their toilet as their supposed weaker sisters. We knew a fellow once, a downright clever, amiable fellow, who was as fond of dressing himself up as any girl, and who won himself a name by appearing on a certain occasion in a waistcoat made of some material, the like of which had never before been seen at Newport before that morning. A shiver of jealousy and envy ran through the bosom of every delicate Paris on the piazza. There was no peace under the Newport sun, nor could be any, until it was discovered what Fred's vest was made of, and where he got the stuff. But Fred enjoyed his triumph too exquisitely to lose it by any fond disclosure; and not till the season was over did he astound the fops by the information that his beautiful vest was made of the Turkish bathing towel.—Putnam.

ATHLETICISM, pursued with so much devotion in the English schools and universities, is now becoming the subject of severe criticism in the English journals. Young men, it is asserted, go to the universities professedly to read, but instead of attending to their books, pass their time in rowing, cricketing, jumping, running, throwing hammers and "putting" weights. Athletic sports are practiced to an extravagant excess, and time and money are wasted, while the opportunities of acquiring a finished education are lost. Not only are the ordinary courses of politics and contemporary history beyond the knowledge and interests of these muscular young students, but the young men, it is asserted, grow up to manhood painfully simple and loutish. The hardening, vulgarizing effects of athletic amusements, pursued beyond the point necessary to preserve health, it is contended, are visible in the rising generation of Englishmen. A disagreeable coarseness of thought and action, it is stated, is impressed upon the young men of the schools and universities, and accompanies them through life.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

NOTICE TO PREACHERS.

Those preachers whose post offices are to be changed, will please notify this office, as soon as convenient, of the change to be made—being particular in giving the post-office from which and that to which the change is to be made.

REV. DR. MUNSEY.—This able divine is expected to preach in the Carondelet street church on Sabbath morning next, at eleven o'clock.

THE ORPHANS' FAIR.

The Protestant ladies of this city are now holding a reception for the benefit of the Seventh street orphan asylum—a fair at Odd Fellows' Hall. They have many good and beautiful things on their tables which furnish the friends of the institution a very pleasant opportunity for giving to its support. It is a place of reunion for all the Protestants, and is well patronized by them every evening.

MONROE, LOUISIANA.

We are glad to see that our enterprising friends of Monroe, and their new preacher, the Rev. C. F. Evans, have initiated the building of a Methodist church.

A place so promising should, in addition to its other attractions, present the great one of good churches—Baptist, Presbyterian, but more especially Methodist, because a Methodist church implies the other two, but the other two do not necessarily imply a Methodist.

A fair in aid of the good design is to be held on April 28th, 29th and 30th. Every citizen in the place is interested in its success, if he only has the fine sense to perceive it. Churches build up towns.

THE Baton Rouge Advocate says the time is not far distant when all of the open highland south of the Felicianas will be cultivated in cane. The Teche may offer its advantages of shell banks and orange groves, but the sugar crop is as certain here, the yield as great and the facilities for cheap transportation and communication incomparably greater.

REV. M. U. PAYNE, so long and widely known all over the continent, spent a few days, with his family, in the city, on his way from the South, where they have spent the winter. He is very well, and looking better than for years past.—Memphis Christian Advocate.

THE costs in the recent convent case in England were $10,000 a day.

COFFINS are now made of paper in Europe.

OPEN AIR BAPTISM.

"We once heard a good sister say that she would not be willing to be baptized in a baptistery; her conscience would not be satisfied short of going to the river. Now she esteemed herself a very strong Baptist. But she really failed of the true Baptist spirit. Our Lord commands us to be baptized. Where we shall be baptized, whether in a river, lake, or artificial pool in a house of worship, He does not say. We have been accustomed to baptize in the open air, and there are some reasons for preferring it; but this good sister placed custom—a good custom—on a par with the positive command of Christ."

We clip the above from an editorial of a very excellent exchange, the Central Baptist. We are much disposed to take sides with the "good sister." The Old Testament lays a good deal of stress on "running water." Still water is apt to be stagnant, and, as it strikes us, is a very defective symbol of anything good. The Saviour compares the spirit to "living water." The Jordan runs. The sea in which all the children of Israel were baptized was salt, but its very saltness preserved its purity and life. Where so much stress is laid upon quantity, some little attention might be given to the quality of water necessary to scriptural baptism. O course a tank in a church is better than nothing, and to be used if nothing better is at hand; but why resort to such artificial contrivances when one can walk down to a creek—may be a creek as much intended for baptizing as ever Jordan was for the multitudes which went out to John. To be sure our Lord "does not say" whether we shall be baptized "in a river, lake, or artificial pool in a house of worship," though "He commands us to be baptized." He certainly allows us some freedom in the quality of water; and a man had better be baptized in water a year old than not be baptized at all. But does He allow no freedom as to quantity? If His command gives room in one direction will it not in the other?—for we would not place "even a good custom on a par with the positive command of Christ." The good sister has her notions in one direction; let her be gratified, because the Lord has left room in the commandment. Some one else may have them in another direction, and if it does not conflict with the commandment, give him the benefit of the room. We never weigh a positive ordinance against the mere incidents of its administration.

Now, judging from the weakness of a human standpoint, how easily the Master could have saved us all this discussion about water, living or dead, much or little. For He knew what was in man, and saw this endless argument that was in him about baptism, and that sooner or later it would come out. And, speaking after the manner of men, Moses would not have so left things at odds and ends, for he directed every detail—the weight, quality, color, texture, measure and shape of every material or instrument employed in holy uses. There was no margin for either priest or people in his ordinances. It was not merely the finger, but the "right finger" that was to be dipped in the oil, and "he must sprinkle of the oil with his finger seven times." He must "pour the oil in the palm of his left hand," must "put the blood of the sacrifice on the tip of the right ear," the "thumb of the right hand," and the "great toe of his right foot." If a bird was to be killed it was exactly specified that it should be done "in an earthen vessel, over running water." Then "cedar wood," and "scarlet" dye, and "hyssop" were to be taken, all of them, and "a living bird," and "dipped in the blood of the bird that was killed over the running water." As Moses uses the word "baptize" here, we see with what minuteness he guarded the "subject" and "the mode." Had he instituted baptism as a solemn overt expression of faith he would doubtless have told the kind of water, and the quantity and depth to be used, where the minister should take hold of the subject, with which hand, how often he should dip him and how much, which way they should face in going to the water, how far they should go down into it, or how much should be poured upon his head, or sprinkled in his face. There would have been no room in the prescription, and obedience to the letter would have been necessary to valid baptism.

Yet the Master, a greater than Moses, does not tell us how to do anything. We may sit, recline, or kneel at the sacrament, use leavened or unleavened bread, take it with other food or by itself, often or seldom. And the same latitude is allowed His people in every act of worship. When the temple went everything like "mode" went with it.—"Thy commandment is exceeding broad." The ceremonial had ceased because the Spirit had come. And we now agree with the learned editor, that the "good sister" should not lay stress on these non-essentials, but simply be baptized.

PRIESTLY ARROGANCE.

Several weeks since we were called to baptize the grand daughter of one of our oldest members. The family resides in Carrollton. The dear child was in her last sickness, and died a few days afterward. On the day before we were sent for, Mrs. A. saw a man, dressed in the usual garb of a priest, coming in the gate, and making his way up the steps of her house. She asked him what he wanted. He "came to baptize a child that was here dying." "I have not sent for you," said the lady; "and, besides, you know who I am—that I am a Methodist, that I do not believe either in you or your religion." "Do you wish your child to go to hell?" he cried. "I reckon," said she, "I am responsible, and I feel myself fully competent to take care of my own child without your interference, and I want none of your services." But the priest still pushed his way up the steps. At this instant a German who was working in the garden, hearing the discussion, came up and asked what the man wanted. The lady explained that it was a Catholic priest insisting, whether or no, upon coming into her house; whereupon the indignant German made a very significant demonstration with his rake, and hustled out the impudent zealot.

This impertinence is the natural outgrowth of the arrogant conceit of men who assume to possess a derived authority from Christ to officiate as priests. St. Paul says, "By one offering Christ hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." Who is it that now presumes to do that work over again? The priesthood of Christ, St. Paul says, differs from the Levitical especially in this, that it is "without descent," as it is without ancestry, having neither beginning nor end—standing forever alone, like that of Melchizedek. Who dares now claim that his priestly office is by descent from Christ? There is, then, a fundamental untruth in this functional claim; and a man who believes himself a priest has first of all imposed a falsehood upon his own reason and consciousness. After that we should be prepared to see him attempt to impose himself upon others.

A Ritualistic divine of this same type, in Baton Rouge, recently approached a gentleman not of his church and asked him why he did not have his children baptized, and at the same time informed him that no man in the town had any authority to baptize but himself! How impatiently these different sorts of priestly quacks look upon each other, and how sublimely they stand in each other's way! Two bodies can occupy the same space at the same time with ease, when compared with the annihilating incompatibility of these distinct and only true successors apostolic! One can always escape their inflictive arrogance by turning them loose on each other:

"The Romish Tablet says of Romanizing Episcopalians: Their ministers are simply laymen, with no more power to concentrate than the old women who are silly enough to admit the 'imitation of popery,' acted every Sunday by the clerical mountebanks of the High Church. To bow to a piece of bread, to genuflect before the drugs of a wine cup, as is commonly done by the Ritualists, may well be termed 'mummery' and superstition."

We conclude by citing an incident illustrative of the charlatan priests of England:

"A correspondent of the London Advertiser relates the following: An old gentleman residing in St. John's place, Princes road, Nottinghill, met with an accident during Christmas week, and has since then been confined to his bed. He was visited by a Roman Catholic who knew him. The day after his visit (Saturday, January 9) a Romish priest called. The old gentleman wondered to see him. Meeting with a cold reception, the priest left in a few minutes, but came again, accompanied by a second priest. They brought a crucifix with them, and presenting it, asked the old man to kiss it. He refused, saying, 'I want none of those things; all I want is my Saviour; go away; I don't want you.' So said his wife also, who urged them to leave. At last they left, not forgetting to drop a catechism by the way. But little daunted, Monday brings a renewal of tactics—a third priest, who had not called before, came. The old gentleman thought it was the doctor's assistant. The wife said—for her suspicions were aroused—'What do you want?' Entering unbidden, and against their will, the bedroom, he asked for some water. The wife replied, 'I have none; go away.' He replied, 'You're a bad, wicked woman.' Hastening down stairs to a friend who came up with her, imagine her surprise at cries of 'Murder!' issuing from her husband Hastening to the door, what think you, sir? It was locked! Threatening to break it in if not opened, the Romish priest let her in. 'Take him away, take him away,' cried the old man; 'he's wetted my face, and thrown water over me.' The water was soon explained. When the wife went down stairs the priest locked the door, and finding some water in a jug, proceeded to baptize the old man, who responded to the performance with cries of 'Murder, murder!' The wife scolded and threatened, and in the midst of the confusion the faithful priest departed. The poor woman told her story to some neighbors. At first it was thought he would not come again; but some who knew the wily character of these creepers into houses felt that he would come again for extreme unction; and come he did—not this time, however, to find a defenceless woman, for four men entered directly (the doors of these small houses are generally ajar.) The priest, finding himself in a rather queer fix, said he had been sent for, and took his leave."

THE STATE FAIR.

The Third State Fair was opened on April 6th, with prayer by Rev. Dr. Palmer, and an oration by the Hon. Alexander Walker. Mr. W. always speaks good sense in good English. We listened to those periods which depicted the recuperative powers of the South, and the country generally, with that pleasure which every one experiences in the utterances of a hopeful man. And, after all, were we not intended to be the prisoners of hope in many good senses?

The first day was one pretty much of preparation. There was, of course, a fine display of hardware, silverware, stoneware, etc, machines for washing, especially one from Chatawa, machines for grinding, for pumping water, for sawing, planing, hub-boring, etc.—too many to particularize. Among the rest we saw one for milking a cow: an India rubber exhauster, with four tubes for the teats, grasping all at once, set in an iron frame weighing about two pounds. The young man who exhibited it said "that he had yesterday drawn off two gallons of milk in ten seconds from a cow." There were no handbills or engravings accompanying. We only mention it to let people know that relief is at hand. But few specimens of stock were on exhibition. It looks much as if our new system of labor was "unhealthy" for stock. There were not many varieties of agricultural implements on display. We looked with much interest at the cotton goods of Southern manufacture.—They were excellent, and capable of competing in price with the goods of Lowell or Manchester. Among Louisiana inventions, a window fastener and a wire clothes pin were admirable—by Mr. Felix Walker. Among new things the yamoka (dried sweet potato) illustrated how often important inventions lie just over the line of what we know best—the art of making this fine Southern product portable and imperishable. It can be produced upon the poorest lands in great abundance, and in this form made available for the same uses as corn. Indeed we would not begin to state all the uses to which yamoka can be applied besides the feeding of stock. It is used by the Southern housewife as a vegetable, as a relish, as a dessert, as an ingredient in bread, as the basis of yeast, for starching clothes, for thickening soup. Besides making an excellent beer, it is worth much more than chickory for mixing with coffee. It is not going too far to say that in Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi there are vast sections of country where this yamoka, in its natural form, constitutes two-thirds of the people's living. Mr. J. Warner, of Vicksburg, had it on exhibition.

The art department presented a rather meager display of originals. Among specimens of penmanship we noticed especially those from the college of Mr. Blackman, corner of Carondelet and Canal streets, as being of the rarest finish and beauty.

The patent fire extinguisher appears to be an invention of the greatest value and worthy of full trial. The free use of coal oils and various inflammable fluids calls for something in the other direction. This gas apparatus can put out a big fire in a few seconds. Why do not Red river and other steamboats lessen the risks of life by using this patent? There were but few agricultural specimens from Louisiana. The premium for the best bale of hay was awarded to some enterprising Indiana farmer. Though this State abounds in nutritious grasses. There is evidently something wrong when our people go a thousand miles for hay, fifteen hundred for butter, and three thousand for cheese!

The fair was largely a race course. Betting and gambling and horse racing may be a necessary part of an agricultural and mechanics' fair in this State, but we do not believe it; on the contrary, we believe that that kind of interest is fatal to the creation of that higher sort of competition and patronage which the fair was instituted to encourage. The Sabbath was desecrated by a firemen's race on the grounds, and in various other ways was made a day of high frolic. Now in those States where these agricultural expositions are pre-eminently a success, it has not been found necessary that they should be employed to illustrate that great and dangerous vice of Sabbath-breaking; and we do not hesitate to say that in this one item of evil influence this State fair does more damage to the industry, the sobriety and the good order of its citizens by bad example, than it can possibly, by all its other influences, do good. Those countries and people which observe the Sabbath as a formal recognition of the divine government are of all others the most prosperous. The people who decry the Sabbath day and its observance are at heart opposed to all real advancement of the human family in intelligence, morality or religion.

The Crescent says: "The attendance on Sunday could not have been less than fifteen thousand, and yesterday quite as large a crowd visited the fair. In every department the greatest order and completeness now exist. The machines are all in operation, displaying their powers. The patent fire extinguisher yesterday attracted a very large crowd again to see it in operation. On Sunday the firemen's race was the great feature, and no doubt the contest assisted greatly in increasing the receipts at the doors. The race was against time for a prize of $500 offered by the Louisiana Lottery Company.

"FRITZ MEYER," the mysterious personage that sent President Grant that congratulatory telegram from Berlin, on the 4th of March, used to be clerk at the house of Messrs. Schlochauer & Co., dealers in lard and hams. He made money by judicious investments in United States bonds, and occupies now a prominent position among the leading speculators at the Berlin Exchange.

THE Atlantic cable is said to be growing more perfect in its insulation month by month.

THE CATHOLIC DEMONSTRATION.

On Sabbath afternoon last the Catholics of this city made a display of their strength, to commemorate, as one of the city papers has it, "the fiftieth anniversary of the ordination of his holiness, Pope Pius the Ninth," which, properly rendered, means not the fiftieth of his pontificate, but simply that he became a Roman priest fifty years ago. The main point of this sudden admiration at a fifty years' service in the priesthood was to collect money to help pay the expenses of the general council about to convene at Rome—the "twenty-five cent badges to be had at the door," to which the priest alluded so touchingly while in the act of celebrating mass. What Catholics find in the reign of Pio Nino to felicitate themselves on we are at a loss to imagine. Possibly it is that things have turned out so much better than it seemed likely they would when the pope was a fugitive at Gaeta. Not the fact that French bayonets have displaced those of Austria in the vatican; not that Austria has thrown off the concordat, or that Spain has of late dismantled so many monasteries and nunneries, and has forbidden all gatherings of Jesuits in the kingdom; and certainly not because that, but for foreign troops, the Italians, who know him better than all the world beside, would wrest from the pontiff his temporal power in less than sixty days. The only remarkable event of the troubled reign of Pius Ninth is the revivification of the society of the Jesuits. About twenty years ago it began to emerge from the obscurity into which it had been forced by the voice of the Catholic world; since then it has made rapid strides, and now controls the pope, and in fact the church. The dogma of the immaculate conception having been pronounced an article of faith, it now insists on that of "the infallibility of the pope." Catholics generally believe their church to be infallible, but differ as to where that wonderful quality resides. The Jesuits place it not in councils, nor in council and pope, but in the pope himself; as the celebrated thesis of the Jesuit college of Clermont maintained—"Jesus Christ has granted to St. Peter and his successors, as often as they speak in the chair, (ex cathedra,) the same infallibility which he had himself." One quality of the Jesuit is, he never knows when or where to stop. He is after money and power; and as these in their nature can never satiate the thirst they create, he never has enough. He is ravenous as well as rapacious. He is not, in his nature cannot be quiet, and therefore he will force every dogma that he holds upon the Roman Catholic Church. He has peculiar views upon the sacrament, the "chalice of salvation"—that its virtue is intrinsic and immediate, independent wholly of the moral state of the participant. This "holy cup" doctrine he will insist on—though Catholics never taste the "cup" any more than if they expected to be saved by a bloodless sacrifice. Hence the allusion to it by some of the orators of the day.

The quantity of money accumulated by the order in this country and the places of political influence they hold will act powerfully upon Rome in the coming council. Several of the city papers gave highly colored estimates of the "celebration." There was a great crowd of people looking on at the tinsel and drapery of the occasion; the actors themselves were respectable in numbers, and for the most part knew each other a great deal better than they were known. Roman priests have brought the sensational art well nigh to perfection. The mere account of this "demonstration" will greatly compensate the Holy Father for his unpopularity at home.

THE question of priestly celibacy has come up once more in Naples, and the right of priests to marry is now res adjudicata in Italy, outside the States of the Church. The Tribunal of Salerno forbade a young priest to take a wife, whereupon he appealed to the Neapolitan courts, and the result was in his favor. A similar decision was rendered two years ago in Genoa.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

We have received from the publishers, through Mr. G. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street, the following new books:

THE PLANET. A SONG OF THE DISTANT WORLD. By Larry Best. Cambridge: Riverside Press. 1869 16mo, pp. 169.

So long as poetical genius is a high order of insanity, why will plain, sensible persons insist upon attempting poetry? That we wish to know—why? No one is obliged to write his thoughts either in verse or Latin. Why then torture the world with rhyme and rhythm and —"nothing more?"

MY RECOLLECTIONS OF LORD BYRON, and those of Eye-witnesses of his Life. By the Countess Guiccioli. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1869. Small 8vo, pp. 670.

The task which the writer assigns herself is to demonstrate that Lord Byron's "real character was very different to his literary one"—"that he did not personify, but create his heroes." Byron once wrote to Moore, "A man's poetry is a distinct faculty or soul, and has no more to do with the every-day individual than the inspiration of the Pythoness when removed from her tripod." It is this theory which this brilliant biography endeavors to realize—Salvator Rosa, the meekest of men, constantly painted scenes of brigandage and horror. It is an effort to clear the reality from the clouds which have gathered round the person of Lord Byron, and to "earn for his memory a little sympathy by proclaiming the truth." The reader cannot but give so benevolent an advocate a fair hearing. The work is replete with information of the most distinguished men and events of the times of the illustrious poet.

ILLUSTRATED TRAVELS. A Record of Discovery, Geography and Adventure. Edited by H. W. Bates, assistant secretary to the Royal Geographical Society. Cassel, Peter & Galpin, Soudon and New York. 596 Broadway. Part I. Fifty cents.

These enterprising publishers have already deserved much from the public; they now add this fine work of art, a folio periodical with admirable engravings and letter press. This number contains "The Passage of the Canon of the Colorado," "Notes on Spain," "A Journey through the Soudon and Western Abyssinia," "A Bird-eye view of Madagascar."

PETERS' MUSICAL MONTHLY. 198 Broadway. $3 per annum.

Annual Report.—Board of Domestic Missions.

MR. EDITOR: I have received the annual reports of the Boards of Domestic Missions for the year 1868-69, from the following Conferences, viz:

Louisville, Northwest Texas, West Texas, Little Rock, Montgomery, North Georgia, Holston, Pacific, Trinity, Arkansas, North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia—13.

No reports from the following Conferences: Baltimore, Western Virginia, South Georgia, Mobile, Louisiana, Mississippi, Memphis, Tennessee, Kentucky, St. Louis, Missouri, Florida, Texas, East Texas, Columbia, Illinois—16.

The Indian Mission Conference is not expected to report to the Parent Board of Domestic Missions. Of those whose duty it is to report, you see that not quite one-half have yet done so. The time has come for the annual report of the Parent Board, but how can it be made?

J. B. McFERRIN,
Sec. B. D. M.

The treasurers of the following Conferences have made no returns: West Texas, St. Louis, Missouri, Texas, East Texas, Columbia and Mississippi.

AN ARMED MAN DISCOVERED IN A PEDDLER'S PACK AND KILLED.—A short time since, just at dark, a peddler, carrying a large pack, appeared at the door of a wealthy farmer in the town of Green Garden, in this State, and requested the privilege of remaining over night. The farmer being away from home, he was informed by the hired man that he could not stay. He then requested the privilege of leaving his pack until morning, as he was very tired and could not carry it further that night. This was granted, and the pack deposited in one corner of the sitting room. During the evening some of the females of the household had occasion to move it, and taking hold of it discovered that there was something suspicious about the contents. The hired man was called, and upon taking hold of it found that it contained a man. He quickly stepped into an adjoining room and returning with a revolver, motioned the family to stand aside, and at once proceeded to fire three shots into it. A piercing shriek issued from it, and on ripping off the outside covering, a man with a large bowie knife and a revolver clinched in his hands, was found weltering in his blood. Two of the shots had proved fatal. The neighbors were alarmed, but no traces of the peddler who left the precious pack could be found.—Joliet (Illinois) Signal.

BISHOP MARVIN.

The Minna street congregation in this city have enjoyed a rare privilege for several days in attending the ministrations of Bishop Marvin. He filled their pulpit morning and evening on Sunday last, and has preached every night this week up to this date (Wednesday.) The remark of a pious and cultivated lady expresses our own feeling with reference to the bishop's sermons: "I feel that I shall be better and happier during all my life for having heard him preach." Bishop Marvin is a study. He grows on you every time you hear him preach. While he is as far as possible removed from the mere pulpit "sensationalist," who echoes the voice of the mob, and rides successfully upon the changing tides of popular feeling, he is emphatically a preacher who is "up with the times." Thoroughly grounded as he is in the glorious facts and sublime doctrines of Christianity, he is also abreast with the current thought of the age in every department. Consequently, his preaching satisfies equally the simple-hearted and devout believer and the hearer who cares only for the graces of style. But the great charm of his preaching is his spirituality. He is emphatically, as one of our preachers writes, "a Holy Ghost preacher," a man of God. The Lord meant us good in sending him to this coast.

In connection with the morning service in the Minna street church on Sunday a pleasant incident occurred. A considerable expenditure had been made by the congregation in repairing the interior of the church. At the close of the bishop's sermon a collection was taken which resulted in the liquidation of the whole amount. It was done handsomely. Our little band here were never more united. They are rallying to their pastor, Brother Wood, in the spirit of true devotion to Christ; and the consequence is, a new impulse to every department of church activity. This visit of our bishop will be long remembered, and its fruit will be gathered in eternity.—San Francisco Spectator.

OBITUARIES.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

FAYETTE, March 23, 1869.

WHEREAS, We have heard with unfeigned regret of the death of our late sister, DEBORAH T. DAVENPORT, a member of Fayette Female Association; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we bow in submission to this dispensation of Divine Providence, knowing that He does all things right.

Resolved, That this association has lost one of its most faithful and efficient co-laborers in a good cause.

Resolved, That we sincerely sympathize with her husband and children in their bereavement.

Resolved, That the secretary of this association be requested to furnish the family with a copy of these resolutions, and that another copy be forwarded to the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

A. S. ARMSTRONG, President.

WILLIAM JOHNSON, eldest son of R. A. and Mrs. E. J. Sibley, of the Mississippi Conference, was born in Jefferson county, Mississippi, August 25, 1862, and departed this life September 21, 1868, in Amite county, Mississippi.

Willie was truly an interesting child—so much so that the writer has often been constrained to say, "That boy will certainly grow up to be a good and useful man;" and that thought was strengthened by his pious deportment, so remarkable in one so young. He loved to praise Jehovah's name. The sound of Jesus seemed to be sweet to him. He loved to sing the songs of Zion, and, though but an infant in years, had caught the tunes and learned the words of many of them. I have known him to sit for hours and sing, and thus amuse himself, while numbers of other children would play near him.

But, alas! the fondest anticipations concerning him were blasted. Willie was ripening for heaven. He has gone to his bright and happy home. While we deeply sympathize with his bereaved parents and sisters and little brother, we cannot fail to offer comfort by reminding them that their great loss is his eternal gain.

ALEXANDER GIVENS

IN MEMORIAM.

MANSFIELD, LA., March 22, 1869.

In looking over the church roll this morning it becomes my official duty to write opposite the name, MARY W. CAMPBELL, "died March 20, 1869."

This name we have looked at as pastor for five years of our ministry. Sister C. was the wife of Brother A. M. Campbell, who died only a few months since. Brother and Sister C. were our old and personal friends. They are gone. It causes a thrill of sadness to come over us to have to record their death.

We hope to see them again. Sister Campbell was buried in Mansfield cemetery yesterday. We have no particulars out of which to make the usual obituary.

JOHN PIPES.

CATARRH.—Catarrh is a dangerous disease; yet it can be cured by the use of DR. WOLCOTT'S ANNIHILATOR, a different remedy, and unlike PAIN PAINT. Thousands suffer without knowing the nature of this universal complaint. It is an ulceration of the head. Its indications are hawking, spitting, weak or inflamed eyes, soreness of the throat, dryness and heat in the nose, matter running from the head down the throat, ringing or deafness in the ears, loss of smell, memory impaired, dullness and dizziness of the head, pains in the left chest, or side and under the shoulder blades. Indigestion invariably attends Catarrh; a hacking cough and colds are very common. Some have all these symptoms, others only a few. Very little pain attends Catarrh until the Liver and Lungs are attacked in consequence of the stream of pollution running from the head into the stomach. It ends in Consumption.

Bronchitis is the legitimate child of Catarrh. Troches and all palliatives cannot in any case reach the fountain in the head, where the pollinted festering, corrosive matter lies. Snuff or dust of any kind aggravates, and never cures the disease.

A sneeze in nature's emphatic warning, and is produced in consequence of an irritation of the head. Nature speaks out and says No! at every sneeze. She opens the water ducts and floods the nostrils with water to drive out the intruder, just as the ducts of the eye are opened when dust affects that organ. Taking snuff will produce Catarrh. The patient feels dull, heavy, stupid and sleepy; his fears are not aroused until perhaps too late.

He catches cold constantly in the head, sometimes running at the nostrils; the breath sometimes reveals to his neighbors the corruption within; while the patient has often lost the sense of smell. The disease advances cautiously, until pain in the chest, lungs or bowels startles him; he hacks and coughs; has dyspepsia, has liver complaint, wants to take a blood purifier, or cod liver oil. Bosh! The foul ulcer-in-the-head cannot be reached by such nostrums. He becomes nervous, his voice is harsh and unnatural, feels disheartened, memory loses her power, judgment her seat, gloomy forebodings hang overhead; hundreds, yea thousands, seek a rope, a river, a revolver or a razor, and cut the miserable thread of life. The world looks on and wonders that a man surrounded by all the charms and opulence that gold can give, should deliberately choose a quiet grave; others drag on a weary life and sink under long complaints by inches. Many hire some miserable scamp or some big sounding charlatan, having such a string of promotions from Europe that they actually bewilder and dazzle their victim, who at once comes down with the dust, pays $5 for a useless examination, $50 more as part payment for a job cure. Of course the dupe is not silly enough to pay the balance, but thanks God he was not killed outright by the outrageous treatment. The villains gladly write a flaming certificate, and attach thereto the victim's name.

Thousands are restored to health whom doctors call hopeless victims of Consumption. Physicians think the lungs affected, when the liver is the only cause of pain in the majority of cases, and the patient is perfectly curable. No lung complaints can exist unless caused by Catarrh. But the liver is always first attacked. Medicines taken in the stomach are worse than useless. Physicians know nothing, comparatively, of the symptoms of this disease—its cause or cure—and few are bold enough to deny this assertion. Many physicians have Catarrh themselves and do not know it; those of the highest standing buy "Annihilator" to cure it.

For all afflicted with this disgusting complaint, DR. WOLCOTT'S ANNIHILATOR affords a safe, sure and speedy cure, when no bones have come from the head. The nostrils must be rinsed with Annihilator, by snuffing through to the throat, and spit out the nasty corruption instead of swallowing or allowing it to run down the throat, and thus keep the ulcers clean of matter, and they heal permanently. Also for weak Nerves, Chronic Headache and Neuralgia, it is invaluable. Twelve pints should be used for Catarrh, one pint each week.

The Annihilator is sold at fifty cents, and full pints $1 a bottle, with full directions. Pints hold three fifty cent bottles. Buy none except in pure white wrappers.

Six pints of Annihilator for Catarrh or Colds in the Head, or one pint of Pain Paint, double strength, sent free of express charges on receipt of the money; or one gallon of Pain Paint, double strength; for $20. Small bottles sold at all Drug Stores. R. L. WOLCOTT, Inventor and Sole Proprietor, No. 181 Chatham Square, New York. ap10 4tp

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease, Consumption, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure.

To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used, free of charge, with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a SURE CURE FOR CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, etc. The object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable; and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address

THE NEW METHOD FOR THE Piano-Forte, by WILLIAM MASON (the distinguished pianist) and E. S. HOADLY, is a great improvement upon all previous works, and is used and recommended as such by the best teachers. It preserves what is valuable in previous books, and adds many new features. It is the only modern piano-forte instructor published, presenting the technics of modern piano-forte playing. It is easier to teach and learn from, and secures more rapid and thorough progress than any other book. No teacher of the piano-forte can afford to do without its aid. It is the best book for beginners and the best for those who have made progress. Price, $4. To facilitate its examination by teachers, we will, until July 1st, send a single copy to any teacher of the piano-forte by mail, postage paid, for half price, $2.

An edition is published with European fingering, and one with American fingering.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE OLD-FASHIONED BOY.

BY GEORGE COOPER.

O what shall we do with the queerest of boys?
He looks with disdain on the weakness of toys;
While comrades are playing he never will budge,
But he sits in a corner as grim as a judge.

He sighs for a cane, and he wants a high hat;
He pines for a vest, and a watch, and all that;
He prattled of shaving when school days began,
This dear little, odd little, dry little man!

He promises mother a house and some land,
And twenty fine servants, or more, to command;
He keeps his own trunk, on his own little shelf,
And he writes funny letters, and all to himself.

His age—would you think it?—is only just four;
You'd say, by his ways, he was forty or more;
He begs to sit up when the rest go to bed—
Say, what's to be done with this wise little head?

He has a wee sister, who's just come to town;
He came, and he looked at her in her white gown;
Then bade her "good morning"—he made it a point
To show that his nose wasn't put out of joint!

He talks of a gun, and a pistol that shoots;
His feelings are strong on the subject of boots;
They call him "old-fashioned," and so let him stay,
As long as he's good, in the old-fashioned way!

—Little Corporal.

For the Boys.—A certain man who is very rich now was very poor when he was a boy. When asked how he got his riches he said: "My father taught me never to play till my work was finished, and never to spend my money till I had earned it. If I had but an hour's work in the day I must do that the first thing, and in an hour. And after this I was allowed to play, and then I could play with much more pleasure than if I had the thought of an unfinished task before my mind. I early formed the habit of doing everything in time, and it soon became easy to do so. It is to this I owe my prosperity."

FARM AND GARDEN.

STARTING AN APIARY.

BY M. QUINBY.

Some one writes: "Why not tell people who have never kept bees how to start?" This is what I have been doing for the last fifteen years, and now there is a class advanced to "Fourth Reader," and anxiously waiting for the "Fifth." These must be kept along, and at the same time the primary class duly cared for. The first thing for beginners to do is, to procure some reliable work on the natural history and management of the bee, study it thoroughly, and come to an understanding, if possible, of what a swarm of bees will do under all circumstances. There is very much spurious teaching and miserable guess-work in instructions concerning the apiary. The man who writes without experience of his own, giving only what others have said, will copy an error as readily as truth. Or sometimes a person interested in some particular point in a bee hive will so distort the truth that it is hardly to be recognized. When a correct knowledge of the fundamental principles of bee keeping has been acquired by careful study, the next thing is to get a hive or two of bees; if in movable combs, all the better. Obtain them, if possible, of some reliable person, one who knows what he is selling, and at the same time will not take pay for a worthless article. Bees in the box hive are more uncertain than other stock. No man can guarantee the future prosperity of any hive after it passes beyond his control. In purchasing stocks, reject the very heavy, and very light. A large number of bees is more desirable than heavy stores—especially at this season of the year. Locate them on the summer stand at once. If moved afterward, let it be for two or three miles. Moving short distances in the apiary is bad. Place the stands six to ten feet apart. Recent observations in regard to the spread of diseased brood dictates a greater distance between stands than formerly recommended. Provide hives for the swarms, and if you have not already movable combs, with proper study you should by this time be sufficiently well informed to desire them in some form. I will not now recapitulate the advantages of movable combs, nor describe the method of transferring combs, but will say it is a paying investment as soon as the advantages are comprehended. That the tyro may have confidence in his operations among the bees, he may want to keep them from his face and hands—from his face by a bee veil—from his hands by thick woolen or rubber gloves. Any one who expects to do much among bees should learn to handle things "without mittens," until he finds out that a bee sting is not "killing." After preparing a veil according to the directions referred to, punch the pith out of a piece of elder or other pithy wood, ten inches long, or bore with a slender gimlet through a suitable stick of wood, and insert this tube in the wire cloth opposite the mouth, by which it is to be held when it is desirable to use smoke to pacify the bees. Hard wood, nearly rotten, sawed or split into pieces an inch square, makes the cheapest smoke. Have it thoroughly dry, ignite one end, and blow the smoke in any desired direction on any demonstrations of anger. American Agriculturist.

Fire Proof Wash for Buildings.—A correspondent of the Western Rural says: "Slake a half bushel of stone lime in a large tub or barrel, with boiling water; when slaked and cold, pass it through a fine wire sieve, and it will be as fine as flour. To six quarts of this lime and one quart of coarse salt add a gallon of water, then boil the mixture, and skim it well. To five gallons of this liquid add one pound of alum, half as much copperas, three fourths pound of potash, and four quarts white sand, well sifted. Color with anything you choose, and apply with a brush. This is far more durable than paint, and much cheaper. It will even stop leaks in roofs, and is perfectly 'fire-proof.' When used upon brick, it renders them water proof, and prevents their crumbling. Please try this, and let us hear the results."

Chloroforming of Bees.—Chloroforming is now extensively used in England, and without injurious results, to stupefy bees so as to remove the honey. For this purpose a table is set about ten feet from the hive, and covered with a cloth. Some chloroform (about a quarter or a sixth of an ounce) is then poured into a shallow dish and covered with a wire gauze, to prevent the bees from falling into it. The hive is then removed from its stand and set over the chloroform. In about twenty minutes all the bees will have fallen down on the table in a state of stupefaction, not one remaining in the comb. After removing the comb, the hive and the bees are restored to their place, the latter soon recovering, without suffering the slightest inconvenience.

Time for Planting Strawberries.—Some advocate setting strawberry plants in the fall; others in June and July; and still others, and we believe the larger number, think the last of April or 1st of May the better time. After many years' experience, we have no hesitation in saying that the best time of the whole year is the spring. The frequent and genial showers of that season are favorable to the growth of the plants; and they soon get hold so as to be able to withstand the heat of summer and the frosts of winter. When set in summer, unless frequently watered, the plants soon dry up and die. If set in the fall they are very likely to be thrown out and destroyed the following winter.—Experimental Farm Journal.

French Toast.—Beat three eggs very light; stir with them one pint of milk; slice some bread; dip into the egg and milk; fry a nice brown; sprinkle powdered sugar and cinnamon on top.

SCIENTIFIC.

POPULARIZING ART.

CHROMO LITHOGRAPHY.

In this way was accumulated the capital upon which Mr. Prang's present business of chromo-lithography was founded. He began with those extremely pretty cards which enliven young ladies' albums. He invited a lady of Boston, noted for her skill and taste in painting flowers and fruit, to paint for him twelve wild flowers from nature, each on a card of the usual album size. These he lithographed in colors, and followed them with sets of mosses, butterflies, birds, roses, autumn leaves, fruit, dogs, landscapes, and many others. All of these were painted from nature, and reproduced with great fidelity. Some of them are exceedingly popular with the possessors of albums; one set of twelve beautiful roses having already reached a sale of fifty thousand sets. And so, by successive steps, this able man arrived at the production of full chromo-lithographs. His first attempts were failures. A set of four Cuban scenes, the first of the Prang chromos, which were sold together in a paper portfolio, did not strike the public favorably. There was nothing to hang up in the parlor. Mr. Prang next tried a pair of landscapes, which also failed to lure five-dollar bills from the passers by. His third attempt was Tait's group of chickens, and this was an immediate, great and permanent success. This encouraged him to persevere, until now his list of full chromos embraces forty subjects, and he has been able to build the first factory that was ever erected for a lithographic business in any part of the world. With seventy men and forty presses he is only just able to supply the demand. It would now be hard to find a house or school room in which there is not somewhere a bit of brilliancy executed at this establishment.

In order to value aright the advantage it is to the public to be able to buy a truly beautiful little picture, correct in drawing and natural in color, for the price of a pair of slippers, it is necessary for us to know what pictures these chromos displace. It is not true that they lessen the demand for excellent original works. The ostentation of the rich, in this kind of luxury, ministers to the pleasure of the rest of mankind; just as the pride of a class pays for the opera, which the poor man can enjoy for next to nothing in the gallery. The reason why I, in this city of New York, own a fine park of eight hundred acres, is because sundry rich men felt the need of a more convenient place for displaying their equipages on fine afternoons. We may rely upon it that the persons who now buy expensive works will continue so to do, and that these chromos will enhance, rather than diminish, the value of originals; because the possession of an original will confer more distinction when every one has copies; and it is distinction which the foolish part of our race desires. Nor is it a slight advantage to an artist to have in his works two kinds of property instead of one; the power to sell them, and the power to sell the privilege of multiplying copies of them. Neither art, literature, nor science will have fair play in this world until one success, strictly first-rate, will confer upon the producer of the work a competent estate; or, in other words, until every one who acquires property in a production of art, literature or science, will pay a just compensation to the producer. Before many years have passed we shall see artists mounted on horseback riding in my Central Park, who would have gone on foot all their days, but for the reproduction of their works by chromo-lithography. Copyright will pay for the oats.

But there is one class of picture dealers and picture makers whom this beautiful process of chromo-lithography will seriously injure. I mean those who make and sell the landscapes which are offered at the New York ferries for $5 a pair, gilt frames and all; also those who sell at auction "splendid oil paintings collected in Italy by a well known connoisseur recently deceased."—Some of these fine works, I am informed by one who has done them (a German artist whom poverty and ignorance of the English language compelled for a few months to misuse his brush in this way,) are executed a dozen at a time, and are paid for by the dozen. Twelve canvases are set up in a large garret-room. The painter, with paint pot in one hand and brush in the other, goes his rounds; first, putting in all the skies; next, perhaps, all the grass; then, his trees; and, finally, dots in a few cows, sheep, children and ladies. A good hand can execute a very superior dozen in a week, for which, in these dear times, he may get as much as $20. Before the war the established price for a good article of an oil painting was $12 a dozen, and find your own paint.

The principal manufactory in the United States of this description of ware is in a certain broad and noisy street of a city that need not be named. It is styled by its proprietor "The American Art Gallery for the Encouragement of Art and Young Artists;" but, among the unhappy young men who earn a sorry livelihood by plying the brush there in, the establishment is called "The Slaughter House," and its master "The Butcher." This man of blood was once an auctioneer in a street that has little in common with the illustrious orator and statesman whose name it bears, wherein persons in needy circumstances can either sell superfluous or buy indispensable garments. It is now his boast that he is the greatest "patron of the fine arts in America," and his ways of patronizing art are various. He will have pictures painted by a young artist whose necessities are urgent, which he will keep as part of his stock in trade. In a room partitioned off from "The American Art Gallery" just mentioned, he has a number of "hands" multiplying copies of these pictures as fast as the brush can dab on the paint. These "hands," to whom he pays weekly wages which average less than the wages of laborers, acquire by incessant practice a dexterity in making the copies that is truly remarkable. Besides these he has outdoor hands, who, like journeymen tailors, take their work home and do it by the piece. The pictures are offered for sale in the gallery; but as they accumulate rapidly, the proprietor holds an auction every few weeks, either of the old masters or of great living artists. Those auctions take place by turns, in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis and San Francisco. The Californians, my German artist says, are liberal patrons of the "American Art Gallery for the Encouragement of Art and Young Artists," the sales in San Francisco being both frequent and profitable. Even to Australia, on the other side of the globe, consignments of these precious works are sent from the gallery in the nameless city. The pictures offered at the auction sales are frequently advertised and declared to be "original oil paintings, by native artists, from the American Gallery for the Encouragement of Art and Young Artists." The frame is, of course, an item of the first importance in this kind of picture. The butcher manufactures his own frames, and he takes care that they shall be splendid. This is probably the secret of his success; for what is there dearer to the heart of man and woman than a gorgeous parlor? This amiable passion burns in the breast of every true American, and it is this which creates the demand for splendid gilt frames with something in them that looks a little like a picture.

I will copy, for the reader's more complete information, a few sentences from a letter lying before me, which describes some of the modes in which art is encouraged at this American gallery:

"The proprietor never fails to impress upon a young artist who goes to him to sell pictures or get employment the advantages to be derived from studying with him, and his generosity in founding a place for their encouragement and assistance, and in furnishing them canvas, a nice studio, easels and other things, and then paying them while they are improving themselves. They are required to furnish their own paints; but as they all use house paint, and buy it in pound pots, that does not form a very heavy item of expense. When I first went to him, in 1863, I preferred working by the piece, and generally made $15 a week. * * * I received for a picture twenty-six inches by thirty-six, $4; for one about twelve by sixteen, $1 50. For Cole's Voyages of Life, size twenty-four by thirty (one set was sent with every collection,) we received $2. The next time I went to him he would not employ me except by the week, and gave me $12, which he said was more than he was in the habit of paying. When working by the piece, the most money was to be made on what he calls his crystal medallions—small ovals pasted on the under side of convex glasses, for which we were paid from seventy five cents to a dollar and a quarter, according to size. It is a trick of this old fellow, when a person brings in a picture for sale, to tell him to leave it, and when he has time he will look at it, and pay whatever it is worth. If the owner does so, and the picture is of any value, he sends it immediately to the paint room, and has one or more copies made of it. When the owner calls he will offer him $2 or $3 for it; and if he is not satisfied he can take it away, for the copies answer the purpose just as well as the original."

These are the pictures which chromos are displacing. Such are the dealers whom their popularity is likely to drive to more honest or less hurtful employments. When I hear critics lamenting the prevalence of these truly beautiful products of chemistry and art, and declaring that they corrupt the taste of the people, I think of the American Gallery for the Encouragement of Art and Young Artists, and smile serene.

It is possible to overvalue the educating influence even of excellent pictures. In strengthening or informing the intellect they are of no more use than mothers' kisses or the smiling loveliness of a flower garden; and, truly, a man may spend his life among pictures, and fill books with eloquent discourse about them, and yet remain a poor, short-sighted reactionist, filled with insolent contempt of his species, whom he does his best to mislead. But we can say of good pictures that they are a source of innocent and refined pleasure; and that is enough to justify their existence. I think, therefore, that this new art, which enables me and other laborers to buy for $5 all that we can enjoy of a thousand-dollar picture, is one that deserves the encouragement it is receiving; and I cannot but regard it as a kind of national blessing, that the business of supplying us with these productions has fallen to the lot of so honest, painstaking and tasteful a person as Louis Prang.—Atlantic Monthly.

Rochefort says, in No. 39 of La Lanterne, that he has no more faithful subscriber and reader than the Emperor Napoleon. In the same number, in noticing that the Empress Eugenie has the mumps, he is malicious enough to advise her majesty to cure the disease by touching Queen Isabella. The Parisians know what Rochefort means.

A successful book is often a greater event than a successful campaign.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their Reputation is not of Mushroom growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better Draft, and will Draw well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of Filley's Hot Air Flue to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every Charter Oak guaranteed, or the money refunded.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of
16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of $10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of 25 00
which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments.

DARBY'S

PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

A CHALLENGE TO THE WORLD!

We challenge the world to produce a better or a stronger recommendation for any article, for any purpose, than the following:

NOVEMBER 1, 1868.

We very cheerfully unite our testimony in favor of the great merits of the valuable disinfectant manufactured by Professor Darby, and known as DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID. From the reputation of Professor Darby as a scientific gentleman, from our own knowledge of this preparation, and from the general esteem in which it is held wherever known, we have no hesitation in recommending it as one of the most valuable household articles with which we are acquainted.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT

Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION. — TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

CHURCH OF THE STRANGERS,

New York.—Visitors to the city of New York are informed that they will find divine service every Sunday, in the large Chapel of the University, Washington Square, at ten and a half A. M. and at seven and a half P. M. The evening service in summer is at eight o'clock. Waverley Place, immediately north of the New York Hotel, out of Broadway, runs west to Washington Square, on the east side of which is the University. The entrance to the church is the main door of the University. University Place cars run from the door of the Fifth Avenue Hotel to the door of the church. From the St. Nicholas and Metropolitan, take the cars corner of Broadway and Broome, leave at Waverley Place, and go west one block. At the Astor House take University Place cars, leave at Waverley Place, and go west one block. Strangers will find cordial welcome and polite attention.

The pastor is Rev. Dr. DEEMS, who devotes himself to the spiritual interests of strangers. If nay be sick, let them address him a note by mail, as "Pastor of the Church of the Strangers, New York," and it will reach him. The ladies who compose the "Society of the Sisters of the Stranger" procure medical, legal and spiritual help for strangers in perplexity, distress or sickness. Address "Sisters of the Stranger," care Rev. Dr. Deems, New York.

If you are coming to New York soon, cut this out and paste it in your memorandum book.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

T. K. PRICE, Esq., Vendor of "Price's Patent Texas Tonic," or Vegetable Medicine:

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate use and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best recipe that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetables Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therfore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefitted.

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

We remain yours truly,

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT

Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term.....$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term..... 30 00
Contingent fee, per term..... 2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Bonners.

SIGN OF THE BIG TEA POT.

I would respectfully announce to my friends and the public generally, both in the city and country, that after an association of over twenty years, under the name and style of Austin & Goodwyn, formerly corner of Customhouse and Front Levee, I have permanently located as above, and shall continue my old business of

MANUFACTURING TINWARE,

in all its branches, as heretofore, and in addition will endeavor to keep at all times a full and complete stock of the best, as well as the latest and most approved

COOKING STOVES.

The names of a few will suffice to give an idea of the great variety constantly kept on hand:

The Charter Oak,	The Good Samaritan,
The Revenue,	The Torchlight,
The American,	The Brilliant,
The Magnolia,	The Fashion,
The True Kentuckian,	The Farmer,
The Maid of Orleans,	The Southern States,
The Mutual Friend,	The Sunny South,

and many others, too numerous to mention, all of which will be sold at

THE LOWEST MARKET PRICES,

for cash or approved city paper.

Being ever grateful for the liberal patronage bestowed and confidence reposed in me during my former copartnership, I would most earnestly solicit a continuance of the same, and shall pledge myself to do my utmost to maintain the reputation of the old house.

The next session begins on the 21st day of SEPTEMBER, 1868, and closes on the 24th of June, 1869.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with a Faculty of twelve professors, teachers and matrons.

This is a Female College of the first rank; one of the most flourishing in the South; young ladies here from nearly all sections of Virginia, and various Southern States. Method of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Health and comfort of pupils unsurpassed. Those from the Gulf States, especially, have greatly improved in health. No social disquietude. The population of this great Valley is nearly all white. This institution is an educational home for the daughters of the South.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited only a moderate degree of animation since our last issue. The various departments of the wholesale trade, including dry goods, boots and shoes, hardware, etc., have been pretty busily engaged in supplying country merchants with spring goods, but, with the exception of our leading staple, outside of this demand there has been only a limited movement. Sugar has been in better request, partly for shipment, but without showing much activity, and molasses has sold to a moderate amount, considering the scant supply, at about previous rates. We notice a better demand for both flour and corn, and more liberal sales, at an advance of 25c. per barrel for the former, but at easier prices for the latter. Most other articles of Western produce have been dull and drooping.

The weather has been clear and pleasant, and decidedly more favorable to the planting interest. The general accounts from the country indicate that all the crops are behindhand, and that in some localities there is a serious deficiency of labor, while in others the planters have a moderate supply. The prospect is far from being encouraging for as much increase in the yield of cotton as some sanguine writers have anticipated.

The river has risen three inches since our last report, and is now two feet below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the 9th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	7405
Lake	5
Mobile	284
Florida	96
Texas	526
Total	8316

On Saturday the movement commenced under the influence of favorable Liverpool dispatches, and although it was checked by factors being more stringent in their pretensions, yet the business comprised 2,000 bales at full prices, without any quotable improvement. On Monday the foreign news being still more encouraging, buyers came forward with a better spirit but operations were again checked by factors claiming an advance of fully ¼c., which buyers refused to pay. At a later hour, however, parties came together more freely, and 4,650 bales changed hands, at an average advance of ⅛c., part of the business being at previous rates, and part at an improvement of ¼c. Good ordinary being in request, was the most favorably affected, and closed at 26⅛ to 26¾c., the latter for strict classification, while low middling could hardly be quoted above 27¼c., and the figures for middling were raised to 28¼c. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry and factors quite stringent in their pretensions; but owing to a decline in exchange, and buyers being unable to go on unless at previous rates, many of them claiming some concessions, the former were compelled to meet the demand more freely, and 4,800 bales changed hands at figures showing very little variation from Monday's rates. Toward the close, however, prices derived renewed firmness from the 5 P. M. Liverpool telegram.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 11,450 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 736,529 bales, against 557,702 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 144,561 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is a decrease of 4,368 bales to France, of 291,713 to Great Britain, and of 24,053 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	25 to 25¼
Good ordinary	26¼ to 26½
Low middling	27¼ to 27½
Middling	28¼ to —
Strict middling	28½ to 28¾

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The New York Daily News prints an extra, with this dispatch:

"Boston, April 17.—Orders were received yesterday from the Navy Department directing all war vessels at Portsmouth and Charlestown navy yards to get ready for immediate active service."

The American brig Mary Lowell has been declared a legal prize by the Spanish authorities.

New York, April 15.—Senor Valienta, agent of the Cuban revolutionists, has issued an address to the American people. After reciting the grievances long borne by the Cubans under the civil and military tyranny of Spain, and their previous disastrous attempts to throw off the yoke, he says the revolution has steadily grown, promising to realize all the hopes of the patriots.

The Cuban liberating army is steadily increasing, and now comprises forty two thousand men.—Their lines run in a westerly direction to Sagnaila Grande, without reaching the seaboard either north or south, or the necessary armament to hold it, but the territory pointed out is nearly two-thirds of Cuba, in which slavery has been abolished. In the remainder of the island no uprising has occurred for want of arms.

The address concludes:

"Cuba is fairly started on her way to national independence. Her sons fighting for it these six months, without violation of your neutrality laws, are entitled to the earnest sympathy of your people, and more so, as their struggle involves the American principle that no European power shall control any country upon this hemisphere."

Washington, April 19.—There is a good deal of truth in current rumors about the fitting out of iron clad vessels by our national authorities. Orders have been given to overhaul and refit for sea service several of these vessels, although there are no orders assigning them to any particular destination. The only object in view in preparing them for service seems to be to have them ready in case an emergency shall arise in which they may be needed.

It is now well known in certain confidential quarters that a special agent has been sent to Cuba by the President to investigate the situation there, and report results. He left several days ago.

The President, it is stated, has notified Mr. Motley that he will expect him to be in London, ready to assume the duties of his office, by the first of June at the farthest.

Mr. Johnson will probably travel some time in Europe before his return.—Times.

But few confirmations were made by the Senate to-day, and only those where there was no contest.

The President to-day stated to several Senators that so far as he was concerned he did not desire the attendance of the Senate longer than to-morrow. That were there any nominations not acted upon, or any vacancies, he could fill them in the absence of the Senate.

It is understood he has quite a number of appointments which he intends to make soon after the adjournment of Congress, but which he does not wish to send to the Senate in their present state of mind, lest they might not get a favorable consideration. He hopes that when they meet in December they will be in a more agreeable mood.

Washington, April 21.—Further details of the rain storm North and West represent it as unprecedented for extent and destructiveness.

Boutwell forbids banks exchanging securities in the Treasury, partly on the ground that the securities withdrawn are always more valuable than those substituted.

It is understood that Motley's instructions are being prepared by Evarts and Cushing, and embody the points foreshadowed in Sumner's speech.

The siege and horse mail contracts throughout the United States have been awarded. There were one hundred and eighty thousand bids. Compensation ranges higher this year than ever before.

The Senate has ratified the treaty with France protecting the trade marks of the respective citizens.

Forney headed the Pennsylvania party, which proposes an extensive Southern tour, in a visit to the President to-day. Replying to the delegation, Grant is reported to have said he was very happy to hear they intended to make the trip. He hoped it would be productive of the best results. He thought that nothing would do more to promote prosperity and reconstruct the South than white loyal emigration. He had no doubt that Northern capital and Northern men would readily avail themselves of the inducements offered South as soon as they could be assured of protection and cordial welcome.

Sumner informed Fish to-day that the Committee on Foreign Relations had agreed to report adversely on the nominations of Pile for Brazil and Carlisle for Stockholm. Fish replied that it was determined to make no more nominations, but under the circumstances the President would, probably, make new nominations for those positions.

During the debate on the resolution for the appointment of employees in the departments according to State population, Sawyer complained that Democratic Kentucky had received more appointments than the six Republican Southern States, and bitterly commented on a remark made to him by a member of the cabinet that he must remember that the white Republican vote of his State was very small, and he must not ask too much. Northern Senators said it must not be forgotten that the South formerly had twice her share of patronage. Much ill feeling was manifested.

Memphis, April 21.—Reports from northern and middle Tennessee state that an immense amount of damage was caused by the storm on Monday night. Fences, barns, and, in many instances, houses were blown down and trees uprooted. In the central part of the State the storm was accompanied by hail, and seemed to be more violent than in the northern or western parts.

An accident similar to the one on the Nashville and Northwestern Railroad yesterday morning is reported as having occurred on the Mobile and Ohio road yesterday, by which the engineer, fireman and five passengers were killed. Nothing definite is known, however.

The high water washed away fully half a mile in length of the Nashville and Northwestern road, at Big Black river, the track is under water a mile and a half. That river continues to rise rapidly.

London, April 22.—The following are comments of the city journals on the Cuban question:

The Telegraph says England is unbiased, but English interests will be best served by Spain retaining authority over Cuba.

It would not be England's business to interfere against Cuban independence, but her good offices might be useful in averting a quarrel between the United States and Spain.

The seizure of the Mary Lowell is designated as a mad act, implicating England, Spain's best friend, in a quarrel with the United States.

The Telegraph argues that the Cubans can never willingly attach themselves to American rule.

The Owl says Grant has gone mad on Cuba, and thinks that England and France will fight if the United States attempts to wrest Cuba from Spain.

The Owl adds that Grant longs for a foreign war, that the prevailing feeling among American officials is one of hatred toward England, and in a less degree toward France.

The Owl adds that a yacht leaves in a day or two for Cuba to ascertain the exact position of affairs, and declares its belief that a heavy storm is brewing.

New York, April 22—Noon.—Money steady at 7 per cent.; sterling, 108½; gold, 134⅜.

SPAIN.

Affairs in Spain have a very muddled aspect. The Cortes makes little progress in its work of reorganizing the government. The controversies between the parties, and the debates which have occurred in the Cortes have been of the most violent character. The Radical or Republican party appears to embrace an unusual amount of talent, zeal and boldness. They oppose with bitterness every movement of the ministry. The fierce and dashing Prim, who always talks as if he had a powerful and overwhelming force at command to enforce his propositions with the bayonet and cannon; the blunt and laconic Topete, representing the navy, the chief agent in accomplishing the revolution; the grave, sedate and diplomatic Serrano—have their whole energies and resolution severely taxed to meet and repel the assaults of the ever-vigilant Republicans. On several questions they have been fairly beaten, or, at least, foiled. The elevation of Montpensier to the vacant throne, which is certainly a leading idea of the ministry, meets with an opposition which includes the Moderes, the Nationals and the Republicans, whose combined forces are too strong for the provisional government. Even the concession in favor of Ferdinand, the ex King of Portugal, did not deceive or discourage the anti-Montpensier party. Its ranks thus far appear to be unbroken, and the throne of Spain is still on the market. A French prince will never be satisfactory to the proud Spaniards.

The attempt to force one on the throne would rekindle the fires of revolution and discord, and cause them to flame higher than ever in a country which has been drenched with the blood of contending factions. Montpensier being out of the ring, we see no chance for any other candidate. Finally, however, we have little doubt that the issue will be reduced to two parties, the Prince of Asturias, under a Liberal regency, and the Republican party, demanding a president and directory, and an abolition of the connection of Church and State, with freedom of religion, of the press, and of speech. What will be the result of such a conflict among so peculiar a people as the Spaniards defies our powers of prescience and calculation.—New Orleans Times.

Butler's Style of Restoration.

His bill for the restoration of the disfranchised Southern people to their political rights and privileges is characteristic of the man. Under the provisions of the bill every Southerner, who seeks relief from his political disabilities, must first prefer a petition to that end before the District Court of the United States in the State where he lived during the war. He must confess, to the minutest particular, "in what manner he had given aid, comfort, or assistance to the rebellion, either voluntary or involuntary."

He must further declare "that he believes, and confesses, such acts were wrong, rebellious and wicked," and that the State and Confederate governments established by and during the rebellion "were, in his belief," treasonable, and "ought not to have been sustained," and, finally, he must say "that he truly repents of all acts done by him in maintenance thereof, and heartily desires to atone for any part he took in the same by hereafter acting and conducting himself as a true and loyal citizen of the United States."

But the measure of self-degradation does not end here. The applicant has next to affirm that his loyalty has been perfect and immaculate, since the 1st of June, 1865; that subsequent to that date he has done no hostile act, or committed any crime against the laws of the United States, or of any individual State; "that he has not endeavored, by force or fraud, to interfere with the civil rights of any citizen of the United States," or to prevent the freedom of election or of speech; but that "he has behaved himself as a man of good moral character," etc.

Having thus abjectly humbled himself with his face to the ground, and his mouth in the dust, he has then to undergo another ordeal. His petition, setting forth all these things, is to be published in a newspaper, so that his utter ignominy may be made known to all his former friends and acquaintances. When this penitential act has been accomplished, the next thing required of him is that he shall get two Union men to stand his sponsors, and who shall declare "that they verily believe each and every fact stated in the petition to be true." But the process of purgation is not yet complete. After all these steps have been taken, any citizen, whether black or white, may appear on the day appointed for the return of the notice, and if he object "that anything set forth in said petition is not true in fact, thereupon an issue shall be framed by the court," and the case set for trial.

Such is the bill brought forward by this man Butler, ostensibly for the purpose of relieving from their political disabilities large numbers of Southerners, who are now disfranchised. Its true title should be "a bill to render the Southern people infamous forever."—Baltimore Gazette.

The Commercial Convention, which is to meet at Memphis on the 18th of May, has mapped out for itself a good deal of important work. One of the chief objects of the convention, as we learn from a circular now before us, is to secure the cordial and active co-operation of the people of the Ohio and Mississippi valleys in the effort to build up a direct trade with Europe through South Atlantic seaports, not in a spirit of opposition to North Atlantic cities, but in that of a generous rivalry which will cement all portions of the Union through the kindly influences of mutual interests and a general prosperity. The other objects of the convention are to discuss the propriety of constructing a railroad from the Mississippi river to the Pacific over a route unobstructed at all seasons of the year; to point out a proper plan for leveeing the Mississippi, and to compare views on the subject of immigration.

The following suggestions accompany the circular:

"That the Governor of each State and Territory will appoint a delegation, not exceeding ten for the State at large, and one for each Congressional district.

"That each city or town will appoint but two delegates for a population under five thousand, and one for each additional ten thousand.

"That each incorporated railroad, steamboat, manufacturing or mining company will appoint but two delegates.

"That each Chamber of Commerce or Board of Trade will appoint but one delegate for every one hundred members or fractional hundred.

"Every one appointed or specially invited will please notify the committee if he can attend and will bring with him some form of credential as a delegate."

Though we have not much faith in commercial conventions, yet we think it important that New Orleans and Louisiana shall be represented in this Memphis deliberative assembly.—Times.

JACKSON RAILROAD ELECTION.

The annual election for directors of the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad took place on Monday.

A very large vote of the private stock was cast, with the following result:

FOR LOUISIANA DIRECTORS.

G. T. Beauregard	38,044
W. A. Gordon	38,008
Wm. Henderson	38,044
Williamson Smith	38,024
Cornelius Fellowes	38,024
C. T. Leeds	38,044
J. J. Warren	38,044
Henry Florance	38,018
A. Schriebor	38,044
John Armstrong	38,044
E. J. Forstall	38,044
J. C. Denis	38,018

FOR MISSISSIPPI DIRECTORS.

Wirt Adams	38,034
L. F. Montgomery	38,044
L. E. Honston	27,738
Joshua Green	38 044
B L Hatch	38,044
J. B. Hemphill	38,044
Scattering	270

The votes offered by the agents of the Governor of this State and of the State of Mississippi were received but not counted. They are held as follows:

By the city of New Orleans	80,000
State of Louisiana	64 000
State of Mississippi	18,000
Total	162,000

It is well known that these votes, if permitted to be counted, will not alter the result. They are known to stand as follows:

FOR THE OPPOSITION.

Louisiana	64 000
Mississippi	18,000
	82,000

FOR THE PRESENT BOARD.

City of New Orleans	80,000

The private stock was unanimous for the present board. The reception and counting of all the votes would therefore have only reduced their majority from 38,000 to 36,000 votes. The individual stockholders would, in both cases, decide the election.—Picayune.

Senator Sprague's Apothegms.—"Great interests must war on smaller ones in order to sustain themselves."

"All consolidations work serious injury to the independent character of the laboring people."

"I will not have a whole community subject to the bad condition of one man's stomach."

"Remember there is nothing so cowardly as five hundred thousand dollars—except a million."

There are some Yankee notions that we do like, and wish our Southern people would adopt them. We see it stated that the New England Methodists project an educational university that is to rival Harvard. Toward its establishment one million dollars have been subscribed, and the Massachusetts Legislature is to be petitioned for a charter.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Romanism and Republicanism.

A "Father" Hecker, of New York, editor of the Catholic World, once a Protestant, then a Free Thinker, then a Romanist, has been lecturing in our principal cities. Milwaukie and Chicago have been favored with his presence. He has been lecturing on Romanism and its relations to reason and Republicanism.

Leaving the theological aspect of the subject out of consideration, we will briefly examine the claims of Romanism, as set forth by Mr. Hecker, in a political point of view.

He asserts, without fear of contradiction, that Romanism is the best religion for the Republic. He predicts that by the beginning of the next century Protestantism will become extinct and Catholicism will be the prominent faith.

We have before us a pamphlet consisting of six papers from the American Churchman, entitled "Is Romanism the best Religion for the Republic?"

Rev. Dr. Thompson, editor of the Churchman and professor of Church History, in Nasbotah Seminary, is the writer.

This pamphlet is a collation of facts bearing upon the assumptions of Father Hecker. When Dr. Thompson is familiar with a subject, he is a pungent, nervous, convincing writer. He is not familiar with the history of Methodism. He seems like another man when trying to treat of it. He is then weak, diffuse, inconclusive.

This pamphlet is just what is needed to be sent broadcast among the people. The logic of its arguments, because the logic of facts, is unanswerable.

In the light of these facts, let us examine Mr. Hecker's position. The question whether Romanism is the best religion for a country is not now, for the first time, to be tried. Rome has had a fixed policy of its relation to civil governments for eight hundred years. It has been the dominant religion in many lands. What do the facts say?

Roman Catholic countries are not the best governed countries in the world. The late Queen of Spain was the especial pet of the present pope. She was styled her "Most Catholic Majesty." The pope sent her "the golden rose" as the "most faithful among the sovereigns of Europe." Yet this woman is one of the most abandoned of her sex.

From what class comes the most of our criminals? From the statistics given by Bishop Lynch himself, the Roman bishop of Toronto, it appears that the Irish furnish more than half the criminals in New York. In Montreal they are one-fourth of the population, and furnish nearly one half of the criminals. In Toronto one-tenth of the entire flock of Bishop Lynch are under arrest, and one-fourth of the population, being Romanists, furnish nearly two-thirds of all the jail and prison tenants.

The ranks of prostitutes are most largely recruited from Irish Catholic girls, in all our principal cities, according to the Boston Pilot, a Roman Catholic paper.

Thus Father Hecker's members of the best and only church furnish more vice, drunkenness, and dissoluteness in general, than all other classes combined.

The papal States, the headquarters of Romanism, ought to be models of good government. Is it the case? Bishops, beggars and brigands abound equally in them. They are full of nunneries and monasteries. In 1852, according to the census of Rome, there were in that city twenty-nine bishops, one thousand two hundred and eighty priests, two thousand and ninety-two monks, one thousand six hundred and ninety-eight nuns, the population being about one hundred and sixty thousand.

Sir John Bowring was sent by Lord Palmerston, a few years ago, to make inquiries about the papal States. He reported, officially to Parliament. In a population of three millions at most, about three times the population of Wisconsin, there were five hundred and eighty persons confined for murder alone.

In that same year the number of births was four thousand three hundred and seventy-three. The Foundling hospitals in ten years received thirty one thousand six hundred and eighty-nine children, an average of three thousand one hundred and sixty-eight a year. That is, three fourths of all the children born in Rome are sent to Foundling hospitals. Horrible beyond expression! All this, too, beneath the very shadow of St. Peter's.

How is it with Mexico, which has been owned, body and bones, by the pope? It has been ruled by a priesthood, whose shameless profligacy would make the revelers at a heathen saturnalia blush. We know the misrule, the treachery of which these priests were guilty. Shall we give up our Protestant United States for Roman Catholic Mexico?

Compare any Protestant with a Roman Catholic land—Scotland with Italy, Sweden with Spain.

See the difference in the same country; the Protestant cantons of Switzerland compare with Roman Catholic cantons. Industry, prosperity in the former; laziness, squalor in the latter. Compare the Protestant portions of Ireland with the Romish portions. It is the difference between a garden and a bog, a palace and a pig sty.

Let us take another view. The fundamental principle of a Republic is the separation of Church and State.

Now, what does Rome say? The present pope, in his appendix to his "Encyclical," or pastoral letter, of December 8, 1864, names the errors which he condemns as "the madness of our times," is this, the fifty-fifth error:

"The church must be separated from the State, and the State from the church."

An infallible pope condemns as an error, as a madness, the very life of republicanism.

How is it with liberty of conscience? another necessity of republicanism.

The pope condemns, as another madness, this proposition, that—

"In the present day it is no longer necessary that the Catholic religion shall be held as the only religion of the State, to the exclusion of all other modes of worship."

Another madness, the fifteenth error condemned, is this:

"Every man is free to embrace and profess the religion he shall believe true, guided by the light of reason."

Again he condemns another error, viz: "It has been wisely provided in some countries called Catholic, that strangers coming into them shall enjoy the free exercise of their own worship."

Again he states that "they preach the liberty of perdition," who hesitate to affirm that the power of the laity is "compelled to inflict the final penalties of the Catholic religion."

He elsewhere condemns liberty of the press and of speech.

Thus, separation of Church and State, liberty of conscience and freedom of speech and of the press—the true elements of a true Republic—are condemned as madness.

But would Roman Catholics be absolved from allegiance to the pope? Here are some of the propositions of the so-called "Dictate of Pope Gregory VII:"

"Dictate XII—It is lawful for him (the pope) to depose emperors."

"Dictate XXVII.—He may release subjects from allegiance to bad princes."

"Dictate XXVIII.—His judgment can be reviewed by no man."

Another pope, Boniface VIII., a century after, announces in a bull:

"In the church there are two swords, the spiritual and the temporal; each sword, spiritual and material, is in the power of the church. One sword must be under the other. The civil power must be subject to the ecclesiastical. Finally we declare, pronounce, and decide that every human creature must be, on peril of salvation, subject to the pope of Rome."

These principles have been accepted as infallible, and acted upon. Romanists are bound to observe them everywhere. Thus does Romanism attack and destroy all individual and national independence. Americans, is Romanism the best religion for the Republic?—Index.

A Protestant Newspaper in Spain. Under the auspices of the American and Foreign Christian Union, a weekly Protestant newspaper, giving utterance to the facts and truths of the Gospel, is now established in Seville. In that city Mr. Alonzo is addressing audiences of ten to fifteen hundred, using for the purpose Roman Catholic churches which have been for the time abandoned.

The Spanish government has granted permission for the introduction into Spain of Protestant books printed in a foreign language. Methodist.

Many men pass fifty or sixty years in the world, and when they are just going out of it they bethink themselves, and step back, as it were, to do something which they had all the while forgotten, viz: The main business for which they came into the world, to repent of their sins, and reform their lives and make their peace with God, and in time to prepare for eternity.—Tillotson.

PLEA FOR A BURNED CHURCH.*

O! ye, in your ceil'd houses, grandly dwelling,
Think of this house of God that lieth waste;
Let not its desolation be repelling,
But to its help be urging you to haste.
O! let its moldering ruins, ghastly, glaring,
Like corpses uninterred on battle field—
That, pleading, seem to heaven as upward staring—
Plead for this ruin'd church, unroof'd, unceil'd.

Plead for it, to your hearts and to your purses,
By all its past and all its present, plead;
While each charr'd fragment of it but rehearses
Its wrongs—such wrongs as urge its plea, indeed.
Which of its works savor'd of sin or treason?
O! what but good had this church ever done?
How could the sternest justice find a reason
That it be punished, which had sinned none?

Sinned! O, not in labors most abounding,
For rich and poor, for bond as well as free;
While from its desk the Gospel trumpet sounding,
That saved, through Christ, the universe may be.
Now to your Saviour be your love expressing
By giving of your basket and your store
To build this church, that it may prove a blessing
Unto His cause on earth, forevermore.

THE BAPTISM OF THE SPIRIT.

The first point to be secured in the accomplishment of this desirable result is to produce in the minds of Christians a deep conviction that it is their privilege to receive this baptism. And here, I fear, we shall encounter a formidable difficulty. A sort of semi-infidelity obtains, with many who were once pillars in the church of God. This has grown, in part at least, out of the peculiar condition of our country. Many of our people believed in the justness of the Southern cause, and prayed earnestly for its success. But their faith and prayers were not answered, at least as we desired. The cause failed. Poverty and untold of calamities have followed. With the failure of the cause many have also failed in their faith in the super-ruling providence of God.

I can see no good reason in the condition of the country to weaken any one's faith.

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants His footsteps in the sea
And rides upon the storm."

O, ye people of the living God, "cast not away your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward." Give up your country, if need be; give up your property; let go your all of earthly good; but never, no, never, let go your hold on God's faithfulness. "All things work together for good to them that love God, and who are the called according to His purpose." "If God clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, will He not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?"

The times require a strong faith, I know; but where we have one apparent cause to weaken, have we not a thousand real ones to strengthen our faith? Let us, then, turn our thoughts away from the stormy past and troublous present, and direct them to the fact that the baptism of the spirit, in all its essential qualities, is still the property of the church, and that the full realization of this promise in his experience is the privilege of every individual Christian. Hear the word of God upon this subject: "It shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh."—Joel. "The promise is unto you and your children."—Acts. "I will baptize you with the Holy Ghost not many days hence."—Christ. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the spirit of God dwelleth in you?"—"In whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise." "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, after whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, that He would grant you according to the riches of His glory, to be strengthened with might by His spirit in the inner man."—Paul. Here are Scriptures from the prophets, from Christ, from the apostles, all bearing upon the same subject, and establishing the fact that the promise of the Spirit, the grand promise of the Gospel dispensation, is the property of the church now. Who then, with a spark of faith remaining, can avoid the conviction that it is not only his privilege, but his indispensable duty, at once to seek and obtain this blessed baptism?

How may it be secured? If by observing the external rites of religion, water baptism and the communion, then all Protestants would have it. If by believing the dogmas and complying with the ceremonies of Rome, all Roman Catholics would have it. But not one, nor all of these rites combined, will ever bring down the Holy Ghost upon a single member of the church. "The kingdom of God is not meat, nor drink, but righteousness, joy and peace in the Holy Ghost." The moral corruption of the human soul lies too deep to be reached by external and human manipulations. It requires the power of God, exerted in the baptism of the spirit, to make a man a Christian and keep him one. And this baptism is secured on certain conditions taught us in the word of God.

After the ascension of our Lord the disciples returned to Jerusalem from Mount Olivet, and went into an upper room, where abode several of the apostles. "And they all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication with the women, and Mary, the mother of Jesus, and with His brethren," waiting for the promise of the Father, the baptism of the spirit. "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come they were all with one accord in one place." Now these disciples of Christ undoubtedly pursued the proper course to obtain this baptism. First, they were all interested, deeply interested. None were indifferent, none careless.—Each felt his responsibility and went to work. And they were in harmony, of one accord, agreed. The desires and wishes and affections of every one centered in one object; and every heart uttered the one prayer, and that was for the baptism of the spirit. What power there is in united effort! And they "continued in prayer and supplication"—continued, held on, persevered, besieged the throne of grace with all the power of prayer, and not only prayed, but supplicated, entreated, urged, and continued urging their request. Thus they waited for the promise of the Father till the Holy Ghost came down like a rushing, mighty wind, that is in great abundance, and they were all filled with the tongue of fire. "This is the way; walk ye in it."

Now if a Christian, if all Christians, if the whole church, would pursue the same course, wait the fulfillment of the promise in the same way, we would soon have the same blessed baptism, and a church filled with the same divine influence. And the church, spread, as it is, through every land, thus filled with God, the Spirit, would soon set the world on fire of love, and the true Gospel millenium would be at hand. The fullness of the Gentiles would be come in, and "so all Israel would be saved."

O Lord, hasten thy kingdom and the restitution of all things!

G. HAWKINS.

PICKENS COUNTY, Alabama.

IN a recent sermon on earthquakes, Dr. Cumming, of London, declared that the most splendid commentary on the book of Revelation was the daily newspaper, because whatever the prophetic word said should happen, the newspapers recorded every morning as having happened.

THE American Bible Society, New York, printed and published last year one million two hundred thousand copies of the Bible.

A WARNING.

"But know thou that for all these things God shall bring thee into judgment."

For seeking happiness in sin, and "leaving to your own understanding, and following the devices of your own heart, God shall bring you into judgment." God has said His "ways are ways of pleasantness;" He has said, "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom," "Blessed is the man whose delight is in the law of the Lord;" that there is no peace to the wicked. But you have not believed God. You have determined you will be happy in your own way in utter disregard of all that God has taught and commanded, and have refused to walk in His ways, or to seek comfort in His love. You have followed your heart, while God from heaven has warned you that the whole head is sick, and the whole heart is faint; that it is "deceitful and desperately wicked," that "out of it proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witnesses and blasphemies." Yet you have refused to heed, and have followed your evil heart, and loved the path of sin more than the path of peace. This hour, in despite of counsel and warning, you are hurrying with heedless steps the downward way to death.

God has counseled you to believe His word, to trust His promises, to walk by faith. But you have answered, "No, I will walk by sight—by the light of reason's ray. I will be the man of my counsel." For this God will bring you into judgment. Yes, faithless, prayerless, impenitent sinner, God shall bring you into judgment for all life's mercies abused, time's opportunities slighted and despised, for the Spirit's wooings, the Gospel's calls, and the example of the good. He shall bring you into judgment for your father's prayers, your mother's tears, and, more than all, for His Son's unparalleled and dying love. Know thou, then, for all these things God shall bring you into judgment. Remember this when you resist the spirit of His grace, when you proudly refuse offered mercy, when you scorn His Son and trample under foot His hallowed blood, when you choke down the swelling tears and harden your heart. Remember this when you take the name of God in vain, when you indulge your passions in shameful sin, when you go where your mother would weep to know, and your pure sister blush to hear—aye, in every scene of sin, public or concealed, remember God the Almighty shall bring you into judgment. Your respectable family and honorable associations cannot help you. Your learning, your money, your unbelief, nor your cold indifference will not avail. Your cry for rocks and mountains to fall upon you, and hide you from the wrath of God—no, your horror and wails of agony and fear—shall not help you. You shall call and God will not answer. You shall then seek, but shall not find; for when your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction as a whirlwind, and when distress and anguish cometh upon you, God will laugh at your calamity, and mock when your fear cometh, for His mercy will be clean gone forever, and He shall swear in His wrath that you shall never enter into His rest. Seeing it is a righteous thing in God to recompense tribulation and anguish upon every soul that doeth evil, when He shall be revealed from His mighty angels in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of His power. Then all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him, for our God is a consuming fire.

Oh, impenitent, ungrateful sinner, what will become of you when the thunder trump of judgment shall wake all the dead?—when the forest shall be ashes, the ocean shall be vapor, and the air shall be flame?—when the mountains shall melt like wax, when the great globe shall be girdled with a stormy ocean of devouring fire, and the earth fly like a parchment scroll from the dreadful face of God?—when all the angels from heaven, file over file, and rank over rank, are ranged about the chariot throne with its wheels of flame, and driving on its pathway of cloud?—when all the damned from hell, and all the risen dead of all the lands, and all the ages, stand in countless millions before the tremendous throne?—when the Almighty Son of God, arrayed in all the dread attributes of the eternal Jehovah, shall open the dread book of doom, and pronounce immortal destinies of heavenly rapture or infernal woe? What will you do when the All seeing eye shall flash with startling glare into the deep recesses of thy soul, and read to an assembled universe all thy past and all thy heart? What will you do when the despised and insulted Redeemer's brow grows dark with excessive wrath, and His breath like a storm of fire shall sweep you from His presence, deep into the shades of eternal despair. Oh, it will be vain in that desperate hour to wish that you had never been born. Your deathless nature exists, and it cannot die. You must exist on, and forever. By persistent sin, by proud rejection of Christ, you have made God your enemy, hell your endless home, and the lost your companions in everlasting sorrow. Of all your gains and vain ambitions you can carry nothing with you but your bitter memories of the ill-spent past, and the scorpion lash of a self-accusing conscience, and the dreadful knowledge of all that you have insanely thrown away, and lost forever—"glory, honor, immortality and eternal life"—and the crushing remembrance, when donned of what you are, an eternal enemy of goodness and of God, an embodiment of woe—a living, conscious, endless hell. Turn ye. Why will you die?

The Education of Young Ministers.

MR. EDITOR: There are some things that may be done, others there are that ought to be done, and still others that must be done; and among those that must be done, stands forth as most prominent the education of the young men of the church, whom God has called to the work of the ministry. Come, generous reader, don't stop here, but read on to the end, and be sure to carry out your first impression, and do it at once. Some of the fathers of the church made it a rule scrupulously to carry out first impressions—a capital rule when it does not carry us beyond the precincts of God's word. In this case follow this rule, and I am content.

It has always been the policy of the great Head of the Church to supply the ranks of the ministry chiefly from the lower walks of society, and frequently in extreme poverty. Now when the Almighty calls a man to the work of the ministry He calls the church to supply the means to qualify him for usefulness in his high and holy calling. It is not my view, nor do I suppose it to be the policy of the church, to confine these young men for a series of years in this course of preparation. But many of them have not even the rudiments of a common English education, nor have they the means of obtaining, within themselves, even that much; and the day has gone by when our people will be satisfied with the ministrations of a man who cannot speak his own native tongue with any degree of propriety, correctness and force. In some cases, where the individual shows an unusual capacity for science and books, allow him to linger a longer time about the halls of instruction; but ordinarily, as soon as the foundation is laid and he learns well how to study, thrust him out and let him study and preach at the same time.

Now, brethren of the church, is this right? I tell you the church has a rich legacy in these young men, and let us see to it that it is not wasted. They must not be allowed to go home. They can't pay their own way, and the burden is too heavy on the people of this place. Come, brethren, friends, all, send up your contributions—$20, $10, $5, yea even $1 will help out. It shall be faithfully applied, and accounted for at the next Conference. Send to me at this place, or to Brother Richardson.

Now, right now, brother, while the generous feeling is warm with you, sit right down and send the amount, and send your prayers with it upon the dear young men, the future hope of the church, and the blessings of that God who loveth a cheerful giver be upon you and the objects of your generosity. Let me appeal especially to the mothers and daughters of Israel. I know they have warm hearts, and many of them love the church. One large-hearted lady from Louisiana, I see from the ADVOCATE, has already responded nobly. God bless her "in her basket and in her store," as well as with "all spiritual benedictions" and grace.

Come, brethren, to our help. Some of us have taken these young men upon faith; and I still believe there is piety and self-sacrifice enough in the descendants of Wesley and Asbury to hush such a loud and heavenly call as this. The country our fathers left us is in ruins; but, thank God, we have a church yet, and will have as long as we have a pure and efficient ministry.

FIFTY WAYS OF COOKING MEATS,

NUMBER THREE.

LAMB.—To Choose Lamb.—Lamb should be eaten very fresh. In the fore quarter, the vein in the neck, being any other color than blue, betrays it to be stale. In the hind quarter, try the kidney with your nose; the faintness of its smell will prove it to be stale.

28. To Roast Lamb.—The fore and hind quarters are suitable roasting pieces. Sprinkle on salt and pepper, and if not quite fat, rub on butter, and put a little in the dripping pan, together with some water, and baste the lamb frequently while baking. These pieces are good stuffed like a fillet of veal.

29. Shoulder of Lamb Grilled.—The shoulder of lamb is good roasted plain, but better cooked in the following manner: Score it in checkers about an inch long, rub over a little butter, the yolk of an egg; then roll it in pounded bread crumbs, sprinkle on salt and pepper, and sweet herbs, and bake until a light brown, with a little water in the baking pan. This can be served with a simple gravy; but one made as follows is nicer: Take half a pint of the drippings of the lamb, mix it with the same quantity of water, set it where it will boil, thicken with flour and water, add a large spoonful of tomato catsup, the juice and grated rind of a lemon, salt and pepper to the taste.

30. Loin, Neck and Breast of Lamb. A loin of lamb will be roasted in about an hour and a quarter; a neck in an hour; and a breast in three quarters of an hour. Do not forget to salt and flour these joints about twenty minutes before they are done.

31. Fried Lamb.—Separate the leg from the loin, cut off the shank, divide the loin in chops, dredge and fry them a nice brown, lay the leg in the middle of the dish, and put the chops around, pour over parsley and butter, and garnish with fried parsley.

MUTTON.—To Choose Mutton.—The best is of a fine grain, a bright color, the fat firm and [illegible]. It is better for being full g[illegible]

32. Roast Mutton.—[illegible] is the best part to roast [illegible] ider and leg are good [illegible] he latter, make a dressing of bread soaked soft, season with salt and pepper, add a couple of eggs, a large spoonful of melted butter, one spoonful of flour; cut gashes in the leg, and fill them with the dressing; put it in a baking pan, with a little butter and a pint of water. Rub on pepper and salt, and, if you like, cloves and allspice. Put water in the pan, and baste frequently. Allow a quarter of an hour to each pound of mutton that you have to roast; if overcooked, it will be tough.

33. Shoulder of Mutton Roasted.—Must be well roasted and sent to table with the skin a nice brown; it is served with onion sauce. This is the plainest fashion, and, for small families, the best

34. Haunch, Saddle and Leg of Mutton.—These gain in favor by hanging some time. Should be slowly roasted, well basted, dredged with flour, and served with onion sauce or currant jelly.

35. Leg of Mutton Boiled.—Should be first soaked for an hour and a half in salt water—not too salt, however—then wiped, and boiled in a floured cloth; the time necessary for boiling will depend upon the weight; two hours or two hours and a half should be about the time; it should be served with turnips mashed, potatoes, greens and caper sauce.

36. Mutton Chops Broiled.—Cut from the best end of the loin, trim them nicely, removing fat or skin, leaving only enough of the former to make them palatable; let the fire be very clear before placing the chops on the gridiron; turn them frequently, taking care that the fork is not put into the lean part of the chop; season them with pepper and salt; spread a little fresh butter over each chop when nearly done, and send them to table upon very hot plates.

37. Chops as Beefsteaks.—Cut thick from a leg of mutton, and rub each steak with a shallot; broil over a quick fire; rub your dish with shallot; when on the dish, pepper and salt it; send to table hot.

38. Irish Stew.—Cut a neck of mutton in pieces, blanch [illegible] chops in water, take and put [illegible] into another stewpan with [illegible] onions cut in slices; put to it a little stock; let it boil a quarter of an hour; have ready some potatoes pared, put them into the stewpan with the mutton, with salt and pepper; as some like the potatoes whole and some mashed, to thicken the stew, you must boil them accordingly; dish the meat round, and the vegetables in the middle.—Arthur's Home Magazine.

SIR WALTER RALEIGH.

The most eminent and interesting prisoner ever lodged in the Tower is Raleigh; eminent by his personal genius, interesting from his political fortune. Raleigh has in higher degree than any other captive who fills the Tower with story, the distinction that he was not the prisoner of his country, but the prisoner of Spain.

Many years ago I noted in the State papers evidence, then unknown, that a very great part of the second and long imprisonment of the founder of Virginia was spent in the Bloody tower and the adjoining Garden house, writing at this grated window, working in the little garden on which it opened, pacing the terrace on this wall, which was afterwards famous as Raleigh's Walk. Hither came to him the wits and poets, the scholars and inventers of his time—Jonson and Burrell, Hariott and Pett—to crack light jokes, to discuss rabbinical lore, to sound the depths of philosophy, to map out Virginia, to study the ship-builder's art. In the Garden house he distilled essences and spirits, compounded his great cordial, discovered a method, afterwards lost, of turning salt water into sweet, received the visits of Prince Henry, wrote his political tracts, invented the modern warship, and wrote his History of the World.

Many other vaults and cells in the Tower assume the glory of having been Raleigh's home; the hole in Little Ease, the recess in the crypt, Martin tower, Beauchamp tower; but these assumptions find no warrant in actual fact. Raleigh lay in the Tower four several times, and in his third and fourth imprisonments his room was changed; but we know his exact resting-place in each of these trials. During his first restraint he was lodged in the Brick tower, the residence of his cousin, Sir George (afterwards Lord) Carew, master of the ordnance. During his second restraint he was lodged in the Bloody tower. During his third restraint he was lodged in the same; until, on account of failing health, he was suffered to change that cell for the Garden house in which Latimer had lain. In his fourth restraint, after the Guiana voyage, he was lodged in the Wardrobe tower, until the last change of all occurred, when he was transferred to the topmost room of his first prison, the Brick tower.

He was never lodged in the dark hole of the crypt, now shown and figured as Raleigh's cell.

In a pleasant room of Durham house, in the Strand—a room overhanging a lovely garden, with the river, the old bridge, the towers of Lambeth palace, and the flags of Paris garden and the Globe in view—three men may have often met and smoked a pipe in the days of good Queen Bess, who are dear to all readers of English blood; because, in the first place, they were the highest types of our race in genius and in daring; in the second place, because the work of their hands has shaped the whole after-life of their countrymen in every sphere of enterprise and thought.

That splendid Durham house, in which the nine days' queen had been married to Gailford Dudley, and which had afterwards been the town house of Elizabeth, belonged to Sir Walter Raleigh, by whom it was held on lease from the queen. Raleigh, a friend of William Shakspeare and the players, was also a friend of Francis Bacon and the philosophers. Raleigh is said to have founded the Mermaid Club; and it is certain that he numbered friends among the poets and players. The proofs of his having known Shakspeare, though indirect, are strong. Of his long intercourse with Bacon every one is aware.

Thus it requires no effort of the fancy to picture these three men as lounging in a window of Durham house, puffing the new Indian weed from silver bowls, discussing the highest themes in poetry and science, while gazing on the flowerbeds and the river, the darting barges of dame and cavalier, and the distant pavilions of Paris garden and the Globe.

With the exception of his two friends, Raleigh has had more books written about him than any other man of the English race. Every new generation begins with unslackening curiosity about this proud and brilliant man—curiosity as to what he was, what he said, and what he wrought. Men who are yet young have seen a dozen new lives of Raleigh; and men who are now old may live to see many more.

This public interest in Raleigh seems, at first thought, strange.—The man was not lovable; he had some bad qualities; his career was apparently a failure. Yet Raleigh is one of the undoubted heroes of English story; one of the men about whom authors love to write and the public delight to read.

The reasons for what seems at first sight a contradiction are not far to seek.

In the first place, every one feels that Raleigh, when all has been said against him, was a man—a proud man, if you like; nay, a cruel and selfish man, if you insist;—yet a vital force in the city, in the court, in the camp; not a form, a phrase, a convention, as the masses of men are and must be in every age and in every place. You may like an original force in your midst, or you may dislike it; most men distrust a power which disturbs them with a sense of the untried and the unknown; but you cannot help being drawn towards such a force for either love or hate. Raleigh was a man; and what a man! Even among a race of giants to what a size he grew! Other men, when we come to them, may be great in parts; this man was great in all parts. From the highest masters in special arts he had nothing to learn. Spenser could not teach him song. Hatton was danced by him out of court and fortune.—Burghley feared his subtlety and craft. Mayerne took lessons from him in physic. Jonson consulted him on dramatic art. Effingham praised him as a sailor. Bacon thought it an honor to contend with him for the prize of eloquence.—Hawkins, Frobisher, all the adventurous seamen of his generation, looked upon him as their master. Bilson retired from a tussle with him on theology, admitting his defeat. Pett learned from Raleigh how to build ships. No man of his generation offered to compete with him as a writer of English prose. Even in the trifle of personal beauty few were his equals. Poet, student, soldier, sailor, courtier, orator, historian, statesman—in each and every sphere he seemed to have a special power and a separate life.

In the second place, Raleigh is still a power among us; a power in the Old World and in the New World; hardly less visible in England than in America, where the beautiful capital of a chivalrous nation bears his name. Raleigh's public life was spent in raising England to her true rank; and the mode by which he sought to raise her was by making her the mother of free States.

In Raleigh's time the leading influence on this planet lay in Spain; an influence which was hostile to England in every way; hostile to her religion, hostile to her commerce, hostile to her liberty, hostile to her law. Spain continued to assume that the English were a God-abandoned people, whom it was her sacred duty to chastise and save. She sent her spies and bravos into London. She landed her troops in Connaught. By her gold and by her craft she raised up enemies against our peace beyond the Scottish border and in the Low Country camps. Even when her policy was that of peace, she drove our ships from the ocean and cast our sailors into prison. She closed the Levant against our merchants, and forbade all intercourse of England with America. Every foe of this country found in her a friend. She sharpened the dirks of Babington and his crew. She stirred up Rome against us. When she could not fight, she never ceased to plot. If the Irish kernes rebelled, she flung her troops into Cork; regular troops, who fought under her banner; and only disavowed them when they failed. In brief, at all times, in all places, our fathers had to count with Spain as their most deadly foe.

Against that country Raleigh set his teeth. It was Spain which he braved in Guiana; which he humiliated at Cadiz; which he outwitted in Virginia. Toward Spain the most splendid Englishman ever born nursed the hostile passion which Hannibal fed against Rome. In the end, a great country wears out a great man; and, after fighting Spain for forty years, fighting her with the sword and with the pen, Raleigh was murdered, at the command of Philip the Third, in Palace Yard.

Raleigh's life divides itself into three main periods: the first period ending with his seduction of Bessie Throgmorton, the queen's maid of honor; the second period with his arrest by Cecil, on a charge of conspiring to raise Arabella Stuart to the throne; the third period with his execution in Palace Yard, on the demand of his great enemy, Philip the Third. Sunshine floods the first; tempests beat the second; gloom enwraps the third.

Raleigh's first detention in the tower, which can scarcely be called an imprisonment, was caused by his affair with Bessie Throgmorton, one of the stars of Queen Elizabeth's court. Bessie was lovely, witty, and an orphan. All the gay lordlings of the court admired her. Tall, slender, fair, with light blue eyes and golden hair, she was a perfect contrast to Raleigh, whose dark and saturnine beauty half repelled while it strangely allured the beholder's eye. Bessie listened to his words, as shepherdesses listen to their swains in those pastoral tales which were only too much in vogue.

> As at noon Dulcina rested
> In her sweet and shady bower,
> Came a shepherd, * * *

the like of whom has seldom tempted woman to her sorrow. He was no lout with bill and crook; but a shining youth, bright with the sun and tawny with the sea. Spenser has pictured him in glowing verse. "The Shepherd of the Ocean" he was right; but the softer arts were all to him like the sciences of the sea. He knew them all; and most, as Spenser writes, he knew the seducing phrase of love.

> Full sweetly tempered is that muse of his,
> That can empierce a prince's mighty heart.

Dulcina listened to his lays, and whispering tongues soon bore the news of her deception to the queen.

Elizabeth was deeply hurt; not, as the triflers say, because Raleigh deserted her side for that of a younger beauty; but because he sullied her court and wronged his own manhood by scandalous amour. To Bessie, her orphan maid of honor, the queen was like a mother; and friends at court sent word to Raleigh, who was then at Chatham, making ready for a voyage, that he would have to stay at home and wed a wife. The lover laughed over words which he received as an idle threat. "Marry," he cried, "there is none on the face of the earth that I will be fastened unto." But the queen was not a woman to forgive him such a deed; and when he slipt away to sea in the Garland, hoping to fall in with the Spanish silver fleet, and come home crowned with glory and rich with spoil, she sent Sir Martin Frobisher in her swift pinnace, the Disdain, to fetch him back.

Given in charge to his cousin, Sir George Carew, master of the ordnance, he lived in the spacious Brick tower, Carew's official residence, until he married the maid of honor, when he left his prison with the young and lovely woman, who was at once his brightest glory and his darkest shame. Much of the grace of life departed from Raleigh when Bessie was deceived. Repentance came; but came too late. The queen appeared to forgive him; but the outrage lived in her heart; and Raleigh never became for her again the hero of his spotless prime.

On the coming in of James the First, Raleigh returned to his imprisonment in a new cause; to suffer in which was worthy of even his fame and genius. He came back to the Tower a sacrifice for his native land.

The new king had a policy of his own, of which amity with Spain was the corner stone.

James had the strange disease, so rare in Scottish men, of physical cowardice. He was not tender of heart; he was, in fact, so fond of seeing pain that he more than once came down to the Tower, that he might feast his eyes on broken joints and quivering flesh; yet his life was spent in one long spasm of personal fear. He fainted at the sight of a drawn sword; he trembled at the roar of saluting guns; the name of a renowned warrior filled him with superstitious dread. On this base weakness the adversaries of his country worked. They filled his mind with pictures of secret poisoners and assassins; so that his dreams became hot with visions of Jesuits and conspirators; and his soul was cowed by phantoms, taking the shape of agile and unscrupulous men, who from the vantage-ground of a distant court could either drop arsenic into his wine, or sharpen against him a bravo's knife.

James found by private question that he could have peace with Philip the Third on one condition: ruin of the man who had sworn undying enmity to Spain, and to all that Spain then represented in the world. As a first step toward peace, he was told that Raleigh must be thrown into the Tower.

In his second restraint, Raleigh was not lodged in a kinsman's house, but in the more courtly and ominous Bloody tower; under the immediate eyes of Sir John Peyton, the lieutenant; a man whose zeal in the new king's service was quickened by hints that in case of Raleigh's ruin he might receive, as his share of the spoil, the governorship of Jersey, one of the many high offices which his prisoner held. How Peyton was to earn this guerdon we can only guess; but more than one great councillor was known to have said that the king's coming in would be Raleigh's doom.

The confinement was close and the treatment mean. Cecil told the world that Raleigh's lodgings in the Tower were as pleasant as the rooms in Durham house; but the lieutenant's weekly bills tell a different tale. He had only two small chambers; only two servants were allowed him; and the charge for diet, coals and candles, for his household, was four pounds a week.

The pretext for his seizure was a parley which he had held with Lord Cobham on affairs of state. Cobham was a disappointed man. Most of his kinsfolk were in office. His brother-in-law, Sir Robert Cecil, was the first Secretary of State; his father-in-law, Effinghan, Lord Admiral; his wife's cousin, Lord Henry Howard, a Privy Councillor; yet his own great talents were thrust aside. An idea struck him that he could bring himself into notice by espousing the claim of Arabella Stuart to the throne; in favor of which claim he felt sure that he could count on Spain. This project he broached to Raleigh, who laughed in his face as a dreamer; and that light laugh sent Raleigh to the Tower—as an accomplice in the Arabella plot!—Her Majesty's Tower, by W. H. Dixon.

PROTEST OF EPISCOPALIANS AGAINST RITUALISTS.

A number of presbyters and laymen of Illinois have published a formal protest against the teachings of Bishop Whitehouse and Drs. Dix and DeKoven. If our readers will take the trouble to examine it, they will see how much reason these brethren have for their action, and how necessary were those efforts for the formation of an Evangelical and Protestant association which drew upon them from the bishop the charges of sedition and schism. It is a bold step, and we think, from the character of the men engaged, will be followed up to some definite result. This is infinitely better than wasting our strength upon side issues and points of doubtful legality. Here we stand upon the broad platform of Scripture and the Reformation, and have the truth so clearly with us that even legal defeat will be triumph before the church and the world.—Ed. Witness.

PROTEST.

Be it known unto all men, That we, the undersigned, presbyters of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States of America, moved, as we humbly trust, by a becoming sense of duty to God, to the church whose ministers we are, and to our own souls; and solemnly remembering the vows we took in ordination to "be ready, with all faithful diligence, to banish and drive away from the church all erroneous and strange doctrines contrary to God's word, and to use both public and private monitions, as need shall require and occasion shall be given"—we, the presbyters aforesaid, satisfied from evidence, to us incontestable, that great peril now exists to the purity of the faith and worship, not only of the Mother Church of England, from which some of us derive our orders, but also of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and that a scheme exists to undermine the scriptural foundation of these churches, on the specious plea of a "revived Catholicity," do now, and hereby, in this formal instrument, enter our solemn protest against all teachings, innovations, machinations and devices that are employed for unprotestantizing, this Protestant Episcopal Church, corrupting her doctrines, debasing her worship, and overturning her long-established rites, ceremonies and usages.

And the undersigned presbyters, together with the laymen, whose names are hereunto appended, as assenting and confirming, do furthermore solemnly protest against the doctrines and teachings of the following passages, extracted from the printed and published writings of their respective authors—men prominent, by position, in the Protestant Episcopal Church:

"In the regeneration by holy baptism, in the spiritual and ineffable presence of our Lord in the Eucharist, with the mystical nutriment through His body and blood, as well as in the definition of the sacraments generally, there is virtual concurrence in the accepted standards of the historical churches, Eastern, Western," (or Romaa) "and Anglicaa."

"In addition to this substantial agreement in orders, creeds, and sacraments, the rite of confirmation," etc. Bishop Whitehouse's Convention Address, 1868, page 29.

"Besides the two sacraments of the highest order, there are other inferior rites, having the same nature, but not necessary in the same way; among these are confirmation, matrimony and holy orders, in all of which they are an outward sign, and an inward grace."

"1. The sign: called Sacrament nm, bread and wine; simple elements of daily subsistence. These remain in their proper substance after consecration, retaining their proper nature, and yet they undergo a mystical change, whereby they become the forms under which Christ is present.

"2. The thing signified: called Res, the body and blood of Christ; His glorified humanity, which, after a manner inexplicable and without a parallel in the range of our knowledge, becomes present after consecration, not bodily or physically, according to the laws of material or carnal bodies, but supra-locally, hyper-physically, and spiritually, in some way believed in by the church, but known only to God."—Dr. Dix's Manual of Confirmation, pp. 41-53.

"Ques. How do we become partakers of the nature of the second Adam?"

"Ans. By our new birth in holy baptism."

"Ques. What then begins the Christian life?"

"Ans. Holy baptism."

"Ques. What is the second great step in the Christian life?"

"Ans. Confirmation."

"Ques. What is the third?"

"Ans. The holy communion."

"Ques. What is the fourth?"

"Ans. Death."

"Ques. What two titles has the church given the blessed Virgin Mary?"

"Ans. She is called the Bringer forth of God and the Ever Virgin Mary."

"Ques. How do we receive forgiveness for sin after baptism?"

"Ans. By absolution and the holy communion."

"Ques. Into how many divisions is everlasting life divided?"

"Ans. Into that which is begun here on earth, in the church and through the sacrament," etc.—Dr. DeKoven's Catechism on Confirmation, pp. 72-82.

We solemnly declare that, in our judgment, the preceding extracts are not in harmony with the doctrines and principles of the Protestant Episcopal Church, but directly the reverse, in many particulars, of the teachings of her articles, liturgy, and homilies—the very reverse of the principles in defense of which many of the bishops and other dignitaries of our Mother Church endured the fires of martyrdom. And we furthermore declare it our fixed purpose and intention, under God, to do what in us lies toward the freeing of this, our beloved church, from the domination and perpetuation of such sentiments and doctrines. And, for the integrity of our present action, we appeal to the great Searcher of Hearts, and, for our vindication, to the candid judgment of all earnest, thinking Christian men, and more especially to that of the members of our own Protestant Episcopal communion.

The Manner of Gladstone's Great Speech on the Disestablishment of the Irish Church.—The ease of Mr. Gladstone's manner, the persuasive tones of his voice, and the perpetual promise it gives of something yet better which is to come, prevented the audience from evincing signs of fatigue. The only person I saw asleep was Sir F. Coleridge, the solicitor general, himself one of the most eloquent of barristers, and who has only brief intervals for rest. The industry of Mr. Gladstone, and his masterly handling of figures, have been demonstrated in his budgets, but were never perhaps so remarkably shown as in this intricate manner. Before him on the table were a few slips of paper, and these were his only notes. As he approached his peroration, the members who lined the side galleries rose gradually to their feet and looked down at him. Some stood with folded arms and lips apart. Some were moved by his argument and kept the attitude of earnest attention. Others had followed him throughout with the intensest sympathy, and now were waiting, with quickened pulse and eager ears, the closing word. When the leading propositions had been marshaled, as it were, before being left to their fate, one instinctively felt that sentences of a yet more impressive nature were on the way.

The opposition, who had shown a somber demeanor, were moved by this splendid display, and aided the general effect by their anxious air. Mr. Disraeli and his principal lieutenant, Mr. Hardy, sat just the other side of the table at which Mr. Gladstone stood, and lost not a syllable of those confident allegations, that cool assumption of success, and utter ignoring of the stereotyped antagonism which were among the characteristics of the speech.—Speaking now to them, now to his fellow ministers by his side, now to the whole house, Mr. Gladstone, in stately and musically interrupted phrases, laid upon Parliament the responsibility of "this measure of pacification, and sat down with the prophecy that, when the sentences were spoken which gave the force of law to the work embodied in the bill, the answer to them would come back in the approving verdict of civilized mankind. When the applause had ceased, Mr. Gladstone leaned on his bench and finished the last drops from a small phial, which could not contain more than a tablespoonful of liquid—supposed by some to be sal volatile, by others a substance which cases the throat. Mr. Disraeli tried to keep up to the high level of speech, and was brief and ready in his delivery; but the observer could not but note that the moral opinion of the House was against him. In this question of the Irish Church, at all events, Mr. Gladstone is supported by the large majority of the Commons, and the antagonism to him must consequently lose the arrogant and irritating quality which distinguished it in the previous Parliament. The sitting speedily broke up, and members flocked out of the chamber into a storm of pelting rain. Some of the couples, I thought, were odd ones—as the Duke of Argyll and Mr. Lowe, for example, whom I saw leaving the building arm in arm. Almost as novel a spectacle as Mr. Bright, on the same evening, standing up to promise the assistance of a gunboat to prevent illegal fishing at some part of the coast.—Correspondence of Chicago Tribune.

SLURS ON WOMAN.

At a recent meeting, at which no ladies were present, in responding to the toast on "Woman," a speaker dwelt almost solely on the frailty of the sex, claiming that the best among them were little better than the worst, the chief difference being in the surroundings. At the conclusion of the speech a gentleman present rose to his feet and said:

"I trust the gentleman, in the application of his remarks, refers to his own mother and sisters, and not to ours."

The effect of this most just and timely rebuke was overwhelming—the maligner of woman was covered with confusion and shame.

This incident serves an excellent purpose in prefacing a few words which we have for a long time had it in our mind to say. Of all the evils prevailing among young men, we know of none more blighting in its moral effects than the tendency to speak slightingly of the virtue of women. Nor is there anything in which young men are so thoroughly mistaken as the low estimate they form of the integrity of woman—not of their own mothers and sisters, thank God, but of others, who they forget are somebody else's mothers and sisters.

As a rule, no person who surrenders to this debasing habit is safe to be trusted with any enterprise requiring integrity of character. Plain words should be spoken on this point, for the evil is a general one, and deep rooted. If young men are sometimes thrown into the society of the thoughtless, they have no more right to measure other women by what they see of these than they would have to estimate the character of honest and respectable citizens by the developments of crime in our police courts.

Let young men remember that their chief happiness in life depends upon their utter faith in woman. No worldly wisdom, no misanthropic philosophy, no generalization, can cover or weaken this fundamental truth. It stands like the record of God himself—for it is nothing less than this—and should put a seal upon lips that are wont to speak slightingly of women.—Packard's Monthly.

Industry will make a man a purse, and frugality will find strings for it. Neither the purse nor the strings will cost anything. He who has it should draw the strings as frugality directs, and he will be sure always to find a useful penny at the bottom of it. The servants of industry are known by their livery; it is always whole and wholesome. Idleness travels very leisurely, and poverty soon overtakes him. Look at the ragged slaves of idleness, and judge which is the best to serve, industry or idleness.

Speak well of your friend; of your enemy say nothing.

How to Send the Advocate to Widows.

Rev. J. M. Franklin writes:

"MR EDITOR: Can you think of any plan that will enable us to place the ADVOCATE in the hands of our widowed sisters? Please make the inquiry. It may be some of our brethren can give us a plan."

We answer, Imitate the Rev. M. U. Payne. Two years ago he sent to this office a $50 draft, to be expended in supplying widows with the paper; and within the last month has done the same thing again. If the brother will forward us the names of three widows, who, as the apostle says, "are widows indeed," we will put their names on this list. Who could put $3 in a more grateful shape?

NOTICE.

The Rev. Dr. Munsey will preach in the Felicity street church on Sabbath morning next, at eleven o'clock, on which occasion a collection will be taken up for the benefit of the foreign missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

BISHOP KAVANAUGH, a correspondent writes us, preached, April 11, in Broadway Church, Louisville, and in the evening at Wainut. His sermons were grand, powerful, overwhelming. In the noon of his life he never surpassed them. His audiences were very large on both occasions. He is on his way to Missouri, and is in fine health.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

REV. J. W. P. MCKENZIE, a distinguished minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in Eastern Texas, died of injuries he received from the explosion of a kerosene lamp. The explosion set a young lady's clothes on fire, and in attempting to save the life of the young lady he was burned so badly that he lingered about three months and then died. He was a gentleman of fine education; his whole life was devoted to good works, and the heroic self-sacrifice that resulted so fatally was but in keeping with his general character.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

CHANGE OF EDITORSHIP.—The St. Louis Christian Advocate, April 7, comes to us with the valedictory of Rev. P. M. Pinchard, editor of that paper. His successor, till General Conference, May, 1870, is Rev. T. M. Finney.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The excellent secretary of the society for advancing the missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church South among the Cherokees and Choctaw Indians in the States of Central America, and the Chinese Empire, is now in this city, in furtherance of this great enterprise. He preached in Carondelet street on last Sabbath morning. On account of a heavy fall of rain that set in about half an hour before the hour of service the audience was not so large as was expected, and the collection was postponed until Sabbath a week. The sermon fully sustained the reputation of the gifted preacher, and more than ever impressed us with a belief that he has but to appear in a community and preach and present his cause to obtain whatever the society needs; in plain words, all that he may demand. If we can judge of others by ourself, it would be an accommodation, after listening to one of his sermons, if he would take "coat," "cloak" and purse. While he was preaching we tried to imagine the effect when he became fully possessed of the great theme of missions, and turned that battery of logic, of Christian sympathy and Miltonic conception, with its steel-pointed words, full upon the churches and the Conferences. And we felt as if, with the blessing of the Holy Spirit, he could crush out the whole front of stolid indifference behind which our people feel secure in their isolating self-love. Why, we thought, may not the Providence of God work for us through a single instrument, and cause the sublime exploring charity of the Son of God to be our accepted standard of enterprise? Mr. Watson, by his soul of faith and his words of fire, both by the pulpit and the pen, roused the whole Wesleyan connection to the missionary altitude of a true Christian life. That power is still felt in Great Britain, in India, and throughout the Pacific continents and isles.

We hope that the secretary will call for $100,000 as the contribution of our church, this year, to the advancement of the Gospel without. Our people are able to give this sum. Other churches contribute vastly more than this. The Northern Methodist Church has a list of missionary appropriations calling for $1,000,000. It is full time that we should take our place in the advancing line. With a rapidity known to our times and to the early periods of creational power, one-third of the human race is now thrown open to the church, and demands of it one-third of the Gospel, one-third of the Redeemer's blood, and one-third of the life of the Holy Spirit as a right. The vast empire of mind in China is turned toward the light of the glory of God, and waits to be led captive by the truth as it is in Jesus. It seems to us that this is an end so great, a duty so binding upon every follower of Christ, that to neglect it would be in effect to ignore the design of the Saviour's mission to our earth and to neutralize the vital force of Christianity.

And such, we believe, will be the effect upon our own church if it does not thoroughly and quickly arouse to the discharge of its obligations. The reflex action of indifference will prove as disastrous to us as to the heathen. The true "leaven" must spread or spoil. We need look no further for a solution of any weakness or poverty in result of preaching or of the machinery at home. It is right here our hearts are not large enough; they do not beat with the pulse of that Life which gave itself for others. We must forget ourselves if we would be remembered by heaven.

When the whole stupendous superstition of China gives way and an empire is ceded to Christ which realizes one-half of His promised inheritance, what share shall our church have in the heavenly triumph?—See "that no man take thy crown." We were amazed at the meagre appropriation of the board for this field, and should be sorry to believe that they hold the measure of the church's faith or zeal. Already it has been surpassed, not to say rebuked, by the guarantee of one noble lady of Baltimore, given to the secretary, that the Trinity church would be responsible for the entire support of one missionary in China. May some other "Mary" break an alabaster cruse of precious spikenard in honor of the all-generous Saviour! Awake, ye men and women of our beloved Zion, to the cry of the cultivated myriads of the Orient if you would not close the ears of the living God against yourselves and your children!

On Sabbath next at Felicity street, and on the Sabbath after at Carondelet street, we hope that this glorious movement will put on new strength. As this is the first point in the extreme South at which the secretary begins the year's collections we hope that the New Orleans Methodists will respond proportionably to their high appreciation of the cause, the messenger, and their own ancient fame.

THE BISHOPS' MEETING.

The bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church South meet at St. Louis on May 6th, to arrange for the year's work. Our Home Missionary Board meets at the same time and place. Doubtless it will be a rare treat to the Southern Church there to entertain these venerable fathers and brethren. Among items to be considered we would respectfully mention that of publishing a German hymn book. It is a work of prime importance to our German churches. The Discipline is now in German; and we have a German Apologist. But the greatest need still is a hymn book. Much of the trouble we have through Northern German influence springs from the use of Northern publications. This ought to have been obviated long since by our publishing agents. But it is with churches as with individuals—they become sensible and practical through poverty. The importance of the German missions in the South cannot be overestimated. They are destined to be a power in this city. The Presbyterians have lost their missions. We, by the Providence of God and the strength of our organization, have kept ours. A few German preachers in Texas and a few members here have sloughed off through diseases contracted by staying too closely at home during the war; but the general body remains sound and youthful. If, however, we allow another church to furnish our German people their songs and hymns, what wonder if the very children imbibe an admiration for the stranger? The book, as a book, doubtless, will not pay a profit, though there will be a moderate and constantly increasing demand for it. It will, therefore, be necessary to appropriate money for this publication, as was done for the Discipline. The attention of the active and vigilant secretary of the Home Missionary Society has, doubtless, been given to this important matter, for but few things escape his practiced eye. We hope that he will put his strong shoulders to the enterprise, and secure success by a single movement.

We cannot pass from this notice without reminding our people that this is the time to pray. The bishops' meeting is the initial hour of the ecclesiastical year, and gives shape to its policy, may be to its fruitfulness or its failure. How much wisdom, then, should be compressed into the few days of this Episcopal Conference! Let the church aid these holy men by earnest prayer to the Father of Lights. If military commanders-in-chief need qualities and faculties of the highest order to achieve victories and lead armies, how much more do these apostolic chiefs need the loftier inspiration of the Spirit of Him who goes forth "conquering and to conquer." May every one of them have a "cloven tongue of fire" on his brow—the harbinger of a universal baptism of burning power!

THE London society's mission in the populous city of Hankow, in the very heart of the Chinese empire, has just added to its means of usefulness a hospital, with which will be connected a hall where the Gospel will be preached daily.

THE ORPHANS' FAIR.

The competition among the clubs for the silver water cooler which was voted for at the fair for the benefit of the Seventh street Orphans' Home, recently held at Odd Fellows' Hall, was very lively. The "Hancocks," however, gained the day and received the cooler, as will be seen from the following exhibit of the votes cast:

Hancock, 697; Bienville, 537; Chalmette, 36; Pickwick, 3. Total 1,273 votes.

We should not, in recording this vote, fail to express our acknowledgments to Mr. C. C. Twitchell, commissioner of the votes, for the practical assistance which, throughout the fair, he rendered to the ladies of the Floral Bower.

Nor should we fail to carry out the wish of Mrs. Carroll, of "Table No. 2," speaking in the names of the ladies of the fair, and thank Mrs. Margaret, the bakeress, on Old Levee street, for the free gift to the fair of twenty large cakes. Mrs. Margaret is well known to be one of the most charitable souls in the country; and her undeviating interest in charity fairs has become universally appreciated.

While we are closing our notes of the fair, we should not forget saying that a beautiful sugar temple, some three stories high, was presented by Major Dumonteil to "No. 4," under the charge of Mrs. Pagaud. Mr. J. S. Pagaud formed the beautiful idea of offering it to the paper receiving the largest number of votes. Here is the list:

SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, 223; Southwestern Presbyterian, 183; Daily Picayune, 86; Daily Times, 18; Daily Bee, 12; Daily Crescent, 11; Morning Star, 2; Bulletin, 1—536 votes at twenty-five cents, $134.—Times.

We are greatly indebted to those friends who stood up to the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE in this trial. A few friends at the right time are a great good; and this incident serves to assure us that even in a more serious exigency they would not be wanting. We left the room before the issue was fairly joined, but felt confident of success, because we knew that we could count upon the hearty support of one or two fair ladies whose husbands had been as well trained as any of us. The Southwestern Presbyterian, for a new sheet, did marvelously. We shall tremble next time for our laurels. The Picayune was warmly advocated, but the atmosphere was rather too churchly for the full appreciation of its secular merits; and so, too, there was too much Protestantism about for either the Times or the Morning Star. The latter received two votes, for one of which it is indebted to Father Moynahan—full as many as the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE would have received at a Catholic fair.

But in the dead hour of the night we thought, what shall be done with this wonderful creation of the confectioner's art? The idea that it was an "elephant" only flashed as a possibility—in case we should not get it. The solution of the problem was, to make it a present to the ladies of the fair about to be held at Monroe, Louisiana, for the building of a Southern Methodist church in that place. May it yield them twice as much as it has yielded the orphans of Seventh street!

WILLIAM T. SMITHSON.

The resignation of Mr. Smithson, as the treasurer of our Foreign Missionary Society, is a serious misfortune to this great interest. His resignation should not have been accepted by the board. The society needs all the strength it can command; and the name of William T. Smithson is, throughout the Louisiana, the Mobile, the Montgomery and the Mississippi Conferences, indeed, so far as we have opportunity of knowing, throughout the Southern Church, a rallying point of sympathy and confidence. His career during the war, as a Southern man, and the severe persecution that he suffered and long imprisonment he endured at the hands of Mr. Stanton, have endeared him to the people of the South, and have given him a reputation for sterling integrity which any one might envy, and of which he may be justly proud. We add to this his fitness as an exact accountant, and the marked success which he has had in reducing the debt of the society during the year past. The whole church had become accustomed to regard him as the faithful guardian of one of its most cherished trusts. But just about the time he becomes thoroughly conversant with the wants of the great field of missions, and has become qualified to supervise the ways and means of its support, he permits himself and the board permits him to resign! There is a fatality in such legislation that only may be accounted for by a too partial representation of the sentiment—and will of—the several Conferences. We have a very high appreciation of the gentleman who is elected to take his place; he fills it as well as any person could; but we object seriously to this endless disturbance and experimenting. Mr. Smithson was more than acceptable as treasurer; he was all that could be desired as a man, as a devoted Methodist, and as an officer—that is, if our situation can be considered as favorable for knowing the public opinion of this end of the church. To now put some one else in his place or to disturb unnecessarily affairs which from various causes are become as delicate and sensitive as they are great and precious, is matter of profound regret to the best friends of the society and of the church.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

We have received from the publishers, through Mr. James A. Gresham, No. 92 Camp street:

ENGLAND'S ANTIPHON. By George Macdonald, L. L. D. J. B. Lippincott & Co. Macmillan & Co., publishers, Philadelphia. 1869. 12mo, pp. 332.

The author says, very pithily, "Of the lyrical poems of England religion possesses the most; of the epic, the best; of the dramatic, the oldest." To these rhythmical utterances of the great spirit of the past he has given the name of the responsive song of the Greek choir—"Antiphon." He holds that the tone of life of a nation is to be discovered in its poems, rather than in the mere historic effervescence of its wars, kings and barons. Beginning with the thirteenth century, in the reign of Edward I, he introduces several hymns to the Virgin from the Percy Society publications; then from the "Miracle Plays," and other poems of the fourteenth century. It requires no little ingenuity to point out excellencies in those contemplative, child-like effusions.

Presently we come to Chaucer, Spenser, Lord Bacon, Dr. Donne, Bishop Hall, Herbert, Milton, Baxter, Jer. Taylor, down to Coleridge. The reader can imagine that what they have said on the Nativity, the Passion, and in hymns to the Father and the Son, in matin and vespers, might constitute an antiphon worthy of the angelic choirs.

"Soft roll your incense, herbs, and fruits and flowers,
In mingled clouds to Him whose sun exalts,
Whose breath perfumes you, and whose pencil paints."

SEEKERS AFTER GOD. By the Rev. T. W. Farrar, M. A. R. S. J. B. Lippincott & Co. Macmillan & Co., publishers. 1869.

This is another volume of Messrs. Lippincott's "Sunday Library." We have noticed this delightful book at length in a former number of the ADVOCATE. The "discoveries" of Epictetus, the "meditations" of Marcus Aurelius, and the writings of Seneca, can never lose their interest. But in this book we have these gems in a setting of wonderful richness and beauty—the ideas of one of the most cultivated writers and scholars of England—all that pours into his mind suggestively, as he in thought places himself in the age of these Romans, and contrasts the yearnings of their minds after truth with his own felt possession of the precious "pearl." For sale by J. A. Gresham, No. 92 Camp street.

THE Iowa State Register mentions the fact that the people of Norwalk have recently erected a Methodist and a Baptist church, and have hit upon a somewhat novel plan to eke out the cost of the latter. The Baptists got up a general contribution. "Everybody," says the Register, "threw in what they could, whether it was grain or stock, dry goods or baskets. Having accumulated quite a lot of property they are going to have an auction at the church. That popular auctioneer and splendid good fellow, H. B. Allison, will be the practical sermonizer of the occasion, and everybody is invited to attend and buy something."

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

MR. EDITOR: With gratitude to God, who "alone giveth the increase," I am permitted to report success in reorganizing our church in Vermilionville. We number thirteen in the society, with a Sunday school of twenty pupils and four teachers. We have had a present of a good library from a friend in New York. We have a good organ, and have excellent church music. Spiritually we are growing in grace. I have also organized a colored society of ninety-five members, who have raised over $300 to build themselves a church. They will soon organize a Sunday school.

My congregation are doing what they can for the support of the Gospel in their midst. "To preach the Gospel is to sow a golden farina, which, in blooming, perpetuates its aroma forever."

B. F. WHITE.

OPELOUSAS, April, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: The first quarterly meeting came off on the 7th and 8th of this month; but we had no elder. We had a most glorious time in the church. God manifested himself to the church. Many were made to praise His name. There were two accessions, and many showed a disposition to turn from the path of vice and folly. If God will assist, I hope to see times of refreshing from His presence.

Since I came to this circuit a gentleman of the Presbyterian Church has given to the church five acres of land, with some buildings, and the brethren have expended about $100 in repairs for a parsonage. So you see that the preacher has a house for his family when he comes to this work. But how is he living? Getting along finely. One sinner sent him a barrel of flour, one brother sent him corn, another sent him a lot of bacon, and another sent him some meal; a sister sent some chickens, and another some eggs and butter. And so it goes. The heart is made glad when such tokens of kindness are bestowed.

Yours in Christ Jesus,

JOHN H. BOUTT.

EVANGELICAL WORK IN ITALY.—Mr. Clark, a missionary of the American and Foreign Christian Union, writes as follows:

"The Italians in Trieste are also very desirous that an evangelist should be sent to that city to preach the Gospel of Christ, and such is the encouragement that it is said a good congregation could easily be gathered.

"In the western part of the Friuli, the region immediately north and east of Venice, we have this year occupied Treviso, the principal city, sending here another of our students. The work in this place is one of great promise. Our young evangelist has often two hundred and sometimes more to listen to the Gospel. The people of the city are favorably disposed to the truth, and the principal journal of the city speaks out decidedly in favor of our work.

"In the region north of Treviso there are many towns and villages scattered along the foot of the Alps, from the Tyrol on the west, to the north and east, even to the central part of southern Austria. Many Bibles and religious tracts from this region have gone into the Austrian territory, and good fruits have been the result. But for all this region we have at present only one colporteur stationed at Treviso, as the center of operations.

"One of our most prosperous stations during the year past, in northern Italy, has been that of Verona. There is now in this city a church of more than a hundred members, and nearly all gathered during the six or eight months past. We have two excellent men at this station, and God has, in a most signal manner, prospered their labors. Many who have embraced the truth, and are now members of the church, are from the more educated classes. Verona being one of the largest and most cultivated cities of north Italy, this work will have great influence for good in a large and populous section of country."—Methodist.

SYMPATHY with the Cuban insurrectionists is rapidly extending in this country, and the feeling in favor of annexation is growing stronger every day. Northern Radical papers, which opposed it when first advocated by the Southern press, have, for some unexplained reason, changed their tactics and now go in for the Gem of the Antilles.—Times.

COUNT VON BEUST attended, a few weeks ago, a party at the palace of Count Dombezi, in Vienna, where he met several of his most implacable clerical adversaries. Among them was a certain prelate who, Beust knew full well, had for some time been denouncing him everywhere in unmeasured terms. When most of the guests had left, a terrible shower began to deluge the streets. All the carriages were sent off to convey the guests to their homes. Finally, only Beust, who had had a long conversation with his host, remained, and so did the above mentioned prelate, who was detained because he had no carriage to drive home in. Hacks were not to be had anywhere. Beust, happening to hear of the unpleasant predicament in which his implacable adversary found himself, stepped up to him and holding out his hand to him he said, "Bishop X, suppose you accept a seat in my carriage and permit me to take you to your house?" The prelate, embarrassed, and withal touched by this offer, cordially shook hands with the man whom he had so often denounced, and accepted the seat in his carriage. He has since learned to think and speak more highly of the regenerator of Austria.

AT THE last hunt in the forest of Fontainbleau the courtiers who accompanied the emperor were much mystified by the following occurrence. The emperor suddenly halted in the middle of the forest, and requested his attendants not to follow him any further. He then advanced alone, and was met at some distance further on by a tall man in a peasant's dress, whose features the courtiers were unable to distinguish, but who, they saw, had very small, white hands, and several rings on his fingers. The emperor conversed with the mysterious stranger for over an hour and a half, and when he finally returned to his attendants, they noticed that his majesty was exceedingly thoughtful, and even morose. Upon his arrival in Paris the emperor retired at once to his cabinet, pacing the room for several hours, and refusing admittance even to his private secretary. Some of the courtiers at the Tuileries think that the mysterious stranger was no other than the Count of Paris, the Orleanist prince, while others assert that it must have been ex-King Ferdinand, of Portugal, now a candidate for the Spanish throne.

MILTON.—In his early years he used to sit up late at his studies, but in later years he retired every night at nine o'clock, and lay till four in the summer and five in winter. If not then disposed to rise, he had some one to sit at his bedside and read to him. When he rose he had a chapter of the Hebrew Bible read for him, and then, after breakfast, studied till twelve. He then dined, took some exercise for an hour, generally in a chair in which he used to swing himself, and afterward played on the organ or bassviol, and either sung himself or requested his wife to sing, who, as he said, had a good voice and no ear. He then resumed his studies until six, from which hour till eight he conversed with all who came to visit him. Like many other poets, Milton found the stillness, warmth, and recumbency of bed favorable to composition; and his wife said, before rising of a morning, he often dictated to her twenty or thirty verses. A favorite position of his, when dictating his verses, we are told, was that of sitting with one of his legs over an arm of his chair. His wife related that he used to compose chiefly in winter.

THE chief cook at the Tuileries is an old man, who officiated in that capacity when Louis Philippo occupied that palace. He is an eccentric old man, who is allowed to talk in terms of ardent admiration of the epicurean tastes of the Orleans princes, which he thinks plainly show that they must be embodiments of human perfection. Of the present emperor he evidently does not think very highly, for he says, "His majesty cares very little for the good things of the table. A slice of roast beef, a few potatoes, a bit of salad, a glass of Burgundy—there, is that the food of an emperor? And yet that is all his majesty cares for. But Louis Philippe—ah!" And then follows an enthusiastic description of the delicacies which had every day to be prepared for that pear-headed old epicure, the Roi bourgeois.

QUARTERLY REVIEW.—The Methodist Quartorly Review for April. Its table of contents is as follows: The Religion of the Athenians, B. F. Cocker, D. D.; The Church School, Rev. J. H. Vincent, A. M.; Schleirmacker; his Theory and Influence, Prof. J. A. Reubelt; Growth in Language, Prof. D. H. Wheeler; Methodism: its Method and Mission, J. T. Peck, D. D.; Theodicy, O. K True, D. D.

SOME persons are above our anger, others below it. To contend with our superiors is indiscretion, and with our inferiors is indignity.

WE ARE only now seeing the beginning of the war between the Executive and the Senate. The fact that the Republicans have all united to snub the President upon such a paltry question as the appointment of a country postmaster, is indicative of the jealousy with which the Senate will protect its powers.—With these two branches of government in direct hostility serious trouble must sooner or later arise. General Grant's first and fatal mistake was in not insisting upon the repeal of the tenure of office act, at a time when, as master of the situation in a new and untried field, he had the sympathy and support of the whole people. By compromising with the Senate he confirmed their usurpation, and it is now a matter of grave doubt whether anything short of a revolution will restore to the Executive the powers he once held under the Constitution.—Times.

OBITUARIES.

MRS. SUSAN A. ANDERSON was born in Newberry district, South Carolina, August 6, 1792; was married in 1809; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1836, and died in Monroe county, Alabama, March 2, 1869.

Such is a brief summary of facts furnished me of one who lived a consistent religious life for more than thirty years, and died in full hope of a blessed immortality. Her last sickness was long and painful, and during it all she leaned upon the everlasting arm, fearing she was not as patient and resigned as she ought to be, and constantly longing for a stronger faith and a brighter prospect.

She was the mother of eleven children, six of whom are now living. She had lived a widow for more than ten years, and evinced her fine sense in the management of her property and in the good counsel she gave to her children and grand children.

Benevolent and kind in her disposition, she will be greatly missed in her neighborhood. The best proof of her goodness and firmness as a mistress and manager is in the fact that her servants remained with her after they were free—a rare thing in this section—and worked as before, and showed their affection in the tears they shed at her grave.

Sister Anderson was a firm member of the church, a good friend to the preachers, and loved to minister to their wants at her home. She sleeps by the side of her husband at McKenzie's church, in sight of the house where she died.

HER PASTOR.

IN MEMORIAM.

PICKENS STATION, MISS., MAR. 23, 1869.

My father, PETER JAMES, SR., departed this life just at twilight, on Thursday, the 18th instant.

On the 19th of February, 1867, he received an injury from his horse, from which he suffered excruciatingly for one year and one month. His injuries were such that he could not lie down, nor could he move without assistance. Some time before he died he requested me, after his death, to notify you, and through your paper his surviving friends and church brethren, that he had passed from earth to heaven—that he desired no extended obituary, but he wished his acquaintances to know that the faith he preached for fifty years, and which had sustained him in life, would carry him calmly and fearlessly "through the dark valley and shadow of death." He frequently desired and prayed that God would remove him to that land where sickness, sorrow, pain and death were felt and feared no more.

Some time before he breathed his last he was asked by Brother Herbert if he knew that he was dying. He replied, "Oh, yes! dying! yes!" He told me frequently that all was fair between him and heaven. He passed away without one single struggle—so calmly that, though surrounded by his children, none suspected the breath he drew was his last.

He requested me to say to his old comrades in the Christian warfare that if they knew of any incident in his life that would be of benefit to the church they were at liberty to publish it; otherwise he desired no notice to be taken of his death.

On the 22d of July, 1868, Mrs. NETTIE WILSON, wife of Dr. S. G. Wilson, of Liberty Hill, Alabama, in the nineteenth year of her age.

Thus has been removed, by the relentless hand of death, one of the purest and best of earth, the charm of the family circle, and the idol of a fond and devoted husband.

How painful, indeed, to realize that the dear one who, but a few months ago, entered upon a new and untried life, with the one whom she had chosen as the companion of her joys and sorrows, should thus suddenly have been called upon to renounce the many fond hopes and anticipations that had blossomed so brightly in her pathway. How sad to think that the dear one, but a few weeks ago, was so gleeful, and whose every smile, tone and act brought a thrill of joy to fond and devoted hearts, is now a slumberer of the grave.

"Farewell, dearest Nettie, a long farewell;
Though we on earth no more shall meet,
We hope with thee in heaven to dwell,
Where happiness will be complete."

God, however, mingles something of the balm of mercy even in the vials of the most corrosive woe, for He has, in His almighty strength and power, spared the little infant, whose mother has only gone before. Yes, the sweet little bud of innocence and purity she so ardently folded to her bosom, when almost in the agonies of death, is left us a comfort to the bereaved father.

Oh! grieve not, afflicted family, but pray to our heavenly Father to teach us the force of the expression, "All things earthly must pass away"—the sweetest, the dearest, alas! may not be permitted to stay.

"Dearest Nettie, thou hast left us:
We thy loss do deeply feel;
But 'tis God that hath bereft us;
He can all our sorrows heal."

A. A. S.

CATARRH.—Catarrh is a dangerous disease; yet it can be cured by the use of DR. WOLCOTT'S ANNIHILATOR, a different remedy, and unlike PAIN PAINT. Thousands suffer without knowing the nature of this universal complaint. It is an ulceration of the head. Its indications are hawking, spitting; weak or inflamed eyes, soreness of the throat, dryness and heat in the nose, matter running from the head down the throat, ringing or deafness in the ears, loss of smell, memory impaired, dullness and dizziness of the head; pains in the left chest or side and under the shoulder blades. Indigestion invariably attends Catarrh; a hacking cough and colds are very common. Some have all these symptoms, others only a few. Very little pain attends Catarrh until the Liver and Lungs are attacked in consequence of the stream of pollution running from the head into the stomach. It ends in Consumption.

Bronchitis is the legitimate child of Catarrh. Troches and all palliatives cannot in any case reach the fountain in the head, where the polluted festering, corrosive matter issues. Snuff or dust of any kind aggravates, and never cures the disease.

A sneeze is nature's emphatic warning, and is produced in consequence of an irritation of the head. Nature speaks out and says, No! at every sneeze. She opens the water ducts and floods the nostrils with water to drive out the intruder, just as the ducts of the eye are opened when dust affects that organ. Taking snuff will produce Catarrh. The patient feels dull, heavy, stupid and sleepy; his fears are not aroused until perhaps too late.

He catches cold constantly in the head, sometimes running at the nostrils; the breath sometimes reveals to his neighbors the corruption within; while the patient has often lost the sense of smell. The disease advances cautiously, until pain in the chest, lungs or bowels startles him; he hacks and coughs; has dyspepsia, has liver complaint, wants to take a blood purifier, or cod liver oil. Bosh! The foul nicer in the head cannot be reached by such nostrums. He becomes nervous, his voice is harsh and unnatural, feels disheartened, memory loses her power, judgment her seat, gloomy forebodings hang overhead; hundreds, yea thousands, seek a rope, a riverrun revolver or a razor, and cut the miserable thread of life. The world looks on and wonders—that a man surrounded by all the charms and opulence that gold can give, should deliberately choose a quiet grave; others drag on a weary life and sink under lung complaints by inches. Many hire some miserable scamp or some big sounding charlatan, having such a string of promotions from Europe that they actually bewilder and dazzle their victim, who at once comes down with the dust, pays $5 for a useless examination, $50 more as part payment for a job cure. Of course the dupe is not silly enough to pay the balance, but thanks God he was not killed outright by the outrageous treatment. The villains coolly write a flaming certificate, and attach thereto the victim's name.

Thousands are restored to health whom doctors call hopeless victims of Consumption.—Physicians think the lungs affected, when the liver is the only cause of pain in the majority of cases, and the patient is perfectly curable. No lung complaints can exist unless caused by Catarrh. But the liver is always first attacked. Medicines taken in the stomach are worse than useless. Physicians know nothing, comparatively, of the symptoms of this disease—its cause or cure—and few are bold enough to deny this assertion. Many physicians have Catarrh themselves and do not know it; those of the highest standing buy "Annihilator" to cure it.

For all afflicted with this disgusting complaint, DR. WOLCOTT'S ANNIHILATOR affords a safe, sure and speedy cure, when no bones have come from the head. The nostrils must be rinsed with Annihilator, by sniffing through to the throat, and spit out the nasty corruption instead of swallowing or allowing it to run down the throat, and thus keep the ulcers clean of matter, and they heal permanently. Also for weak Nerves, Chronic Headache and Neuralgia, it is invaluable. Twelve pints should be used for Catarrh, one pint each week.

The Annihilator is sold at fifty cents, and full pints $1 a bottle, with full directions. Pints hold three fifty cent bottles. Buy none except in pure white wrappers.

Six pints of Annihilator for Catarrh or Colds in the Head, or one pint of Pain Paint, double strength, send free of express charges on receipt of the money; or one gallon of Pain Paint, double strength, for $20. Small bottles sold at all Drug Stores. R. L. WOLCOTT, Inventor and Sole Proprietor, No. 181 Chatham Square, New York. ap10 4tr

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease, Consumption, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure.

To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used, free of charge, with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a SURE CURE FOR CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, etc. The object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable; and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address

THE NEW METHOD FOR THE Piano-Forte, by WILLIAM MASON (the distinguished pianist) and E. S. HOADLY, is a great improvement upon all previous works, and is used and recommended as such by the best teachers. It preserves what is valuable in previous books, and adds many new features. It is the only modern piano forte instructor published, presenting the technics of modern piano-forte playing. It is easier to teach and learn from, and secures more rapid and thorough progress than any other book. No teacher of the piano-forte can afford to do without its aid. It is the best book for beginners and the best for those who have made progress. Price, $4. To facilitate its examination by teachers, we will, until July 1st, send a single copy to any teacher of the piano-forte by mail, postage paid, for half price, $2.

An edition is published with European fingering, and one with American fingering.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE HELPLESS.

AFTER VICTOR HUGO.

The hen-bird beats her pinions on the snars;
Her mate the goshawk's crooked talons tear;
Over the callow nestlings, weak and lone,
What wing shall spread when darkness gathers? None.
Poor little birds!

The shepherd's dog with age lies dead and cold;
The wolf steals down upon the trembling fold;
The last pale crimson streak of sunset's gone;
Who guards the flock until the morning?
None.
Poor little lambs!

The father in the felon prison lies;
The mother in the spital shuts her eyes;
Sharp hunger sickens; day is almost done;
Who watches by the squalid cradle? None.
Poor little babes!

THE MILLER'S TREASURE.

In the wonderful days of 'once upon a time,' there lived a worthy miller. Now he was a very worthy miller indeed; and he had a very large family of small and rosy boys and girls. As you may suppose, he had to struggle with all his might and main to keep his own head, and his wife's head, and his children's respective noddles, above water. Clatter, clatter, hum, hum, went the mill all day long; yet, when Saturday night came round, and the miller took from his earnings this little amount for the butcher, and that little sum for the shoemaker, there were but few, if any, peace to lay by for a rainy day. In truth, the miller's purse was considerably lower than the water in his dam; and that is saying a great deal. Week after week he grew more disconraged. Instead of the cheerful face which he was wont to show to his neighbors, he turned to them a sour and—not to speak harshly, but to give the miller his due—a repulsive and ill-natured visage. Time went on, and matters grew from bad to worse.

One winter's evening the miller sat by his scanty fire, which he hugged as if he were trying to keep the smoldering embers from growing cold. The rest of the family had gone to bed. He was frowning and moping as usual. On his breast hung his shaggy head, and it was in that state of depression that it looked as if it were about to tumble from his shoulders into the ashes. Suddenly he heard the patter of a light footstep outside the cottage. A few knock fell upon the door.

'Come in,' said the miller, in no welcome tones.

The door sprang open, and in popped a fairy—a lovely, merry-eyed fairy! Of course the poor miller was astonished and bewildered; so would you or I have been.

'Am I welcome, Master Miller?' rang out the sweetest little voice in the world.

Now the miller couldn't find it in his heart to say 'no,' and so he brightened up, and in his most polite manner said: 'Yes, quite welcome, thank you.'

'Are you sure I am?' questioned the fairy.

'Why, yes,' quoth the miller, 'come closer to the fire, won't you, and take a chair, for you must be cold roving about in such pinching weather as this is.'

'O, no,' replied the fairy, 'I'm not cold, thank you, for you see we wee folks have good warm hearts, and a warm heart goes a great way toward keeping the rest of the body warm, Master Miller. Besides, we are always contented, no matter what weather the seasons bring, and you know there's nothing like contentment to keep one cheerful and happy.'

'But you are sad and you are morose, Master Miller. I know the reason, and I have come to help you.'

The miller's darkling frown changed into a glowing smile.

'You don't get on in the world, Master Miller. You are often discouraged and depressed by trifling difficulties. You often neglect your work, and then sigh and bemoan your fate, because your work neglects you. You have tried to make money too fast for your own good. Now turn over a new leaf, Master Miller. I leave you this chest, wherein you will find a great treasure.'

The miller took the chest. It was not a very large one, but it looked to him as if it were bursting with golden guineas.

'Now hearken to me,' said the fairy. 'You are not to open this until your family are actually in need of bread to eat. Toil on in your mill. Be trustful and earnest. Drive away your ugly frowns, for they are exceedingly unbecoming to that manly face of yours. Do as I bid you, on pain of my displeasure.' Ouch! you know a fairy's displeasure is something awful!

The miller promised that he would obey the fairy in everything.

'Good night, Master Miller,' chirped the fairy.

'Good night, and bless you a thousand times!' cried the miller.

'But stay,' said the fairy, as she was about to go; 'I have forgotten something. I have one more injunction to leave you. After ten years have passed away—recollect ten years from this very night—you have my full permission to open the chest; that is, provided your poverty does not force you to have recourse to my treasure before. Remember!' The fairy smiled archly, and raised her finger warningly. The door flew open, and away flew the fairy. The miller was the happiest man in the whole kingdom. He danced with joy. He roused his good wife and his troop of children and told them of his good fortune. He never made any more complaints if things at the mill went awry. He carried another face on his shoulders. He worked cheerfully. He sang the merriest songs; and he was altogether the busiest and happiest man for miles around. He threw off his old habits, and became a new miller. Of course he thrived! Many a time he thought that he would like to take a peep in the chest, but he was an honest miller, and he would have lost his right hand sooner than disobey the good fairy.

Ten years came and went, and found the mill still driving, and the miller a portly man of wealth and importance.

On the evening of the tenth anniversary of the fairy's visit he called his family around him and opened the chest.

What do you suppose he found in it?

Diamonds? No.
Pearls? No.
Rubies? No.
Gold? No.

You can't guess. I'll tell you. The chest was empty! But engraved upon the inside was this golden word—Contentment.

This was the miller's treasure.—Geo. Cooper, in Our School Day Visitor.

SCIENTIFIC.

ALUMINUM.

BY PROF. O. A. JOY.

Forty years ago a few grains of this metal were prepared by Professor Woehler, at the University of Goettingen. He sealed the little pellets in a glass tube, and it was not thought that the metal could ever have any useful applications. The discovery rested dormant for thirty years, when attention was called to it by the eminent French chemist, Deville.

The circumstances were as follows: The Emperor Napoleon, anxious to display some interest in scientific matters, appropriated fifty thousand francs to defray the expenses of researches into the properties and uses of aluminum, and Henry St. Claire Deville was authorized to make the experiments. We happened to be in Paris when this took place, and were one day invited by Professor Deville to witness the preparation of the metal in the presence of the minister of war, Professor Dumas, and of other celebrities. Deville, who is the most genial, popular and successful of the French chemists, received his guests with great cordiality, and explained, in the clearest possible manner, every step of the operation. He extracted a pure, silver-white metal from a lump of clay. The way he did this was very simple. Chlorine gas was passed over heated clay mixed with charcoal, and the chloride of aluminum thus produced was driven over melted sodium. The chlorine first extracted the metal from the clay, and was in turn decomposed by the sodium. In chemistry, might makes right, and every compound can be attacked and forced to capitulate, if the proper weapons are brought to bear upon it. The aluminum was first seduced from its strong citadel of clay by the chloriae, and was then attacked and captured by the sodium.

The experiments, in a small way, having proved successful, extensive works were established in the neighborhood of Paris, where aluminum was manufactured on a large scale. At the Paris exhibition of 1867 Mr. Paul Morin exhibited numerous objects manufactured from pure aluminum and from its alloys.

The specific gravity of the metal is 2.67. It is tin white, fusible at a red heat, brilliant, malleable, ductile, sonorous, an excellent conductor of electricity, insoluble in dilute sulphuric acid, and in concentrated nitric acid; easily soluble in hydrochloric acid and the alkalies. It does not decompose water, as was at first supposed, and does not oxidize materially in the air.

Professor Henry Wurtz, of New York, has recently discovered that if it be rubbed with mercury it oxidizes so rapidly as to produce great heat. It was at first found impossible to solder the metal, but this difficulty has been at length overcome. When fused with iron it forms a crystalline mass not malleable. Mixed with copper in the proportions of ten parts of aluminum, and ninety parts of copper, it forms a beautiful alloy, possessed of the color and many of the properties of gold. This alloy is called aluminum bronze, and is now frequently employed for the manufacture of watch cases, watch chains, and imitation jewelry. Nearly all the aluminum now manufactured is converted into the above alloy, and the interest in it, which at one time began to flag, is once more revived, and several new establishments have arisen for its manufacture.

Four hundred pounds a month are now manufactured in France, and sold at twelve dollars a pound. It is also largely produced in England.

Aluminum is one of the most abundant metals on the earth. It is found in brick and porcelain clay, in feldspar, in cryolite, in granite, in slate rocks, in the ruby and sapphire. When iron rusts, it turns to a red powder, which can be washed away. When aluminum rusts, or is fused at a great heat among the crystalline rocks, it gives to us the precious stones called the ruby and sapphire.

As soon as the metal is required in large quantities, some method will be devised for producing it at a cheap rate; and when that time arrives we shall not have to fit out expeditions to go and search for the ore in remote regions, but we can dig for it under our feet, nearly everywhere, and make a mine of every stone quarry.

The beautiful tone of the metal has suggested its use in the manufacture of bells, and a successful application of it for this purpose has been made.

Aluminum has been employed by chemists as a reducing agent in the preparation of some of the rare metals, and we may have to record a more extensive use of it for this purpose.

There have recently been introduced into use in Paris two new alloys of aluminum. The first is called aluminum silver, or third silver (tiers argent,) and is composed of one-third silver and two-thirds aluminum. It is chiefly employed for forks, spoons and tea service, and is harder than silver and more easily engraved. The second is called minargent, and is made of one hundred parts copper, seventy parts nickel, five parts antimony, and two parts aluminum. It is a very beautiful, permanent, and brilliant alloy, capable of replacing silver for many purposes.

It must be acknowledged that the applications of aluminum in the arts are not so numerous as was at first predicted, and its manufacture, as compared with other metals, can, at the present time, hardly be called a metallurgical one. The metal is so light that a little of it will go a great way. A cubic foot of it weighs one hundred and sixty-eight pounds, whereas a cubic foot of gold weighs twelve hundred pounds, and silver weighs six hundred and fifty-six pounds, iron four hundred and fifty pounds, and even granite weighs one hundred and eighty-six pounds to the cubic foot.

If the price of it were the same as that of silver it would still be much cheaper, as only one-fifth as much would be required to cover the same space.

So abundant is this metal, that it is safe to predict that the day is not far distant when our houses may be built of it instead of bricks, and we shall use it for many purposes now unknown.—New World.

FARM AND GARDEN.

FOR SOUTHERN LOUISIANA,

APRIL.—It is presumed that gardeners have generally transplanted their cabbage plants, beets, tomatoes, peppers, lettuce, etc., and that some of these are already half grown. Those who have been unable to plant seasonably may still plant pole and bunch beans, Lima or other beans, mustard, okra, tomato, radish, parsley, squash, cucumber, melons of all kinds, beet, pepper, English peas, Irish potatoes, corn, roquette and cress. In fact, almost everything adapted to March may be planted in April.

When engaged in transplanting, take the plants up carefully with a trowel or shovel, and save as many of the fine roots as possible; put the plants in a buket half full of water, and take each plant from the bucket as it is needed. If the sun shines, cover each plant with a little tuft of moss as soon as it is planted. Remove the moss at night and place it back again in the morning, till the plants begin to grow.

The hoe should now be active. Cabbages should be hoed weekly, and wormed where the worms are found cutting the plants. The ground may be covered an inch thick all around each plant with old, well rotted manure, or new, if old cannot be obtained. This mulches the ground, and the rains send the richness of the manure to the roots of the plant. This may be worked in with the surface soil in hoeing.—Manure may, in like manner, be put between the rows of onions, beets, peppers, and all plants which grow in drills, and squashes, tomatoes, melons, cucumbers, and every other vegetable in the same manner. This keeps the surface from baking in the hot sun after rains, enriches and loosens the soil, and operates at once on the growth of the plant.

Everybody who manages a garden should remember how injurious it is to vegetables in this country to permit a dry crust to form around them. The hoe should be active after every rain, as soon as the surface soil will pulverize.

The principal business of the gardener after the seeds are all planted, and the plants transplanted, is to kill all the weeds and grass as fast as they make their appearance, keep the surface mellow, the walks clear, and the ditches open.

The following table shows the proper distances for garden vegetables between rows, and between hills or plants in the row:

FRUIT TREES.—1. When fruit trees occupy the ground, nothing else should, except very short grass.

2 Fruitfulness and growth of the tree cannot be expected the same year.

3. There is no plum that the curculio will not take, though say kind may sometimes escape for one year in one place.

4. Peach borers will not do much damage when stiff clay is heaped up round the tree a foot high.

5. Pear blight still puzzles the greatest men. The best remedy known is to plant two for every one that dies.

6. If you don't know how to prune, don't hire a man from the other side of the sea that knows less than you do.

7. Don't cut off a big lower limb unless you are a reader, and don't care what becomes of the tree when your time is out.

8. A tree with the limbs coming out near the ground is worth two trees trimmed up five feet, and worth four trees trimmed up ten feet, and so on till they are not worth anything.

9. Trim down, not up.

10. Shorten in, not lengthen up.

11. If you had your arm cut off, you would feel it—a tree will not feel, but rot to the heart.

12. When anybody tells you of a gardener that understands all about horticulture and agriculture, and that he can be hired, don't believe a word of it, for there are no such to be hired. Such a man can make more than you can afford to give him, and if he has sense enough to understand the business, he will also have sense to know this.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

PAULINE LUCCA, the celebrated prima donna, has gone to Tubingen, to have there a painful and difficult operation performed on her throat, by Professor Bruns, the eminent lecturer on surgery at that university. It is predicted by the physicians of Berlin that this operation will restore to Mme. Lucca the full use and extent of her magnificent voice.

THE following subjects have been selected for consideration at the approaching Council of the Vatican: 1. The temporal power. 2. Fasts and abstinences. 3. Civil marriage. 4. Ecclesiastical celibacy. 5. Church and State. On the matter of the temporal power it is the providential law, and not the divine law, that is to be settled.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of.....$10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of..... 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of..... 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of..... 25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

DARBY'S

PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

A CHALLENGE TO THE WORLD!

We challenge the world to produce a better or a stronger recommendation for any article, for any purpose, than the following:

NOVEMBER 1, 1868.

We very cheerfully unite our testimony in favor of the great merits of the valuable disinfectant manufactured by Professor Darby, and known as DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID. From the reputation of Professor Darby as a scientific gentleman, from our own knowledge of this preparation, and from the general esteem in which it is held wherever known, we have no hesitation in recommending it as one of the most valuable household articles with which we are acquainted.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT

Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION. — TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

CHURCH OF THE STRANGERS,

New York.—Visitors to the city of New York are informed that they will find divine service every Sunday, in the large Chapel of the University, Washington Square, at ten and a half A. M. and at seven and a half P. M. The evening service in summer is at eight o'clock. Waverley Place, immediately north of the New York Hotel, out of Broadway, runs west to Washington Square, on the east side of which is the University. The entrance to the church is the main door of the University. University Place cars run from the door of the Fifth Avenue Hotel to the door of the church. From the St. Nicholas and Metropolitan, take the cars corner of Broadway and Broome, leave at Waverley Place, and go west one block. At the Astor House take University Place cars, leave at Waverley Place, and go west one block. Strangers will find cordial welcome and polite attention.

The pastor is Rev. Dr. DEEMS, who devotes himself to the spiritual interests of strangers. If any be sick, let them address him a note by mail, as "Pastor of the Church of the Strangers, New York," and it will reach him. The ladies who compose the "Society of the Sisters of the Stranger" procure medical, legal and spiritual help for strangers in perplexity, distress or sickness. Address "Sisters of the Stranger," care Rev. Dr. Deems, New York.

If you are coming to New York soon, cut this out and paste it in your memorandum book.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

Or, Vegetable Medicine.

T. K. PRICE, Esq., Vendor of "Price's Patent Texas Tonic," or Vegetable Medicine:

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate use and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best recipe that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetables Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therfore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefitted.

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

We remain yours truly,

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT

Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term.. ....$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term..... 30 00
Contingent fee, per term..... 2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Bonners.

For further information apply for circulars to O. F. CASEY,

NEW ORLEANS,

SIGN OF THE BIG TEA POT.

I would respectfully announce to my friends and the public generally, both in the city and country, that after an association of over twenty years, under the name and style of Austin & Goodwyn, formerly corner of Customhouse and Front Levee, I have permanently located as above, and shall continue my old business of

MANUFACTURING TINWARE,

in all its branches, as heretofore, and in addition will endeavor to keep at all times a full and complete stock of the best, as well as the latest, and most approved

COOKING STOVES.

The names of a few will suffice to give an idea of the great variety constantly kept on hand:

The Charter Oak,	The Good Samaritan.
The Revenue,	The Torchlight,
The American,	The Brilliant,
The Magnolia,	The Fashion,
The True Kentuckian,	The Farmer,
The Maid of Orleans,	The Southern States.
The Mutual Friend,	The Sunny South,

and many others, too numerous to mention, all of which will be sold at

THE LOWEST MARKET PRICES,

for cash or approved city paper.

Being ever grateful for the liberal patronage bestowed and confidence reposed in me during my former copartnership, I would most earnestly solicit a continuance of the same, and shall pledge myself to do my utmost to maintain the reputation of the old house.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE,

Staunton, Virginia.

The next session begins on the 21st day of SEPTEMBER, 1868, and closes on the 24th of June, 1869.

Rev. William A. Harris, President, with a Faculty of twelve professors, teachers and matrons.

This is a Female College of the first rank; one of the most flourishing in the South; young ladies here from nearly all sections of Virginia, and various Southern States. Method of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Health and comfort of pupils unsurpassed. Those from the Gulf States, especially, have greatly improved in health. No social disquietude. The population of this great Valley is nearly all white. This institution is an educational home for the daughters of the South.

Charges for the entire scholastic year, board and tuition, in collegiate course, embracing

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited but little change since our last review. Most branches of the wholesale trade have shown a moderate degree of animation, but with less activity than for some weeks past. Sugar has continued quiet, with an ample stock and the receipts in excess of the sales. Molasses has sold in small lots at about previous rates. Western produce has exhibited very little movement, operations having been mostly confined to the supply of the city trade. In corn, however, the supplies have been more liberal, but were not fairly placed upon the market until Tuesday, when the sales were of moderate extent, holders asking a little above the limits of buyers for export.

Our accounts from the interior are still of a somewhat conflicting character, without anything very marked either in favor of or against the next crop. Upon the whole, however, the indications do not promise more than a moderate yield. Intelligence has been received of a serious crevasse in Bayou Lafourche, two miles below the crossing of the Opelousas railroad, which threatens to inundate all the country below, as far as Bayou Terrebonne on the right bank.

The river has risen five inches since our last report, and is now one foot seven inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the 16th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	0124
Mobile	609
Florida	4
Texas	258
Total	0995

On Saturday the market opened with a fair inquiry, and continued animated throughout the day, factors meeting the demand more freely, without submitting to a quotable reduction, and the sales summing up 5,800 bales, mostly for Great Britain and France, but partly for the North. On Monday the movement was checked by the failure of the usual Liverpool telegrams until the afternoon, and when they came to hand, the news being regarded as unfavorable, the effect was decidedly depressing, although neutralized to some extent by an improvement of ⅛ per cent. in foreign exchange. The demand was accordingly slack for the rest of the day, and the business was confined to 2,000 bales, at prices showing no quotable decline, but indicating a further advantage on the side of the buyer. On Tuesday the market opened with only a moderate inquiry, and after the receipt of the Liverpool telegrams, although the unfavorable influence was again neutralized by a further advance of ⅛ per cent in foreign exchange, the demand showed very little spirit, and the movement continued languid throughout the day, resulting in sales of only 1,700 bales. Prices at the same time showed more irregularity, clean white cottons, and even running lists nearly or quite maintaining their previous position, while the poorer qualities were heavy and could not be moved unless at some concessions, varying at from ⅛ to ¼c.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 9,500 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 745,670 bales, against 563,601 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 141,878 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 1,679 bales to France, and a decrease of 287,903 to Great Britain, and of 20,850 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	25 to 25¼
Good ordinary	26¼ to 26¾
Low middling	27 to 27¾
Middling	28 to 28¼
Strict middling	28½ to —

SUGAR.—A fair demand has prevailed since our last review, and still firmer prices have been obtained. The sales on Saturday and Monday embraced 400 hogsheads, at 9 to 10c. per lb. for common, 11 to 12c. for fair, 12⅛ to 12½c. for good fair, 13¼ to 13½c. for fully fair, and 14c. for prime. On Tuesday 150 hogsheads sold at the foregoing prices. Of Cuba sugar, sales in store are being made, the particulars of which do not transpire. Refinery sugar is selling at 15½ to 16½c. for yellow clarified, 17 to 18c. for white, and 18 to 19c. for crushed and powdered.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

PARIS, April 15.—In reference to the appointments to foreign missions made by General Grant, the Evening Tribune observes that they have the unparalleled merit of including men entirely unknown to the diplomatic world. An exception must be made, however, in favor of Mr. Sandford, at Brussels, who has had the capital idea of naturalizing American cookery in Europe by giving several dinners consisting entirely of American products, such as fish, beef, mutton, poultry, game, vegetables, fruits, etc. These dinners have, in the absence of anything better, given a higher idea of American wealth and resources than anything done by Francis Adams, Reverdy Johnson, Motley, or Bancroft. They were substantial and pleasant, which cannot be said of the speeches and writings of the other American diplomats, impregnated with partisan spirit, wild theories and false statements. The Tribune concludes by stating that Mr. Sandford's appointment to Spain is the wisest of all those made by General Grant, especially at the moment when Spaniards are hungry and not particularly fastidious in the choice of their dishes.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—Nothing whatever new under the law authorizing the President to order elections in Virginia, Mississippi and Texas.

The sales of gold on sealed proposals every Thursday, until further orders, will be not less than half nor more than a million dollars.

The President returned from his visit to-night.

The distance between the approaching termini of the Pacific Railroad lines is twenty-five miles; the gap will be filled by the first of May.

The present situation of the Sprague-Abbott affair seems to be Sprague waiting Abbott's demand to take back the 'puppy,' and Abbott waiting Sprague's demand to take back the words 'Skulked from the Senate.' No fight in sight.

The Herald's Washington correspondent makes Abbott, who comes to the Senate from New Hampshire via North Carolina, say: 'Well, there need be no foll lolk about it. It has simply come to this, that Mr. Sprague must either retract or do worse. If I was from New England, perhaps I would put up with such insults meekly; but not being from that peaceful region, I shall take the liberty of settling the affair in another method.'

The Junta Patriotica de Cubanas met in New York on Thursday, with a large number in attendance. Mrs. H. W. Beecher was made a member. The account of the recent visit of the delegates to Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia elicited much interest. Extensive arrangements are perfected for the fair on the 27th instant.

LONDON, April 26.—The British minister at Pekin contradicts Burlingame's assertion that the Chinese desire progress. It is reported that Catholic missionaries and several hundred converts were massacred in the province of Sechneu, China.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 27.—It has been ascertained that the crew of the bark John Bright, wrecked in Nootka Sound, were murdered by the Indians. Several decapitated bodies of white men have been found. It is deemed necessary that the government should send a gunboat there for the protection of white settlers.

Visitors have commenced congregating in the vicinity of the end of the Central Pacific Railroad to witness the laying of the last rail and driving the last spike of the Pacific Railroad next Friday or Saturday.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—The Secretary of War has ordered the resumption of recruiting.

Secretaries Borio and Rawlins and the President held a consultation to-day. Object unknown.

Borie and Grant make an excursion down the Potomac to-morrow in the steamer Tallapoosa.

WAR WITH ENGLAND DESIRED.

WASHINGTON, April 26.—There have been mysterious hints thrown out of late by persons familiar with the designs of the unprincipled men who have usurped, in both houses of Congress, the control of the government, that 'we are soon to have another war.' This means, of course, a war with England, and the object of that war is to consolidate power in the hands of the present holders. An addition to the present debt of another thousand millions will be made by this war, which amount, (redeemable in gold,) parcelled out among the conspirators, will be sufficient, it is supposed, to augment their fortunes to a point sufficient to support the expense of the increased cost of living consequent upon their accession to the titles of nobility which are expected as a reward for their loyalty at the close of the war.

But how is this coveted war to be brought on? Simply by Mr. Motley making some absurd demand of the British government, and, on its refusal, demanding his passports, returning to America, and, with the aid of the conspirators, embroiling the two nations in a quarrel, which the aforesaid conspirators will take good care shall not be reconciled.

ENGLAND AND THE UNITED STATES.

The London Times, which almost never fails to reflect the public opinion and the national policy of England, has quite recently declared that 'this country (England) has gone to the extreme of concession in the matter of the Alabama claims;' and Lord Stanley, of the late British cabinet, one of the ablest and most popular foreign ministers which England has had, said in a recent speech: 'There has never been any question upon our side of offering reparation for willful and international wrong, because we do not admit, and we have no right to admit, that any such wrong ever was committed by us.' This does not look promising for a peaceful surrender on the part of the British government to the demand in question. Is the present administration at Washington prepared to press it to a warlike issue? We think there are good reasons for believing that it is not. What, then, must follow? A damaging retrogression in the face of the world on the part of the Grant administration.

And this is not all. England, if she proceeds promptly to ascribe the quality of belligerents to the Cubans, and to resent, if need be, the contrary assumption of Spain, will take the wind out of the sails of the United States with respect to the ultimate destination of Cuba, whose separation from Spain is only a question of time. The British government, seeing that Spain must at length lose Cuba, will naturally desire to secure the independence of the island in the manner least calculated to promote its future annexation to the United States, and most calculated to identify its destinies with English commercial as well as political interests. So much for one of the portents arising from the preposterous position taken at Washington in the Alabama controversy. Bulletin.

FOREIGN APPOINTMENTS.

There is great dissatisfaction in the Radical ranks respecting the appointments of General Grant, especially the foreign appointments. The New York Herald declares them the worst that ever were made. The Times, the Sun, and other Radical journals chime in, and the Tribune, which is evidently restrained by the apprehension that it will be suspected of giving expression to the natural chagrin of Horace Greeley, on account of his disappointment in securing a first class mission, weakly deprecates any too severe criticism of the President's selections, and begs that "Republicans, at least, will bear in mind the embarrassments of his position."

In the Senate there is an awful clamor over these appointments. Cameron, of Pennsylvania, always an intense Radical, and not suspected of fastidiousness in regard to the personnel of candidates for office, denounces the two principal appointees from his State as utterly incapable, dishonest and disreputable. Ross, of Nebraska, virtually charges that the appointee from his State is a thief and a drunkard. Others aver that a coarse and vulgar contractor and wagon master has been made to supersede an elegant and accomplished gentleman, thoroughly trained in diplomatic service and international law, and who has served with distinction in the war. We refer to General Fitz Henry Warren. Another very incompetent and offensive personage displaces that elegant scholar and refined gentleman, Mr. Harvey, at the court of Lisbon. Washburne, a very rough specimen of a Western Hoosier, takes General Dix's place in Paris.

THE RHODE ISLAND SENATOR.

Senator Sprague has not heretofore occupied a very exalted position in the country, nor even in the Senate. But he has latterly given proof that he possesses courage and ability in a remarkable degree, as well as a thorough comprehension of the financial condition of the country and of the people. He has given proof, too, that he intends to devote his powers and capacity to the true interests of the country, and particularly of the laboring masses. Thus far he has indicated only faintly the work which he proposes to do. But he bases his plans upon the great and undeniable fact that the business of the country is so oppressed by the burdens which Congress heaps upon it, that we are yearly getting poorer and poorer. We consequently have faith in his scheme. He promises to perfect it before the meeting of Congress in December; and to, meanwhile, conciliate the support of the people, who are, after all, the real rulers of this country, by explaining it to them. The chief idea of his plan is, that the capital of the country, which is now managed for the interest of the few, and the ruin of the many, may be so managed as to become the ally and friend of the laboring man. We shall await the Senator's developments with both interest and hope.—New York News.

THE possibility of a war with Cuba or England, growing out of recent legislative action at Washington, has had one good effect already, should no others result. The Navy Department, upon which so much treasure has been lavished, is now officially pronounced inferior to that of any fourth rate power. The self-examination thus prompted into our warlike efficiency has just developed some new facts at total variance with heretofore generally accepted opinion. The monitors, which were regarded during the war as triumphs of naval architecture, are pronounced by all experienced officers of the navy as totally useless for other than river and harbor defence, and notoriously inefficient even for that. Our great guns—the Rodman, the Parrot, the Dyer, the Dahlgren—the monsters we were led to regard as having done such effective service during the war, are now proved to have actually killed more friends than enemies; not one of them being capable of withstanding the rapid fire of the battle test over twenty rounds. Fifty were burst on Morris Island, killing and wounding all about them. And in the attack on Fort Fisher all the big guns burst, destroying four times the number injured by the enemy's projectiles. All this information comes at a happy moment, when Sumner and Banks are so anxious to eat up somebody, and rivaling the etiquette of Donnybrook in their desire for a free fight. Prudence is always the better part of valor, and in this case, as well as others which have preceded, it will probably be well to look before we leap.—New Orleans Times.

INFORMATION FOR MEDICAL MEN.—Our medical friends will remember that the American Medical Association will hold its twentieth annual session in the city of New Orleans, on the 4th of May.

The following, as to the rates of fare on the railroads and steamboats, has been furnished by Dr. Michel, president of the Alabama Medical Association, to the Montgomery Mail:

The Mobile and Ohio, the Louisville and Nashville, and Memphis and Louisville, the Selma, Rome and Dalton, the Lexington, Louisville, Macon and Western, Southwestern, Jackson and Great Northern, Mississippi Central, the South Carolina and Northeastern, the Milwaukee and St. Paul, the Montgomery and West Point, the Mobile and Montgomery, the Virginia and Tennessee, the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac, the Richmond and Petersburg, and Petersburg railroads, will return free on certificate of permanent secretary.

The Mobile and New Orleans steamers will issue excursion tickets for half fare.

CHICAGO is excited over the threatened loss of the grain trade, and is making earnest endeavors to have the railroad freights reduced to a point competitive with river transportation. Up to within a few weeks the efforts of the St. Louis merchants were rather sneered at, but the enthusiasm with which they have lately gone into the grain movement, creating in a few days a Protective Association with a capital of nearly a quarter of a million of dollars, has fully aroused Chicago to its danger. Various remedies and suggestions are made, but all hinge upon a reduction of railroad freights.—New Orleans Times.

FOR three years past the banks of England, France and Germany have contained $500,000,000 of unused, idle capital. During the same period the stream of gold has been steadily flowing through numberless channels from the United States into the same insatiable coffers.

IN SOME PARTS of Australia there has been a dronth for eighteen months past, causing great distress.

THE GRAIN MOVEMENT.

Those laws of nature are about to assert themselves which constitute water a cheaper highway of travel for heavy burdens than iron or stone, if we may judge from the earnestness with which the merchants of the upper and lower valley of the Mississippi are discussing the advantages of sending grain via this city to New York and Europe.

From an article in the New York Shipping List we clip the following:

St. Louis is making a bold strike for the grain trade of the West. Her position entitles her to great respect in the matter, and she evidently means to solve the problem of cheap freights by the Mississippi in a manner favorable to her interests. The president of the Mississippi Valley Transportation Company has purchased one hundred thousand bushels of wheat at points on the upper Mississippi, and has sent a tugboat and five barges up from St. Louis to bring it down. This wheat will be sent direct to Liverpool via New Orleans, and will be delivered at the latter port, it is stated, one cent cheaper than it could be taken from the Mississippi river to Chicago.

The St. Paul Press says:

There is just now considerable interest manifested throughout the valley of the Mississippi in regard to shipping wheat by way of New Orleans. A prominent wheat dealer here has just received a letter from a commission firm in New Orleans, who are operating an elevator at that port. They handled, between February 4 and April 7, three hundred thousand bushels of wheat, and every cargo of it went through in splendid order. They ship to Liverpool and other European ports, as well as to New York, and express the utmost confidence in the entire safety of shipping by that route. The subject of rival routes for grain is provoking a great deal of discussion in the newspapers of the West, and especially in Chicago and St. Louis, the two points most interested.

The St. Louis Republican says:

The shipments of grain below have begun in earnest, the tow which leaves to-morrow taking over fifty thousand bushels, twenty-seven thousand of which are shipped by Haenschen & Orthwein on their own account. Another house (Hamyer & Co.) have received an order for twenty thousand bushels more. Applications for tonnage are also increasing from above, the barge company to-day receiving an order from Winona.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE, No. 1299, for the week ending April 24, contains English Hymns since the Reformation, by Francis T. Palgrave, Good Words; Grimm and Cruikshank, Spectator; The Country House on the Rhine, part 23, by Berthold Auerbach, author of "On the Heights," etc., translated for the Living Age from Die Presse; Lettice Lisle, part 6, Cornhill Magazine; Children, London Review; Chaucer's England, London Review; Ernest Jones, Esq., Magazine of Biography; An Egyptian State Ball, Pall Mall Gazette; Chinese Charities, Public Opinion; The Chinese from Home, All the Year Round; besides short articles, and poetry.

The Living Age is issued every Saturday, giving fifty-two numbers, of sixty-four pages each, or more than three thousand double-column octavo pages of reading matter yearly. Subscription price, $8 a year, free of postage.

To new subscribers, remitting to the publishers for the year 1869, the Living Age is sent from the beginning of Auerbach's romance (No. 1,277, for November 21, 1868) to January 1, 1869, free of charge. Littell & Gay, publishers, 30 Bromfield street, Boston.

THE mayor of New York has issued a circular to the press of the United States cautioning the people against the various gift enterprises, lotteries, dollar stores, co-operative unions, and other schemes whose New York advertisements flood the country. Country newspapers who repeat the advertisements simply aid the swindle. Beware of them all. Be not the fool who parts speedily with his money. You may no more obtain two dollars for one than you may put a quart into a pint cup.—Northwestern Advocate.

GOLD.—The Concealed Wealth of Alabama Being Brought to Light.—Considerable excitement was produced on the streets, a few days ago, by the discovery of a deposit of some metalic substance so near like gold that if it is not the pure metal, it is difficult for the unitiated to detect the difference. Workmen engaged in excavating for the new building on the corner of Alabama and Broad streets, opposite the Times office, when some ten or fifteen feet below the surface, struck a bed of quartz or metalic formation which was pronounced by competent judges to be largely impregnated with gold. The substance was submitted to chemical test by Mr. Mitchie, the jeweler, and he is satisfied that, could it be found in sufficient quantities, it could be made valuable in the manufacture of jewelry. We examined specimens of the ore at his store, which had been experimented upon by him, and it bore the chemical tests almost equal to the pure metal.

We also examined at Mr. Mitchie's a massive ring, manufactured from a metal discovery at the Cahaba coal mines, which has the appearance of a bright eighteen karat gold, and which he told us had been worn for some time, and retained its color equal to the finest gold. The substance discovered here a few days ago is similar to that out of which this ring was manufactured, and Mr. Mitchie is going to submit it to the necessary process to determine its value. He has the ring and also specimens of the ore discovered here in his possession, and will cheerfully show them to those curious in such matters.—Selma Times.

TO A CORRESPONDENT of the Freeman's Journal, who asks "If the pope will be bound by the decisions of the coming Council of the Vatican," the editor replies:

"A General Council is not such, except presided over by the pope, in person or by delegates. No decree of a General Council is to be accepted by the Catholic Church till approved by the pope. The pope calls the prelates of the Catholic Church together, and their theologians, in order to consult and to deliberate. When this is all done, the pope decrees, and all the rest—cardinals, patriarchs, primates, archbishops and bishops—sign after him. The first one that would refuse would be branded as a schismatic or heretic."

Can any one doubt, who reads this, that the Jesuit order controls Romanism, and its press in this country? In Europe, however, they will find there is a ground swell among the masses, even of the Romish Church, that will strand Jesuitism high and dry among the rubbish of the past; and it will not be strange if it should manifest itself in the approaching council.

MR. THACKERAY'S WIFE.—Mr. Thackeray shared with some of his literary brethren of England the misfortune of suffering great affliction through his wife. Without being actually insane, she was liable to sudden attacks of mental disturbance, which took the strange turn of driving her, with irresistible force, to some Methodist conventicle, where her over-excited mind found vent and relief in passionate shouting and screaming. Her tender husband having been told that to prevent her forcibly from attending such meetings would only aggravate the evil, overcame his strong distaste to all such displays, and not only allowed her to go, but insisted upon one of her daughters accompanying her to the chapel. "Their place is by their mother's side," he said, simply; and he had the satisfaction to know that his unfortunate wife was thus protected against attacks of greater violence and the dangers incident to such night meetings in London, while his self-sacrifice gave him the hearty sympathy and sincere respect of his friends.—Lippincott's Magazine.

A LITTLE BOY in Jamaica called on the missionary, and stated that he had lately been very ill, and often wished his minister had been present to pray with him.

'But, Thomas,' said the missionary, 'I hope you prayed yourself.'

'O, yes, sir.'

'Well, but how did you pray?'

'Why, sir, I begged.'

Our Book Agent and his Plans.

Let me give your readers a scrap of history in connection with Dr. Redford's last proposition for paying the debt of the Publishing House.

It was a bold step in the management of the old Book Concern, under Dr. Emory, to abolish the commission system, and to establish one based on an actual sales' principle. His success from 1828 to 1832 is thus told by the late Bishop Waugh:

"At that time the Concern was indebted upward of $100,000, more than two-thirds of which was at interest. The two great objects which Dr. Emory aimed first to accomplish, were the extinguishment of the debts due from the Concern, and the sale of the stock on hand, and especially that part of it which was daily depreciating. The ability, skill, diligence, and perseverance which he displayed in the measures devised by him for the accomplishment of these objects, have perhaps never been surpassed by the most practiced business men. His success was complete. Before the meeting of the General Conference he had canceled all the obligations of the institution which had been so opportunely intrusted to his supervision. He had purchased several lots of ground, and had erected a large four-story brick building as a part of the improvements intended to be put on them, for the whole of which he had paid. It was his high honor, and also his enviable satisfaction, to report to the General Conference, for the first time, that its Book Concern was no longer in debt."

From this it appears that other Methodist publishing houses have been in debt before ours, and more than ours.

That a Methodist preacher, as agent, had the business skill to work out.

Our book agent can repeat this history, if the church will rally to his help. The time is not far off till General Conference, but I think his heart is set on making a report like his memorable predecessor of forty years ago. I know something of his plans, and have seen something of their working. There is already about the Publishing House an air of life, of stir, of business, of animation among wheels, presses, workmen and clerks, such as I have not seen before since the war.

Let every member take stock in the agent's last proposition, and there will be a report in twelve months to his honor as well as ours.

But this is not to be done without the reasonable help he invokes. He has put the matter within reach of all. If we can only buy a hymn book for each pew in the church, or for each member of the family—if we can buy but a hymn book each for himself, or its equivalent, the work is done. How many of our homes, and shelves, and tables are bookless! This circulation of good books makes the means as valuable morally as the end is financially.

It is not a long pull our agent asks, but a short, quick one; not a strong pull, so much as a pull all together. Can't we give it to him, and see the end of this debt, and make an epoch for our Publishing House? Mr. Editor, I hope the Advocates will keep it before the people.

PERSONAL.—Rev. Dr. McAnally we had the pleasure to meet in our office. All our readers will be glad to hear that he is in excellent health. His pastoral work, and the educational enterprise in which his excellent children are associated with him at Carondelet, he is prosecuting with satisfactory results. He has, also, an appointment over the river in the bounds of the Illinois Conference. The society there, like several others in this country, now flourishing churches, was founded by him in pursuance of a Pauline rule to strike out in directions other than "another man's line of things made ready to hand." He is on a visit to New Madrid to dedicate a new church on the 18th instant.—St. Louis Advocate.

THE New York and the New York East Conferences have greatly honored themselves in honoring several of the veterans who linger to bless them. Rev. Heman Bangs, after fifty-four years of effective service as an itinerant minister, in the seventy-ninth year of his age, has asked and obtained a superannuated relation. He was presented, through Rev. J. M. Buckly, with $3,000 as a token of undying esteem of both laity and ministers. Many of his brethren spoke on the occasion and tears flowed plentifully.

WOMAN'S WORK.

Darning little stockings
For restless little feet;
Washing little faces,
To keep them fresh and sweet;
Hearing Bible lessons,
Teaching catechism;
Praying for salvation
From heresy and schism—
Woman's work!

Sewing on the buttons,
Overseeing rations,
Soothing, with a kind word,
Others' lamentations;
Guiding clumsy Bridgets,
Coaxing sullen cooks,
Entertaining company
And reading recent books—
Woman's work!

Burying out of sight
Her own unhealing smarts;
Letting in the sunshine
On other clouded hearts;
Binding up the wounded,
Healing of the sick;
Bravely marching onward
Through dangers dark and thick—
Woman's work!

Leading little children
And blessing manhood's years;
Showing to the sinful
How God's forgiveness cheers;
Scattering sweet roses
Along another's path;
Smiling by the wayside,
Content with what she hath—
Woman's work!

Letting fall her own tears
Where only God can see;
Wiping off another's
With tender sympathy;
Learning by experience,
Teaching by example;
Yearning for the gateway,
Golden, pearly, ample—
Woman's work!

At last cometh silence—
A day of deep repose;
Her locks smoothly braided,
Upon her breast a rose;
Lashes resting gently
Upon the marble cheek:
A look of blessed peace
Upon the forehead meek.

The hands softly folded,
The kindly pulses still;
The cold lips know no smile,
The noble heart no thrill;
Her pillow needs no smoothing,
She craveth for no care—
Love's tenderest entreaty
Wakes no responses there.

A grave in the valley,
Tears, bitter sobs, regret;
Another lesson taught,
That life may not forget;
A face forever hidden,
A race forever run;
"Dust to dust," the preacher saith,
And woman's work is done.

The Pulpit as Viewed from a Pew.

NUMBER ONE.

MR. EDITOR: It has been my pleasure to read the minutes of the fifth session of the Montgomery Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and, like others, we are constrained to believe that they deserve more than an ordinary attention. They suggest an important inquiry—one that requires for its solution our careful consideration: Why has so little been accomplished where so much has been needed?

The pulpit and press of the church unite in referring, as the cause of a want of success in the enlargement of our borders, to the indifference manifested by the membership in their contributions for the support of the Gospel. We are prepared to acknowledge that too much truth attaches to this charge; but does it stop here? It is said there is sometimes "a power behind the throne," a power often stronger than the throne itself, and to it would we refer much of the influence retarding the progress of the church. It is not the part of wisdom to close our eyes to any exhibit affecting the interests of the church. Rather should we carefully investigate every influence affecting her interests and seek the application of every means calculated to enlarge and strengthen her power for good. We would, therefore, approach the subject in no illiberal or censorious spirit, but would survey the ground on which we stand with a view to the development of truth, and, as found, would attempt to appropriate its teachings to the accomplishment of more satisfactory results.

An analysis of the minutes presents us with an array of facts and figures that it will be well for us to consider. In connection with the itinerant work of the Conference there are about one hundred effective preachers. For their support the church has contributed $41,878. In addition to this the collections for church purposes within the Conference have been $19,922, aggregating $61,800 for all purposes during the year. With this expenditure on the part of the church the unwelcome return is made of a decrease of two hundred and fifty-four in church membership, of one thousand and sixty-five in adult baptisms, and of eight hundred and seventy-nine in Sabbath school scholars. This return we say is an unwelcome one, because calculated to create the apprehension that the church, losing its aggressive character, is scarcely able to maintain the vantage ground already secured.

The decrease in membership is, indeed, an unpalatable truth, and some seek to excuse it on the ground that emigration is draining the church of its strength. Can we admit the plea? If correct, other Conferences would exhibit a corresponding gain. Unfortunately, however, their statistical tables will not suffer abatement without incurring the charge that attaches to our own. The truth is, our population is not more unstable than before any sinister influence disturbed the peace of the country, and during the last decade the United States census exhibits the fact that the influx of population into the State exceeded the removals hence some three or four per cent. per annum. If this ratio was now maintained the church ought to receive from this source alone contributions to her membership annually of from six hundred to one thousand.

But suppose we go behind the published exhibit of church progress for evidences of a loss of an aggressive spirit. Make, if you will, a critical survey of the membership within the limit of your observation, and then answer the inquiries: Has not the standard of personal piety been reduced? Have not too many of our members been content with a nominal position in the church—a position that would limit their efforts to the observance of obligations that rise but little above the negative injunctions of the decalogue, to the disregard of the affirmative duties pertaining to Christian character? Does not the diminished attendance upon public worship indicate spiritual declension? Does it not require unusual exertion to secure their co-operation in any and all the agencies employed by the church to advance the cause of Christianity? The ministry of the church are in accord with us in giving an affirmative answer to these questions, and when associated with the published results of a year's labor we fail to discern the evidences of an aggressive spirit, of progress and improvement.

There is a solution to this state of affairs in the church, and in continuation of the subject we offer you a few thoughts in the direction, at least, of its partial accomplishment.

A CHURCH STEWARD.

ATTAUGAVILLE, ALA., April 14, 1869.

MANUSCRIPT SERMONS.—Bp. Meade, of Virginia, at the commencement of his preaching, used no notes in the pulpit; but subsequently he wrote all his sermons, and was much confined to his manuscripts. It is related of him that when he was preparing a book on the old preachers and families of Virginia he asked Mr. Andrew Hunter, of Jefferson county, Virginia, to give him some anecdotes for the work. Mr. Hunter said, 'Well, bishop, I have only one, and that is about yourself.' 'Let us have it, then,' said the prelate. Mr. Hunter then told the following:

'Many years ago, when this valley of Virginia was a much wilder country than now, you preached here in Jefferson county. You used no notes on that occasion. A certain hunter, distinguished for his skill with the rifle, and who had a supreme contempt for a man who required 'a rest' from which to shoot, was in the congregation and listened attentively to you. You were your clerical robes, and he was struck with the strange dress, as he had not heard many Episcopal preachers. After the sermon some one asked him how he liked the preacher. 'He's a right down good preacher,' said the hunter; 'and, by the way, he's the only one of them petticoat preachers that I ever heard that could preach without a rest.'"—United Presbyterian.

'OH, DEAR SIR,' says Brainerd in writing to a friend, 'do not think it enough to live at the rate of common-place Christianity.'

VALID BAPTISM.

BY CHARLES WHITING.

Several years ago an individual was received into a Baptist church upon a Pedo baptist immersion.—Some time after she became dissatisfied with her baptism. She now lives in the vicinity of another church, and many miles from the church of which she is still a member.

Must she return to the church of which she is a member, and be regularly baptized, or shall she relate the facts in the case to the church in the vicinity of which she lives, and be baptized? BAPTIST.

I believe there are many ministers in our State who favor the reception of persons into the churches who have been baptized by Pedobaptists and Campbellites.

Question 1. Would any of these churches or ministers be willing that a Pedo-baptist or Campbellite minister should join their church and go out preaching and baptizing without Baptist ordination?

2. Would they be willing that any of the above named ministers should come into their churches and administer their baptism for them?

3. Would any of them be willing to retain in fellowship any Baptist minister who would preach that infants were proper subjects of baptism, and that sprinkling was baptism?

4 Would any of them be willing to retain any minister in their fellowship who would teach that baptism is regeneration?

Who will answer?

J. B. BOX.

The foregoing articles were handed me by the editors of the Central, with the request that I would furnish an answer. Simply because I love the paper, its editors, and the cause they represent, I offer an answer, as follows:

As several of the foregoing questions seem to require no answer, I shall content myself with answering this one: Is the immersion of a proper subject in water, by a Pedobaptist minister, a valid baptism. I answer, yes. I shall endeavor to sustain the position in five papers, published in consecutive numbers of the Central.

The Baptists who tell us that baptism is invalid except the administrator is possessed of certain qualifications, differ widely among themselves as to what constitutes the qualifications. Now if it is necessary that the administrator be himself immersed, then, in order to a valid baptism, we must have a line of men, each baptized by the one before him, connecting us with the apostles, which is the doctrine of apostolic succession, the mechanical church idea. What may be the future fate of this doctrine I will not prophesy. The fact with regard to the past is, that whenever it has obtained, in any one of its many forms, its spiritual life has soon been crushed out.

However, if this is the want, the Greek church can furnish us with just such a line, and he who believes that, outside of that church, he can point out such a connected line, should take to the study of logic and history before he plays the theologian.

"But do you not believe that Christ has always had a visible church in the world?" I do. But I am sure we cannot connect them together, and I very much doubt whether they were connected. Now I do not propose to edit an edition of Sartor Resartus, and yet I must ask these questioners a question.—Would you, brethren of the necessary qualification party, accept the baptisms of the Greek church? And is it logical to turn away from the line which we know exists there, and trust to one which we only hope has an existence?

Again, if this is the qualification, the baptism of the Reformers is equally valid with ours, for Mr. Campbell and those who went out with him were baptized by Baptists.

The line has been broken once already in this country by Roger Williams, and although it has been asserted—but no shadow of proof offered—that Williams' church sent out no ministers, yet it is almost incredible that none of the great number he baptized became preachers; if they did, then it comes to pass that all who trace back through them are themselves unbaptized, and it might be that the very brethren whose questions elicited these remarks are incompetent to administer baptism.

But if, as some seem to intimate, it is necessary to a valid baptism that the administrator have proper views of the design of baptism, then our case is absolutely hopeless, for it is notorious that many of those bodies of Christians through whom Orchard and Benedict trace back, held and taught the doctrine of baptismal regeneration.

The pastor of a Baptist church has taught, through the Central, the doctrine that sins are pardoned in baptism, with a clearness which few Reformers would care to imitate. Shall we refuse to receive those who come from his church?

If either of these qualifications I have mentioned are necessary to a valid baptism, the chances are one to one thousand that none of us are baptized.—Central Baptist.

THE PEW SYSTEM.

AN UNANSWERABLE ARGUMENT AGAINST IT

Bishop Atkinson, of North Carolina, is in favor of free and open churches. With much point he inquires:

How can we become the church of the people unless we open our doors to the people? There are other things which we ought to do, but this we cannot afford to leave undone; we must have free and open churches. There must not be a man standing at the door and saying, 'Pay your rent or you cannot go in.' It may be said people ought to be willing to pay their rent and then they could go in.—But to this there is a twofold answer:

1. That it is not everybody who is able to do this, however willing. It is not every seamstress, not every street laborer, who could pay the pew rent of one of our churches which may happen to be near them, and which they would like to attend if they could. It is probable that the poor woman whom our Saviour commended so highly for casting in her two mites to the treasury of the temple would not have been allowed to enter the temple had that Jewish building been managed on the principles of one of our splendid modern Christian churches. Nay, it may be questioned whether, without a miracle, our Saviour himself and His apostles could have entered into the temple if thus managed, and of course it is doubtful, or rather it is very certain, that if He were now on earth, as He once was, He could not without a miracle go as a constant worshiper to one of the very churches which are called by His name, where His precepts are continually read, and men are taught there is salvation only by following Him. Could the apostles, if they were now on earth in the same condition as when they were on earth—could they attend one of our apostolic churches?

But I said that there was a twofold answer to the objection that churches need not be free and open, because men ought to be willing to pay their dues. My first answer was, that men, even the best men, might be willing and not able. The second is, that churches are built, not for men who do what they ought to do, but for men who will not do what they ought to do. If a man be avaricious and worldly-minded and unbelieving, that is not a reason why he should be kept from church, but rather the very reason why he should be invited and urged to go, that he may learn to repent of these sins and to forsake them. 'The whole need not a physician, but they that are sick.' 'Jesus Christ came not to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance.' It may, however, be said that there are mission chapels for the poor. Not very many, however, in proportion to our entire number. And to send the poor man to a mission chapel—is it not very much like saying to him, as St. James forbids us to say, 'Stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool?'

"ABOMINATION" MUSIC.—The church music abomination is, we are glad to see, attracting attention in quarters in which a different order of thinking and speaking has usually prevailed. We find the following in a newspaper account of the Sabbath services in a free Episcopal church in Brooklyn: "Bishop Littlejohn, in his address to the congregation, said that the Episcopal churches of Brooklyn were now paying from $20,000 to $25,000 for paid singers, and asked the very pertinent question, 'What was got for all that expenditure of money?'—Some very superior musical talent; but that, so far as the work of the church was concerned, was almost worthless. The singers were without sympathy with the work entrusted to them, and it ought to be done by the people of God themselves. Those who cultivate their musical talents for the benefit of their own homes ought to consecrate the culture so obtained to the service of God on the Sabbath. With the $25,000 now annually expended for that purpose in this city he pledged himself to revolutionize the whole policy, life and movement of that branch of the church in this community." We have heard of certain occurrences in some of our fashionable churches that seem to prove the bishop's statement that the singers have no religious sympathy with the services of the church. In a certain Methodist church that runs a quartette, on one summer Sabbath evening the service was unexpectedly stopped by the sudden illness of the preacher, and the help of music was called for a little earlier than usual. But it then appeared that the performers were not at their posts, and after due search they were found in a neighboring ice cream saloon.—New York Christian Advocate.

I AM NEVER ALONE.

An old man sat in his easy chair. He was alone. His eyes were so dim that he could not read the printed page—he had long ceased to hear any common sound, and it was only in broken whispers that he could hold communion with those around, and often hours passed by in which the silence of his thought was not broken by an outward voice. He had outlived his generation—one by one the companions of his boyhood and youth had been laid in the grave, until none remained of all those he had once known and loved. To those to whom the future is one bright path of hope, and happiness, and social love; how unenviable seemed his condition—how cheerless his days!

I have said he was alone. A gentle and thoughtful child stole into his silent room, and twined her arm lovingly around his neck. "I feared you would be lonely, dear grandfather," said she, "and so I came to sit awhile with you. Are you not very lonely here, with no one to speak to or to love?" The old man paused for a moment, and laid his hand upon the head of the gentle child. "I am never lonely, my child," he said. "How can I be lonely, for God is with me? The Comforter comes from the Father to dwell in my soul, and my Saviour is ever near to cheer and instruct me. I sit at His feet and learn of Him: and though pain and sickness often come to warn me that this earthly house of my tabernacle is soon to be dissolved, I know that there is prepared for me a mansion, the glories of which no tongue can tell, no heart conceive. The love of God is like living water to my soul. Seek in your youth this fountain, my child. Drink deep of its living waters, and then when your hair shall be whitened for the grave, when all sources of earthly enjoyment are taken away, you, too, can say, 'I am never alone.'"

Let this testimony of an aged and devoted servant of Christ sink deep into the heart of every child who reads these lines. Seek while in youth the source of that consolation which can be your joy in sickness, in trial, and in solitude—your stay when all earthly helps have failed. Then will it be your blessed privilege to say, "I, too, am never alone."—Christian Citizen.

MILTON AND OWEN.

John Milton and John Owen were both Christians—both devout, both unceremonial, both advocating a wide liberty of conscience, both averse to prelacy and to all Presbyterian domination, both entertaining in general the same views of government, political and ecclesiastical; yet how unlike in many other respects! the one exhibiting in his religion the genius of a poet, the other the genius of a systematic theologian; the one soaring with outstretched wings into the loftiest regions of Divine contemplation, the other measuring every opinion by the standard of a remorseless logic, based upon Scripture; the one inspired with classic taste, chiseling the products of his intellect into forms of beauty, comparable to those of Phidias in the art of sculpture, the other careless respecting artistic style, and flinging out the treasures of his affluent mind after a fashion which is most excruciating to the æsthetical of this generation; the one a man of imagination, the other a man of reason; the one a Homer, the other an Aristotle among Puritans.

And as they differed in their manner of thinking, so also they differed in their modes of feeling and in their habits of life; the religious sentiments of Milton being calm and pure, with something in their tone almost approaching to angelic elevation, bearing scarcely any marks of such struggles as beset most other Christians, and suggesting the idea that his chief conflicts of soul must have been with "spiritual wickedness in high places;" Owen, on the other hand, dwelling much upon "the mortification of sin in believers," "the doctrine of justification," "the work of the Holy Spirit in prayer," and "the glory of Christ," and ever indicating the strongest faith and the intensest feeling upon those evangelical points respecting which some defect may be traced in the religion of Milton; and while Milton was solitary in his devotion, at least during the latter part of his life, as in this respect, as in others, was "like a star and dwelt apart," Owen delighted in social worship.—Rev. J. Stoughton's "Ecclesiastical History of England."

THE GREAT AMERICAN BASIN.

Rev. A. M. Stewart's lecture on this subject, in Allegheny, is reported as one of unusual interest. Mr. Stewart has had good opportunities of acquiring a knowledge of it, and he has the capability of putting it in form to be communicated to others. Mrs. Swinehelm, who heard the lecture, has made the following report of it in the Commercial:

"His subject was principally the Great Basin, better known as the Great American Desert, lying between the Rocky mountain range and that of the Sierra Nevada, in which there is little or no rain, because the clouds coming from the Pacific are broken and dissolved by the peaks of the Sierra Nevada, and those from the Atlantic by the Rocky range—a great basin into which large rivers are poured, from which no stream escapes—in which there are mountains two miles high, cities of thousands of inhabitants, built in a few months; lakes, like the Dead Sea, in which the human body will not sink: mirages of rippling water, made by the reflection of salt and soda crystals, and pasturage for all the cattle in the United States. Flax in abundance, and rye whose heads one foot long, grow where the soil dry as the dryest ashes, and ten feet below the surface.

In his observations of this great desert Mr. Stewart claims to have discovered the secret of the mystery of the very manna on which the children of Israel brought over Jordan after their forty years' wanderings on the Great Desert of Arabia, and insists that our desert is capable of sustaining, by its agricultural resources, a population as large as that of China. He has collected and exhibits specimens of the vegetable and mineral products of that region, which fully sustain his opinion that it is God's great treasure house, from which will supply the wants of hundreds of millions of people for many centuries to come.

PULPIT STYLE.

There are far worse dangers to be apprehended in the modern pulpit oratory than familiar illustrations and honest, plain English. Firing over the heads of a congregation is a far more common fault, and much more excusable, than firing points blank into their consciences, even with some slight risk of falling into the coarse and grotesque.

Rowland Hill—who certainly did not himself sin on the side of over-refinement—was right enough when he said, "I don't like your mighty fine preachers, who so delicately round off all their periods that they roll off the sinner's conscience."

"When I preach," said he, "I sink myself deeply in it. I regard neither doctors nor masters, of whom there are many in the church above forty; but I have an eye to the multitude of young people, children and servants, of whom there are more than a thousand."

It is hardly too much to say that two-thirds of every sermon that is preached is practically unintelligible to an audience of working men. Neither the words nor the ideas, nor the formation of the sentences, are what they are accustomed to. It is quite true that such audiences by no means object to fine language, if sometimes delivered; and there are plenty of stories current as to the astounding effect of a sounding polysyllable, or even a scrap of Latin, upon ignorant hearers. But if the pulpit trumpet is to call to the battle of life it must at least utter an intelligible sound. Sermons, even more than prayers and catechisms, must be in the "vulgar tongue" if they are to have an practical effect on the masses. It has been one of the laments over the Church of England that she is "dying of gentility;" but those who have listened to preachers of whom her pale know that the Dissenting pulpit is not a whit more free from the faults of an inflated style and "genteel" vocabulary.

SIR WALTER RALEIGH,

THE ARABELLA PLOT.

During the first three months of James' reign a very sharp struggle for power took place; the men in office wishing to keep in, the men out of office trying to get in. Cecil, Howard, Ellingham, were in; Raleigh, Cobham, Northumberland, were out. Those who were in were the men of peace; those who were out were the men of war. Each party accused the other of foul play, of setting up pretenders, of intriguing with foreign courts. The men in power had the great advantage over their rivals of material strength; of having in their control the fleet, the guards, the bench, the Tower, and the block.

A dozen mad schemes were known to be on foot, any one of which might be called a plot, should Sir Robert Cecil see cause to arrest a fricad. Cobham was prattling of Arabella. Percy was sulking at Sion. Grey wanted favors for the Puritans. Watson and Clarke, two seminary priests, were eager to serve the pope. Copley, one of Cecil's spies, who lived in the best Catholic society, kept his master informed of all these movements; so that when Cecil struck his blow the Tower was pretty nigh filled with victims; among whom he counted Sir Walter Raleigh, Lord Cobham, Lord Grey, of Wilton, Sir Griffin Markham, George Bromke, a younger brother of Lord Cobham, Anthony Copley, the spy, and the two secular priests, William Watson and William Clarke.

Lord Cobham had lodgings in the lieutenant's house; but the contriver of what Cecil called the Arabella plot was kept in close confinement, with only a single servant to wait upon him day and night.

Few things in the story of our State prison strike the imagination like the change which a few days of sharp privation wrought in the character of this rich and powerful peer. When out of peril, Cobham appeared to be frank and fair.—Faults he had in plenty; but his vices were those of a warm and generous nature: pride in his house, heat in his blood, an insatiable greed of gold, an unconquerable lust of power. Yet a few weeks of sharp privation broke his spirit. In the court he had been a bold and saucy baron; in the Tower he became a mean and abject serf. He knew that the judges and councillors who came down to question him could not torture him on account of his nobility; but he also knew that these judges and councillors could take away his life; and life was a thing which this degenerate bearer of the name of Cobham prized above either an easy conscience or a stainless name.

To the great misfortune of Raleigh, this rich court friend was connected by marriage with the families of Howard and of Cecil, both of whom might hope to profit by his death. His wife was sent to tell him that his only hope of saving his neck was to bring about Raleigh's ruin; and when Cecil, the chief of his inquisitors, told him the odious lie that Raleigh had accused him of high treason in the matter of Arabella, he pronounced the very words which Cecil wanted from his lips. If he were guilty of high treason, he said, Raleigh was guilty too, since he had been a partaker in all his plans. Cecil knew that the second lie was like the first; but knowing the value of lies to a clever and unscrupulous lawyer, he sent Cobham's falsehood to the attorney general, Sir Edward Coke.

Raleigh found means to communicate with Cobham in the lieutenant's house. In fact he made a friend of Peyton's son, also called Sir John, by whom messages were carried between the two prisoners. Cobham, looking out of his room, saw young Peyton standing in the garden talking to Raleigh at a window, and when the young man came to see him, two or three hours later, he cried out: "I saw you with Sir Walter Raleigh. God forgive him! He hath accused me; but I cannot accuse him." Peyton replied, "That is what he says of you. You have accused him; but he cannot accuse you."

Next day (as it would seem) Cecil came down to the Tower, with a view to complete his case for Coke by a final examination of Cobham. To his amazement Cobham retracted every word which he had said. Raleigh had nothing to do with his plots; had never adopted Arabella's claims; had never spoken of Spanish help. Under such a change, the council, as Count de Beaumont wrote to Henri, found it very difficult to proceed in the charge.

Then came out a mysterious rumor that the great offender had laid hands upon himself. For some days it had been whispered in court and city that Raleigh was morose and proud; a prey to melancholy thoughts and restive dreams, as though he were aching of some inward sore. At length the rumor ran that Raleigh, sitting at Peyton's table, as his custom was, had snatched up a knife, bared his breast, and plunged the steel into his flesh. He was not dead. The point had struck on a bone and glanced aside from the vital part; on which Raleigh had thrown away the weapon, crying, "There, an end."

For reasons which may be guessed, the court desired this bruit to spread. Cecil spoke of it, and wrote of it, to several persons. He told the tale to Signor Molino, embassador from the Doge of Venice; he wrote it to Sir Thomas Parry, his agent at the court of Henri the Great. Of course he sent the news to James, who was in the country. James was highly pleased, for an attempt at suicide seemed to him proof of Sir Walter's guilt. James wrote back to Cecil, "Let him be well probed; have a good preacher with you; and make him see that it is his soul he should wound and not his body."

It is impossible to believe this story true. Raleigh never spoke of an attempt on his own life. Cecil dropped the tale when it had served his turn. Coke, though straining every act and word of the accused into the vile suggestion that he cared for neither God nor devil, passed over this damning proof. Had the tale been true, would not Coke have told it in open court?

Again, if such a man as Raleigh had wished to kill himself, how could he have failed? A man has choice of a thousand deaths, and Raleigh was familiar with them all. He had knives in his cell. He had about him spirits and poisons of many sorts. He could have opened a vein; he could have thrown himself from the wall. Raleigh knew that nothing is easier than for a willing mind to part with life.—When, in his later troubles, Wilson spoke of seizing his jars and simples on the ground that he might some day poison himself and escape from justice, Raleigh answered with contempt, "Why, man, if I wished to die, could I not dash my head against that wall?"

A few years ago a letter was printed, for the first time, pretending to be written by Raleigh to his wife, which seemed to support Cecil's tale. That letter is not only a forgery, but a very impudent forgery.

Its purpose was, not to sustain the lie about Raleigh's project of suicide, but to taint his name as an unfaithful husband to his wife. Of course that letter was not read on the trial; of course it is only a copy; and equally of course the original is not known. The copy was found among a lawyer's papers; a lawyer who was employed against Raleigh in his later days; and the paper was probably one of the countless forgeries which his enemies had the baseness to prepare, but not the hardihood to produce.

Many persons suspected that the rumor of suicide was sent abroad as a test of public feeling. James was afraid of Raleigh's name. "I ha' heard rawly of thee, mon," was his first greeting of the hero of Cadiz and Guiana. Indeed, that name was a power in the land before which a bolder prince than James might have bent his brows. During Raleigh's first restraint in the Brick tower Elizabeth had been moved by reports of his amazing credit with her fleet. As a seaman, Raleigh stood alone. Essex owned in him a master; and Effingham, though bearing the rank of Lord High Admiral of England, had been seen to pay him the extraordinary homage of wiping the dust from his shoes. If the king's advisers meant to "cut the throat" of such a man, it may have been thought wise to learn how a report of his sudden death in the Tower would be received in the city, in the fleet, and in foreign courts.

The result was probably such as to dissuade them from using violent means. We hear no more of Raleigh being probed. Cecil came to see him, without bringing the godly preacher who was to search into his soul. In three or four days the prisoner was reported well. Then Sir John Peyton was dismissed from his great office, and a new and less scrupulous lieutenant, Sir George Harvey, was installed in his house.

The Peytons being sent away, as men unequal to their trust, a duel began between Cecil and Raleigh for the possession of Cobham's soul. The prize was not much; not worth either the inquisitor's craft or the statesman's skill; but fate had given into the hands of that weak and angry peer the power of either saving or destroying by a word the greatest hero in his native land.

Raleigh and Cecil were not ill matched; for if one had incomparably the finer genius, the other had incomparably the deeper craft. But Cecil was free while his antagonist lay bound. Cecil was a minister who could send Cobham to the block; Raleigh was a fallen man, who could do him neither good nor harm. Yet Raleigh fought it out. If he could get at Cobham he might work upon his deeper and better feelings. How was he to get at Cobham? The new lieutenant was Cecil's creature; a man of low, serpentine ways; not radically wicked, yet fit for work of which a downright villain would have been ashamed. When Raleigh saw that he could do nothing with Sir George, he made a serviceable friend of Sir George's son; a brave lad, through whom he kept up an irregular correspondence with Cobham, who had been lately moved from the lieutenant's house to the more distant and lonely Wardrobe tower.

A few weeks of harsh confinement in the Tower had so far unstrung Cobham's moral fibre that he answered each of his questioners with a different tale; one day charging Raleigh with a guilty knowledge of his designs; next day drawing back that charge as a monstrous lie; a third day whining over a weakness which he could not help; a fourth day going back to his original accusation, adding to it, blackening it; then, after a brief interval, on a fresh appeal to his moral sense, retracting every word that he had spoken when the fit of fear was on his soul. It was a sight to see. In the presence of men who held his life in their hands this English Claudio, dazed by mortal terror, answered all questions as they bade him by their looks and tones. Still he could not stick to these lies when they were sworn. On Raleigh's remonstrance he withdrew his accusations, calling God to witness that now, and now only, he spoke the truth. Young Harvey brought this answer from the Wardrobe to the Bloody tower.

Raleigh knew that his young and devoted helper ran much risk in carrying messages to the Wardrobe tower; and when the time of his trial drew near he employed his own servant, William Cottrel, to take an apple, into which he had put a note, and, watching his happy chance when no one saw him, to throw it into Cobham's room. This note contained a passionate prayer to Cobham that, for love of God, and the sake of his wife and children, he would tell the truth in writing, so that his last confession could be read in court. The Wardrobe tower, to which Cobham had been sent, was in a lonely quarter, looking on the queen's garden. Cottrel threw in his apple and received an answer to his master's message. That answer contained these words in Cobham's hand:

"To clear my conscience, satisfy the world, and free myself from the cry of your blood, I protest, upon my soul, and before God and His angels, I never had conference with you in any treason; nor was ever moved by you to the thing I hereto fore accused you of. * * * And so God deal with me and have mercy on my soul, as this is true."

These words were penned four days before the prisoners left the Tower for Winchester. One week later Cobham was in that city among his inquisitors, who persuaded him to declare that these last words sent to Raleigh had been got from him by artifice, and that they were not true!

Yet Cobham had made a statement to Sir George Harvey of the same kind, and of his own free will. He had told Sir George that Raleigh knew nothing about his plot. This free and independent declaration of Raleigh's innocence Sir George Harvey kept back until the trial was over and the verdict given, when he told it in confidence to Cecil.

A rare lieutenant of the Tower!—Her Majesty's Tower, by W. H. Dixon.

Retirement of the Rev. Hsman Bangs.

Rev. Heman Bangs, venerable in years, but more venerable for the history and success he embodies in his long, laborious and eventful life, rose before his Conference (the New York East,) on the morning of the third day of its session, in Middletown, Connecticut, to ask for a change of relation from effective to superannuated. He is in his seventy-ninth year, but has maintained a hale and vigorous constitution during the long period of fifty-four years of the most arduous ministerial life in the Methodist Church, until some time last fall, when he received severe injury from a fall on stepping out of a street car.

In making his request before his Conference, he gave a few statements of personal experience which deserve to be remembered. As nearly as we could follow him, he said:

"I come before you to ask a favor. I always knew the time must come; but I ever dreaded it. I didn't want to die before my time; but I suppose I must take another relation. I don't want to hang by the ears. If you can make me well, so that I can do effective work, why I will stay as I am. But you can not do it. Physicians cannot do it. I met with an accident last fall, and it has greatly injured me. I suppose it is my heavenly Father's method to bring me home. I am going. I am not afraid. I was converted to God when I was only ten years old. But I did not hold out faithful. I was reclaimed when I was about eighteen years old. And I was called to preach as soon as I was converted. I knew it; but I was afraid. They wanted to give me an exhorter's license, but I would not take it for fear I should have to preach. My brother Nathan wrote me about the matter, and warned me not to make any matrimonial engagement, lest it should block up my way. I was then apprenticed to a blacksmith, and I determined, as soon as my time of service was up, I would marry, and so end it. And I did—the very day I was out of my time. On the day of our marriage I asked my wife: 'Suppose you should marry a man who must either be a Methodist preacher or go to hell, what would you do?' She said: 'I would marry a Methodist preacher.' Still I stifled the convictions of the spirit and entered into business and prospered. And I thought I was going on all right, when the Lord burnt me out—burnt up my shop and all my tools! Then I cried unto the Lord, and told him if He would only help me raise another shop and get out of debt, I would then give up and preach the Gospel. But I prospered so much that I thought I could remain as I was. Then the Lord took away all my children at a stroke."

He then determined to open his heart to his brother, and calling him into his orchard he related his convictions on the subject of his call. The brother responded: "I am not surprised at this—I have been expecting it a long time."

"Then," he continued, joined the New York Conference. I thought of nothing but my duty, and have been cared for ever since. Now I am the oldest preacher in this Conference. I can hardly realize it. There are only three men living who were members of the old New York Conference when I joined it. I am, I believe, the only preacher who ever received over fifty appointments from the bishop. I have had fifty-four appointments. It was my lot to be a pioneer. When I first came to Connecticut there were few churches in all this region. Middletown church was the first that was built, and I built it. The people of Middletown said if the Methodists could build a church in this place, they could do anything." Since then he had built or helped to build some fifty churches and forty parsonages. "I was the first man that ever preached total abstinence in America, and that was in Middletown. It raised a hornet's nest about me; but they had no stings. The people were afraid of me. The preachers wouldn't pray for me at temperance meetings. But I continued till they ran temperance into politics, and then I left it, or rather it left me. I never was a politician. God has preserved me from the love of money, and kept me from joining secret societies and from party politics. God wonderfully blessed me with a good wife—she never complained. We once lived in a log hut—a room fourteen feet square, for the accommodation of two families. My colleague came home one night very tired, and wanted to go to bed early. So we knelt down for prayers. He prayed, and then I prayed, and then his wife prayed, and then my wife prayed, and then his little girl prayed, and she was converted there, and the Lord so blessed us that we didn't get off our knees till after midnight. Next day the fire spread all around, till the congregation that filled the school house was so large that (you know I used to be a blacksmith) I took off my coat and rolled up my sleeves and went at it till every one was converted, and as I looked on the assembly I couldn't say, Sinner.

"I want to say to my young brethren, don't think of giving up. When I began I had no thoughts of money, nor being sick, nor poor, nor dying. The Lord has taken care of me and blessed me all along. I have had ten children. The Lord has taken them all but three.

"The University is the result of the building of this church. I have received, in connection with my colleagues, ten thousand converts into the church. Many of them are gone home, and many still remain. I want to say to the young men what a good man said to me: 'Bring your wants within your means, and you will never get into trouble.' I never was dunned for money but once, and that was for eight cents. My wife had forgotten to pay for some wool carding. I never was poor—always rich, because always contented. It is with regret I ask the change. But necessity is upon me; I cannot help it."

Many eloquent and touching tributes were then paid to the retiring veteran amid the tears and prayers of the melted audience; at the close of which the testimonial referred to in the report of the Conference was presented by Rev. J. Buckley.

And we are sure the whole Methodist Church—for he belongs to every region of Methodism—shares heartily in the deep sympathies of the more privileged Conference in which he still remains an honored member.—New York Methodist.

"WHAT IS TRUTH?"—The question was proposed at a deaf and dumb institution, when one of the boys drew a straight line. "And what is a falsehood?" The answer was a crooked line.

FIFTY WAYS OF COOKING MEATS.

NUMBER FOUR.

PORK.—To Choose Pork.—In fresh pork the flesh is firm, smooth, a clear color, and the fat set. When stale, it looks clammy and flabby. Measly pork may be detected by the kernels in the fat; it should not be eaten.

39. Roast Pig.—Soak in milk some light bread, boil some sage and onions in plenty of water, strain it off and chop it all very fine; press the milk from the bread, and then mix the sage and onion with pepper and salt. Mix all together with the yolk of an egg, and stuff the inside of the pig. Rub the pig over with milk and butter, roast to a beautiful brown, cut off the head and likewise cut it down the back. Cut off the ears from the head, crack the bone and take out the brains; put them in a stewpan with all the inside stuffing and a little brown sauce. Dish the pig, the backs outside, and put the sauce in the middle, and serve in a boat; the ears at each end.

40. Leg of Pork Roasted.—The pork should be young and dairy-fed; score the skin with a sharp penknife; a little fresh butter is sometimes rubbed on the skin to make it brown and crisp without blistering. Chop some sage, that has been scalded, very fine, add to it an onion parboiled, some bread crumbs and a small portion of apple chopped very fine, mix all together, season with pepper and salt; make an incision, separating the skin from the fat in the under and fillet end of the leg, and place the stuffing there. The time of roasting will depend upon the size of the leg, but it must be thoroughly cooked. Serve with apple sauce.

41. Leg of Pork Boiled.—After having been salted, it should be washed in clear, cold water, and scraped thoroughly white and clean, preparatory to cooking; it should then be put into a floured cloth and into cold water, and brought to a boil. When the rind is quite tender the pork is done. Let the water be well skimmed, and serve with such vegetables as are in season. Allow a quarter of an hour to each pound, with an additional twenty minutes from the time it boils.

42 Loin of Pork.—This should, like the leg, be scored before roasting, and well jointed, to make the chops separate easily, and then roast as a loin of mutton, or it may be put into water enough to cover it; simmer until it is nearly done, then take it out, take the skin off, coat it well with yolk of egg and bread crumbs; roast for about a quarter of an hour, until it is thoroughly done.

43 Neck of Pork Rolled.—Bone it, chop sage finely, mix it with well-powdered bread crumbs, cover the meat with it on both sides, roll the pork, fasten it securely, and roast it gently.

44 Spare Rib.—A spare-rib will take two hours and a half to roast; if very large, three hours. While roasting, baste with butter and dredge with flour; pound some sage, and powder the spare-rib with it, about twenty minutes before it is done; a pinch of salt may be added.

45. Pork Chops and Steaks.—Cut from the best end of the loin, or from the chump or leg, if steak; remove the fat and skin, turn them frequently and quickly while broiling; sprinkle with salt when nearly done, and rub with a little fresh butter previous to serving. Garnish with crisped parsley.

46 Pig's Head Baked.—Let it be divided and thoroughly cleaned; take out the brains, trim the snout and ears; bake it an hour and a half; wash the brains thoroughly, blanch them, beat them up with an egg, pepper and salt, and some finely chopped or powdered sage and a small piece of butter; fry them or brown them before the fire. Serve with the head.

47. Bacon to Boil.—If very salt, soak it in soft water two hours before cooking; put it into a saucepan with plenty of water, and let it boil gently; if two or three pounds, it will take from an hour to an hour and a quarter; if larger, an hour and forty minutes. If a fine piece of the gammon of bacon, it may, when done, have the skin stripped off, and have finely powdered bread raspings strewed over it.

48. Bacon to Broil.—Make up a sheet of paper in the shape of a dripping pan; cut your bacon into thin slices, cut off the rind, lay the bacon on the paper, put it over the gridiron, set it over a slow fire, and it will broil clearly.

49. Bacon and Eggs.—Take a quarter of a pound of streaked bacon, cut it into thin slices, and put them into a frying pan over a slow fire; take care to turn them frequently; when the meat is done take it out, and break into the hot fat seven or eight eggs. Cook more or less according to taste, and serve with the bacon.

50. Boiled Ham.—Soak thoroughly, scrape and clean, and put in the pot with sufficient water to cover it, which water, when the ham is cooked, is good for stock for soups; boil from three hours and a half to six hours, according to size. When it is done, remove the skin, if possible, without breaking it; it prevents the ham, when cold, becoming dry; spread over the ham bread raspings; garnish with sliced boiled carrots.

51. Pig's Feet Stewed.—Clean, split, and broil tender, put them into a stewpan with enough gravy to cover them, an onion sliced, a few sage leaves, whole black pepper, allspice and salt; stew forty minutes, strain off the gravy, thicken with flour and butter; add two spoonsful of vinegar, or one dessert-spoonful of lemon pickle; serve it up with the feet.—Arthur's Home Magazine.

GEORGIA.

Through courtesy to respected correspondents, and that our readers might have every fair opportunity of judging for themselves, we have been publishing letters from Texas and Missouri, stimulating removal to those States. We go no further; for so far from encouraging Georgians to seek their fortunes elsewhere, we would advise immigration to our State. We have room enough for a much larger population, and can offer almost every variety of soil and climate that the temperate zone affords. True, some portions of the State are much worn, but the subsoil generally ... a good basis for improvement, and the use of commercial manures is rapidly bringing the lands up to more than their pristine fertility. In a few years, when the projected railroads are completed, we believe there will not be a spot in the State more than fifty miles from some one of these avenues of trade; and they will afford abundant facilities both for disseminating fertilizers and for conveying our products to market. The productions of the Middle States can be grown to great perfection in our mountain district; the great staple abounds through the middle and southern counties, and the cane and some of the fruits of the tropics are increasingly cultivated on our seaboard and lower borders. Mines of iron, gold, copper and coal, quarries of lime, slate and granite, many mineral productions used in the arts, with here and there precious stones, invite the industry of the people. It is believed, too—if not actually known—that near our seaboard vast deposits of fossil organic matter are to be found, which will render us independent of imported fertilizers. If water power is wanted to run machinery, the State affords well nigh enough of it to do the manufacturing of the world, with the advantage that our streams never congeal in the winter. Cotton, perhaps the greatest basis of manufacturing labor—iron being the only exception, if that be an exception—conveyed a few miles can reach the mill, and be wrought into yarn and exported in that form, so that this product of the farm and spindle can be exported to Europe. We may thus supplant the trade of England in yarns, which we are informed is the principal commerce in cotton of that country with the continent. Such a saving in transportation, and such an increase of the value of the raw material before it leaves our boundaries, would add incalculably to the wealth of our State.

All we need to enter this open door of fortune are capital and population. The former we can get, if we can have a good government; the latter would be invited by capital. Every natural advantage already mentioned solicits immigration. The climate, too, invites it. Temperate and as healthy as any portion of the globe, the mild winters would save to a laboring population those vast sums of money, expended by the poor in colder climates, for fuel and clothing. The yearly saving of fuel required at the North in manufactories alone for purposes of comfort would be a large sum. In this temperate clime with the long protracted season of fruitfulness—extending in southern Georgia through nine or ten months of the year—it must ultimately be that among other advantages it will furnish for manufactories will be that of a cheap food-producing country.

This cursory glance at the sources of wealth and comfort in Georgia ought to convince its citizens that it will be difficult to find another State in which more elements of prosperity combine than here.—Almost any family with ordinary forecast, industry and frugality, can secure an easy competency which will make us a far happier people than if the extremes of wealth and poverty were brought into strong contrast.—Southern Christian Advocate.

According to Professor Nordenskiold, of the Swedish Arctic Expedition of last year, the polar ice is far more open in the autumn than at any other season, but the idea of an open Polar Sea is chimerical. The pole must be reached by sledges, he says, or not at all.

The Missionary Secretary at Felicity Street.

The collection amounted to some $750. The sermon placed the preacher even higher in our estimate, if possible, than the one of the previous Sabbath, and of that we have already spoken in no measured terms. Each one of his grand pulpit epics is worth a thousand dollars to any Southern Methodist congregation. It is worth it in raising a people's conception of the pulpit; worth it in its delineation of the power of inspired truth, and in those soul searching, overwhelming periods that break up rocks and hearts heretofore too hard for common hammers.

All we advise our people to do is to send for him. With all possible previous advertising to collect a congregation, and then, after hearing him, if disappointed, send the bill of expenses to 112 Camp street, and we will refund the amount.

He preaches on next Sabbath, at eleven o'clock A. M., at Carondelet street church, and on next Wednesday evening, at half-past seven, at Moreau street.

We should say, further, that after leaving New Orleans the doctor contemplates spending a Sabbath at Mobile, and another Sabbath at some other point in Alabama or Georgia; after which his engagements call him to Baltimore. He proposes returning here next winter and paying a visit to many important points in the South and Texas. We wish, "above all things," that he "may prosper and be in health, even as his soul prospers."

Der Evangelische Apologete.

This Southern Methodist German paper has reached its sixteenth number—price only $1. It is beautifully printed, and is ably edited. Our preachers can help Brother Ahrens with but very little trouble to themselves. Whenever they see a German ask him if he does not wish a good paper at $1 a year, and forward the name and amount to the Rev. J. B. A. Ahrens, New Orleans. One need not be a member of the church to read a good family, religious and literary newspaper.

POWER FROM ON HIGH.

An abiding and immediate life is the distinguishing feature of Christianity. The all-pervading and all-powerful presence of the Son of Man is the mainspring of all its movement. He himself appeared on earth first to perfect, and then to start the grand machinery. "The Lord from heaven" is the "author of our faith." After He had selected all the elements which earth could offer, it yet waited in imperfectness to receive the breath of heavenly life from Him who is also the "finisher of our faith." Without this life-breath the whole would have been but an historic drama of surpassing sublimity and beauty. It would have worked out something in all after generations by the force of its example and ideal perfectness; working through the imagination, the reason, and the sentiments of men, but limited to the natural capacity of their powers. If men could of themselves be what they wished to be, and if to sufficiently admire the good, the true, and the beautiful were the only condition necessary to their possession, then the Saviour need not have come into the world. Because this was not the case He came.

We have only to examine ourselves to understand how fatally defective Christ's mission to earth would have been if it had left nothing but "the letter" of His life. The demonstration of what a perfect manhood is would have increased the conscious distance between us and our God. So fearful a result could not have been the object of the Saviour's coming. It would have been unlike Him. Yet take away a present power of life from Christianity, and nothing remains but just such an object. This more than incompleteness—this unrelieved agony of disclosed truth—He recognized in His arrest of the disciples at Jerusalem until the wing of living power could move over the earth and be ready to effectuate the Gospel. But when that primordial "wind" came which first drove the dead elements into all the forms of creational beauty—the Holy Spirit—death yielded to "power." They were "filled"—the atmosphere was filled. The speaking flames, the rushing sound, told that some new energy had been unloosed by God to wait upon the assemblies of Christ's followers. Henceforth prayer was to be something more than the voice of fear, or the plaintive notes of sorrow, or mortal anguish whispering into the ear of heaven—it was to be the speech of faith, the channel of grace, the breath of "power."

The first sermon demonstrated to the disciples that Christ's system was now full-orbed. They were "complete in Him." Joshua did not go forth to war with a greater command over the source of light than they now had over the higher sources of all life. Three thousand souls kindled into being under the magic word; and again, five thousand! The Master had fed five thousand, had filled five thousand, while visibly among them; but He had not created five thousand. He had said that "greater things" would be done by his disciples than had been by himself, because then He would be placed at a greater advantage for helping—at the right hand of the Majesty in heaven; and now that saying was fulfilled. This was Christianity perfected—in working order. Christ came to establish the lines in which the power should run, the model and limit of its creative action; to fix them in the sight of men, and then went away to realize what He had made possible.

This is the true hour of the Saviour's life. It was never higher noon than now. The Holy Ghost never waited in fuller panoply of grace and strength than He now waits. Where is the praying assembly? where the night-long agony of the disciple opening the channels of his own encumbered nature, that the Spirit may have free course and be glorified? Wherever such a church or such a man can be found there will be a revival—the work of "power." Time is nothing with God. There are no wastes with Him to be repaired. "The same yesterday, to-day, and forever," He hovers over the churches now as on the day of Pentecost. It is this truth that our Southern Church must bring out in strong relief by most prayerful faith. "In the mountains," like Christ, or "in an upper room," like the apostles, we must consume our souls in the earnest cry, "O, Lord, revive thy work!" A sweeping flood of power and life, a sudden overflowing, "like the streams of the South," is what we need in all the arid waste of our borders. May the Lord come quickly!

A CHURCH AT BRANDON.

The following appeal speaks for itself. No man does us a greater favor than when he brings to our notice a really benevolent enterprise. Some people are afraid to look at a church subscription paper of any kind; to meet a cripple; to encounter a Methodist steward; to go to church and hear the farewell sermon; to see a preacher on his way to Conference; to attend a missionary meeting, or to look at the plans of a church building committee. Poor souls! what a life of wretchedness they lead. How much better to measure the dimensions of the ghost, or touch it and find out, as Brother Pauly once did, that it is only a white picket!—nothing for any one to be afraid of.

It is a wearisome thing to pursue people and argue with them all the advantages of a good deed. We have learned somewhat on this subject; and it is this: never try to persuade a man that it will be largely to his temporal interest to do the deed. Give him the full benefit of the duty—if he looks at it only in that light; or if he regards it as a gift out and out, show him that it is to the Lord he is doing this favor. Do not argue much; life is too short—"a walking beggar and a talking peddler for luck." Then it is not good to pave the way by inquiring after the brother's health, by admiring his children, or by complimenting his farming or other skill. It is useless; you cannot make the thing palatable if it be in effect nauseous. We remember to this day the horrid mockery of quince-preserve when given as a vehicle for calomel. Before you begin to build a church take to your knees, pray for the grace of "virtue;" "add to your faith virtue," the Latin for courage; try and get your own consent, as a brother who repaired a church said, "to be considered the filth and offscouring of the earth." Then ask all the people who you don't think will give anything; and resolve not to be disappointed with those who you feel sure will give, should they refuse. The man who collects money to build a church will have pleasure enough in the retrospect of his life to make up for all that he has endured in the unthankful task. We hope our readers will be mindful of this Brandon church.

BRANDON, MISS., April 12.

MR. EDITOR: In July, 1863, General Steele, of the Federal army, made a raid on this place, and among other acts of lawlessness perpetrated by his soldiers, was the burning of the Methodist church edifice, since which time that communion has worshiped in the Female College building.

In our poverty we have not been able to rebuild, but now have commenced to raise subscriptions for that purpose. We call on the church, and the liberal minded merchants of your city, who have customers here, to aid us in so doing. Will you not set the thing on foot?

Money sent to Colonel W. H. Batti, General Robert Lavoy, Captain Samuel C. Meyers, Captain Cocke, or A. G. Mayers, Esq., will be faithfully applied to that purpose, and you may assure donors of that fact. Yours, etc,

THE MACKONOCHIE DECISIONS.

The ultimate jurisdiction of the Church of England is in a body of men who are laymen and may not be churchmen. This Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in its province may decide upon all points of doctrine, and upon all rubrics, statutes and authoritative formulas which regulate the ceremonial practices of the establishment. By the way, this is a singular state of things by which the ordinances and the faith of the Church of Christ are put into the keeping of a body composed for the most part of very distinguished sinners. The Protestant Episcopal Church of this country may well rejoice that she has been set free from this two-horned feature of "lamb" and "dragon." This we say abstractly. The tribunal of the Privy Council is doubtless, in point of mere lawyer-like talents, learning and judgment, unsurpassed by any other in the world; consisting, as it does, of the chiefs of the great English courts, of the archbishops, or bishops, of former Lord Chancellors and Barons of the Exchequer. In point of all sorts of possible earthly wisdom it would compare very advantageously with the first council at Jerusalem, under the presidency of St. James; but yet looks very unlike anything in a regular succession from that primitive believing company.

In its decisions this learned body was guided by documents and usages of the times of Edward VI and Charles II, and came to conclusions which should give satisfaction to all true Protestants in the Protestant Episcopal Church. They "rescue by law the Holy Altar of Commemoration from the innovations which marred its sublime simplicity;" they "condemn the disobedient of every class who substitute their own opinion for the command of the church." These are weighty results, in which the whole body of Protestants should rejoice. But it seems rather late in the day to be sitting in solemn judgment upon ceremonies which were in the foreground of the raging controversies between Protestants and Catholics of the times of Cranmer and Gardiner, to be yet exercised upon chalice and paten, on cloths and crucifixes. One would suppose that these "first principles" would have been long since left behind in the strife of a truly apostolic church after "perfection." But no; it appears that humanity can never be too old to be childish; and that it is still necessary to feed the "only successors of the apostles" on milk. It is not easy even to imagine the early evangelists and messengers of the Saviour entertaining over again those practices and usages of altar and court which the Master had settled definitely forever with a whip of small cords—driving the whole rubbish of the ceremonial system itself out of the outermost limits of the house of God. Nor can we suppose that our Lord ever wore a phylactery in token of His reverence for the law, or sprinkled a cup, or in any other way made clean the "outside of the platter." The church might once have weighed these things narrowly, for she, too, has had her minority; but in the days of the Son of Man and the apostles she had come to her majority and "put away childish things."

It is, therefore, profoundly mortifying to the rest of the Protestant churches to see the venerable Church of England, and the Protestant Episcopal Church of this country, the youngest of all, and which, therefore, ought to embody the knowledge and spirituality of all her ancestry, still, in sober earnest, wrangling and internally rent with fierce schism over forms, as if determined to confine and re-enslave the Church of Christ to the "law of commandment contained in ordinances." Must all the past go for nothing? Is the worship of God to be thrown back to a period when "the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest," when the first tabernacle was standing? It would so seem; for here in the nineteenth century this church invokes worldly judges, wearing wigs and sitting on wool sacks, to decide for her whether these "carnal ordinances were imposed" only "until the time of reformation," or are still in force. Mind, we do not find fault with the decision of this learned court; but with the condition of things and the superlative folly which make necessary its sittings.

The trial of Warren Hastings was probably not half so momentous an occasion as that of the Rev. Mr. Mackonochie. The surroundings were probably even more impressing. Sitting in the half circle form, which was originally taken from the council room of the Jewish Sanhedrim, these venerable jurists, statesmen, lords and bishops are addressed by the most learned counselors of the kingdom of Great Britain, upon the great question of the essentials of Christian ceremony!—whether "the traditions of men" still have force, or whether "in Him," and in Him only, who "blotted out the handwriting of ordinances," the church yet stands "complete." The "vain deceit" of this composed and momentous ecclesiastical trial may be compared, in the absurdity of the items upon which its decisions rest, to a General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, hearing argument upon, whether a church sexton should be permitted to pin all the lost handkerchiefs, veils and gloves which he may find, upon the pulpit cushion cloth; or whether it is lawful to have the wine for the sacrament set upon the communion table in a cut-glass decanter or in a claret bottle. The principles contained in the matter of "lighting candles," "mixing water with wine," in a "carpet of silk or other decent stuff," may be greater and more obvious, but we cannot see it. We are disposed to ask, where did all this paraphernalia come from? for without such trappings and mummery the nonsense itself would die out for want of lodgment. But we give the decisions. Let them speak for themselves.

1. That the term "ornaments of the church" used in the 25th section of the Statute 1 Elizabeth, and in the rubric of the prayer-book of Charles II, sanctioned by the act of uniformity, means the articles (Instrumenta) employed in the public services of the church. They are distinct and architectural or decorative ornamentation. The ornaments of the ministers are vestments.

2. That those ornaments of the church are lawful, and those only, which are prescribed in terms, or sanctioned in terms, by the first prayer book of Edward VI; or by a warrantable inference are sanctioned as accessory to what is prescribed.

3. As to crucifixes the law so plainly forbade them that discussion was useless.

4. As to crosses, that if attached to the communion table, or standing on it, they were unlawful; but if placed in other parts of the church, as upon a rood screen, they were unobjectionable.

5. That a credence table was allowable, as an adjunct to the communion table. This, or the ledge in the chancel wall, often used in old churches, was made necessary, or proper, by the direction in the rubric as to the time of placing the elements on the table, to be done by the priest.

6. That the linen cloth which covered the table at the ministration must be plain and unadorned with lace, embroidery, or otherwise. Every judge in every court, which had the subject before it, concurred in this.

7. That the carpet of silk or other decent stuff, directed by the canon of 1603, to cover the table during the divine service (other than on communion days) might be changed, and be of various colors and ornamentation, subject to the discretion of the ordinary.

8. That an organ was lawful as a known adjunct to the singing, directed in the service book.

9. The use of incense in the celebration of the holy communion was illegal.

10. The mixing of water with wine during the ministration, and as part of it, was unwarranted.

11. The elevation of the paten and chalice, during or after the prayer of consecration, was unlawful.

12. The kneeling or prostration during the consecration of the elements, or after the prayer, and before reception by the minister, was forbidden.

13. The use of lighted candles upon the altar during the celebration, not required or employed for the purpose of giving light, was illegal.

After reading this one cannot be sufficiently thankful to that Providence which separated the Wesleyans from the Church of England before it came into this second childhood, and which delivered us from a Christian faith so medieval, romantic and thin.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

"ONWARD."—The May number is to hand. Contents are: The Lost Sister; A Fountain of Foulness; The Vultures of America; Safe on Board a Blockader; Adios; A Kanaka Police Court; Catlin; The Three Clerks; The Love of a Mother; Gettysburg; Street Cars; The Yellow Chief; Mea Gemma; Isidore; Things Worth Thinking of; Trifles. Carlton, publisher, New York.

THE LITTLE CORPORAL.—Chicago, Illinois. One dollar a year. The May number is rich in original matter, as the pages of this monthly usually are. Our frequent and very full extracts from its prose and poetry show how highly we appreciate it.

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR.—Edited by T. S. Arthur. May number. This is specially for very little children. ONCE A-MONTH is another magazine by the same editor. Two dollars a year. It is full of instructive, entertaining and valuable matter. The reader will see in the ADVOCATE frequent extracts from it. It is in a very compact form, pleasant to look at, and will, we hope, displace much of that worthless stuff which is bought for steamboat and railroad reading merely because it is convenient to handle. Address T. S. Arthur & Son, 809 Chestnut sheet, Philadelphia.

THE GALAXY FOR MAY.—Contents: Put Yourself in his Place; English Dictionaries; Pairs and Repairs; English Toryism and its Leaders; Susan Fielding; A Great Advocate; A Choir of Songsters; Miscellany; Driftwood; Literature and Art; Nebulæ. No. 498 Broadway, New York.

THE AMERICAN QUARTERLY CHURCH REVIEW.—April. New York: 37 Bible House. Contents: Sir Thomas More; Shall we Ever have a Christian Philosophy; The Great Pyramid; Suffragan Bishops; Ritualism; The Status of the Church; Notices of Books.

THE SOUTHERN REVIEW FOR APRIL.—Contents: What is Liberty; Recent Researches in Geography; Women Artists; The Legal Profession; Positivism in England; The Atmosphere and the Ocean; American and English Law; The Battle of Gettysburg; The Sun; Alcyone, a poem; Notices of Books. We shall notice this number at length hereafter. Published by A. T. Bledsoe, Baltimore.

STRAWBERRIES.

This delicious fruit is being produced in large quantities in the neighborhood of New Orleans, and in a few years it will be furnished here at even a lower price than it commands in New York. For fifteen years we never tasted either strawberries or peaches in New Orleans, being quite "indisposed" to pay the extravagant cost of these wholesome luxuries; but now we can venture a little, for they have come down within reach of everybody. After this abstraction we wish to thank a friend, Mr. Peel, for some remarkably fine ones, which were grown upon his place at the Nashville station. They certainly took the prize at our house.

To the Delegates to the Mobile Sunday School Convention.

The Mobile and Ohio Railroad will bring all delegates to the convention at half fare.

The steamboats on both rivers will bring regular ministers free, and lay delegates for half price. To avoid imposition and suspicion, brethren had better present certificates of their appointment.

On arriving in the city brethren will call at the lecture room of the St. Francis street church for information.

LETTER FROM CHINA.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Feb. 15, 1869.

The examination for the Han-lin degree in China is held every three years at Pekiu and in the palace of the emperor. The title of this degree is Literary Chancellor. The duties of this office become very arduous at the time of public examinations. To receive this degree is a mark of superior ability, and a man to be honored by the emperor and by the people. The work of presiding over all these examinations falls to their lot, and, in many instances, the work proves too laborious for those conducting it, as they are often days and nights without proper rest.

In the examination for the degree of Kenjin much depends on the memory of the student in remembering the words of the classics and illustrating the subject of his composition. The use of the memory is used almost exclusively, and it soon tells upon the body and mind of the student. Often they are taken from their rooms in a helpless condition, and some never recover from the effect. But this does not deter the student in quest of fame. The next examination is quite as numerously attended, and all enter the list with high hopes of success. The literati of China have a powerful influence over the people. The people look to them on all occasions for advice and counsel, as they cannot approach those in authority without immense bribes. It is for this reason the government officials who stand high in authority seek to gain the good will of literati. The officials in China are easily bribed, and thus we find that it is not alone in other countries that the officials of the government are bribed, but it is so in China. Those who have been appointed to examine young students, if known to receive bribes, are severely punished. Before any one can enter a public government office he must attain to these degrees, as such officers are always supposed to be men of learning. A civil officer of the same rank as a military officer is considered of more real worth and value on account of his education, as one is gained by his ability shown in a superior mind, the other by his ability shown by his strength of body rather than of mind.—such as shooting with the bow, lifting heavy pieces of timber, firing a matchlock. They are then tried as to their manner or power of control over large bodies of soldiers. After this they are drafted for service, as wanted. With those who are civil officers a much more extensive education is expected. Often the power of the memory of these men is remarkable. In many instances, if a certain word is wanted, they can turn to many books and show where that word is illustrated. This is not an uncommon thing among those who are educated in China. But, after all, the education of the Chinese goes so far and no farther, and they do not seem to have any desire to go farther. They know that a knowledge of the classics will ensure them esteem and office, and they are content to rest there. It is not progressive. It has its bounds, beyond which the Chinese have never gone, which will account for their backwardness in the arts and sciences. And it is the desire of all sincere Christians to elevate them in giving them a more extended range of thought by bringing them from darkness to light, giving them truth for error, which would in the end bring untold blessings upon the whole nation.

STRONG REASONS.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE of the 3d instant I learn that Brother Adair wants some good and convincing reasons to urge in favor of the ADVOCATE, that he may be able to increase its circulation.

I had supposed that the months of all Methodist preachers were filled with arguments in its favor.

With your consent, Mr. Editor, I propose doing what you "doubtless" would have done, had your modesty permitted—i. e., furnish Brother A. with good and sufficient reasons why every family should immediately subscribe for the ADVOCATE, which is only a repetition of what I frequently urge with at least some degree of success.

1. I regard the ADVOCATE as the best family newspaper published in the State, combining the secular with the religious. Finance, literature, science, agriculture and horticulture, religion—all are ably represented in its columns. Parents and children are all addressed.

2. I consider it the cheapest paper published in the State, with which I am acquainted, in proportion to its cost and the intrinsic value of the matter it contains.

3. None fail to obtain "value received" for the money invested.

4. Though religious, it is not strictly sectarian (perhaps not enough so) nor dogmatic in its claims, and is perfectly free from that kind of arrogance and bigotry which characterize some papers.

5. It is our paper, and ought to be sustained, especially by all Methodists.

MARRIED.

On the 16th of February, by Rev. J. W. Shores, Mr. ALEX. MCBRYDE to Miss CELIA ANN CLENNY, all of Pike county, Alabama.

OBITUARIES.

JANE HARRIET MCIVEINE, wife of William C. Hurt, died in Opeliku, Alabama, April 11, 1869, in her thirty-eighth year.

In all the relations of life she accepted her role from the Bible. As a child she obeyed her parents and honored them. As a wife she loved her husband and yielded a graceful submission. As a mother she was mindful of the spiritual as well as temporal welfare of her children; and though she left them early, it was not before she had taught them to pray. This woman was discreet, a keeper at home, good. She guided her house, and gave no occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully. Her character more resembled that drawn by Paul in his epistles than the more self-sustained one portrayed by Solomon in the last chapter of Proverbs; and yet it partook of both.

Our grief at her death was not made heavier by surprise. Death came with slow approaches; and though she was no stranger to pain, and all the cords of life were gradually loosed by wasting sickness, that keenest parg that mortals can know, the sting of death, she knew not. From the time of giving life to another she felt that her own was ended, though others shared not in the apprehension; but while paying the forfeit of "the mother of all living," she was saved by the Son of the Virgin Mother. Songs were given to her in the night season of affliction; and when those about her thought she had not strength to whisper, she broke forth in clear notes of praise. The little children, buried in other days, and mourned for as only a mother can mourn, returned in comforting visions and ministries to her bedside, and gave her sweet company. Her last solicitude was for those on earth; but after committing herself to a faithful Creator, she found grace to commit them also; and leaving these in a world of sin, went to join those in the Paradise of God—Speaking of dying, she said: "The entrance seems very dark; but, oh! so bright beyond!"

H. N. M.

MRS. MALISSA E. WAINWRIGHT, daughter of Daniel and Eliza Holt, and consort of James L. Wainwright, died of consumption, in Mobile, Alabama, April 5, 1869. She was born in Temple, New Hampshire, October 20, 1834.

When about sixteen years old she removed with her parents to Prattville, Alabama, where, in December, 1854, she was united in marriage to Bro. Wainwright, with whom she lived in the most perfect affection until the angel of death claimed her for his own. She had embraced religion in early life and joined the Baptist Church; but her husband being a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, she joined the church of his choice, and continued to adorn the profession of Christ until her death.

Her piety was unobtrusive, deep and uniform. Her amiable manners, intelligence, and fidelity in all the relations of life won the love and confidence of all who knew her. Especially is she of precious memory in the Sabbath-school and family circle. Her husband, in October last, removed her to Mobile, hoping thereby to prolong her life. But it soon became evident that she was sinking rapidly to her final rest. Friendship, sympathy, and medical skill were of no avail. She was herself conscious that the shadows of her mortal life were lengthening, and that life's short day was fast drawing to its close. But her setting sun was fringed with gold, and shed a mellow light over the evening of life—the harbinger of eternal day. True, the thought of the tender ties that must be severed was painful; but with sweet confidence and calm submission her frequent language was, "Thy will of the Lord be done."

Her dear little children—Jennie, Chandler and Georgia—who had been torn from her embrace in one short week, were waiting to welcome their mother. The Providence that took them was then to her dark and mysterious; but now all is clear and bright.

"The spoiler set
His seal of silence; but there beamed a smile
So calm and holy on that marble brow,
Death gazed and left it there; he dared not steal
The signet ring of heaven."

ROBERT S. WOODWARD.

Our aged brother, N. G. NORSWORTHY, died on the evening of the 15th of April, 1869, at his residence in Jackson, Louisiana, in the seventy-fifth year of his age.

He was a native of North Carolina, but for many years a citizen of this State. He was esteemed among his fellow-citizens for decision, promptitude, and integrity of character. As a husband and father he provided well for the wants of all dependent upon him, in this respect leaving a good example of energy, industry, economy and honesty.

About twenty-six years ago he became a true penitent, joined the church, and soon after obtained forgiveness of sins through the mercy of God in Christ Jesus, our Lord. Great and manifest to all was the change in him. From having been a recklessly wicked man, he became an humble, prayerful, active Christian. A portion of his course, after he became connected with the church, was marred by an unfaithfulness and disorder, which induced deep regret and repentance. Nevertheless, we have good hope that he died in the favor of God, and is now at rest.

CATARRH.—Catarrh is a dangerous disease; yet it can be cured by the use of DR. WOLCOTT'S ANNIHILATOR, a different remedy, and unlike PAIN PAINT. Thousands suffer without knowing the nature of this universal complaint. It is an ulceration of the head. Its indications are hawking, spitting, weak or inflamed eyes, soreness of the throat, dryness and heat in the nose, matter running from the head down the throat, ringing or deafness in the ears, loss of smell, memory impaired, dullness and dizziness of the head, pains in the left chest or side and under the shoulder blades. Indigestion invariably attends Catarrh; a hacking cough and colds are very common. Some have all these symptoms, others only a few. Very little pain attends Catarrh until the Liver and Lungs are attacked in consequence of the stream of pollution running from the head into the stomach. It ends in Consumption.

Bronchitis is the legitimate child of Catarrh. Troches and all palliatives cannot in any case reach the fountain in the head, where the polluted festering, corrosive matter issues. Snuff or dust of any kind aggravates, and never cures the disease.

A sneeze is nature's emphatic warning and is produced in consequence of an irritation of the head. Nature speaks out and says No! at every sneeze. She opens the water ducts and floods the nostrils with water to drive out the intruder, just as the ducts of the eye are opened when dust affects that organ. Taking snuff will produce Catarrh. The patient feels dull, heavy, stupid and sleepy; his fears are not aroused until perhaps too late:

He catches cold constantly in the head, sometimes running at the nostrils; the breath sometimes reveals to his neighbors the corruption within; while the patient has often lost the sense of smell. The disease advances cautiously, until pain in the chest, lungs or bowels startles him; he hacks and coughs; has dyspepsia, has liver complaint, wants to take a blood purifier, or cod liver oil. Bosh! The foul ulcer in the head cannot be reached by such nostrums. He becomes nervous, his voice is harsh and unnatural, feels disheartened, memory loses her power, judgment her seat, gloomy forebodings hang overhead; hundreds, yea thousands, seek a rope, a river, a revolver or a razor, and cut the miserable thread of life. The world looks on and wonders that a man surrounded by all the charms and opulence that gold can give, should deliberately choose a quiet grave; others drag on a weary life and sink under lung complaints by inches. Many hire some miserable scamp or some big sounding charlatan, having such a string of promotions from Europe that they actually bewilder and dazzle their victim, who at once comes down with the dust, pays $5 for a useless examination, $50 more as part payment for a job cure. Of course the dupe is not silly enough to pay the balance, but thanks God he was not killed outright by the outrageous treatment. The villains coolly write a flaming certificate, and attach thereto the victim's name.

Thousands are restored to health whom doctors call hopeless victims of Consumption.—Physicians think the lungs affected, when the liver is the only cause of pain in the majority of cases, and the patient is perfectly curable. Nothing complaints can exist unless caused by Catarrh. But the liver is always first attacked. Medicines taken in the stomach are worse than useless. Physicians know nothing, comparatively, of the symptoms of this disease—its cause or cure—and few are bold enough to deny this assertion. Many physicians have Catarrh themselves and do not know it; those of the highest standing buy "Annihilator" to cure it.

For all afflicted with this disgusting complaint DR. WOLCOTT'S ANNIHILATOR affords a safe, sure and speedy cure, when no bones have come from the head. The nostrils must be rinsed with Annihilator, by snuffing through to the throat, and spit out the nasty corruption instead of swallowing or allowing it to run down the throat, and thus keep the ulcers clean of matter, and they heal permanently. Also for weak Nerves, Chronic Headache and Neuralgia; it is invaluable. Twelve pints should be used for Catarrh, one pint each week.

The Annihilator is sold at fifty cents, and full pints $1 a bottle, with full directions. Pints hold three fifty cent bottles. Buy none except in pure white wrappers.

Six pints of Annihilator for Catarrh or Colds in the Head, or one pint of Pain Paint, double strength, sent free of express charges on receipt of the money; or one gallon of Pain Paint, double strength, for $20. Small bottles sold at all Drug Stores. R. L. WALCOTT, Inventor and Sole Proprietor, No. 181 Chatham Square, New York. ap10 4tr

WHAT ADVERTISERS SAY.

NEW YORK, Dec. 22, 1868.

MESSRS. GEO. P. ROWELL & CO.—Dear Sirs: I thank you for the advance sheets of your Directory.

Some four or five years since, when you first originated your "Select Lists of One Hundred Newspapers," I appreciated your novelty and patronized you accordingly.

Since then the advantages derived through your method by the increase of circulation, reduction of prices, and punctuality in all the departments of your business, I now advocate your system as deserving the highest encomiums. Having advertised my specialty, "Durno's Catarrh Snuff" somewhat extensively since 1850, permit me to acknowledge that, had your present plan been then in operation, it would have been a saving to me in the rates of advertising of at least $20,000.

I am, dear sir, yours truly,

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE HOUSEHOLD ANGEL.

She grows no older: year by year,
At least, not to the outward seeming,
She only wins all hearts anear,
With that sweet face whose peace is beaming.

Yet closely view that raven hair,
And you shall see the white threads stealing;
And though the brow is smooth and fair,
Yet Time his way is o'er it feeling.

So soft her step! so sweet her voice!
So fraught her daily life with loving;
Her very smile makes all rejolee,
And from its spell there is no roving.

The little children round her cling;
She tells them fairy tales at even,
And with them oft she loves to sing
Sweet hymns that breathe of Christ and heaven.

She listens to the good man's tale,
The lover of her girlhood's hours,
When life for him wore pleasure's veil,
And youth was garlanded with flowers.

No hand can raise the sick one's head,
Or cool the burning flush of fever,
Like her's—and not an angel's tread
Could come so lightly, tiring never.

She has a helpful word for all,
She wins the recreant back with kindness;
She stoops to lift who, stumbling, fall,
And, pitying, never mocks their blindness.

To her we go when sorrows come—
She soothes the hour of bitter weeping;
Her still sweet face illumes the home,
Though death within his watch is keeping.

So gently goes she down life's way—
Perhaps her feet are torn and bleeding;
Intent to aid another's way,
The thorns in her's she treads unheeding.

So gently she goes o'er life's way;
We never hear a word complaining;
Like some sweet bird at early day,
Her wing to heaven is ever straining.

Perhaps that tuneful harp of hers
May have some string forever broken—
Some chord that yet in memory jars,
And echoes sorrows never spoken.

We know not—only this we know,
She's dearer far than any other;
To part with her were crushing woe,
For in our home we call her "mother."

"Mother!"—sweet name that infant lips
First learned to call our household angel,
Whose briefest absence is eclipse—
Whose presence is love's best evangel.

THE CHILD MINISTER.

Home ministry is a wide field, and a field blessed of the Lord. Many a follower of the Crucified, who would not shrink from missionary labors in China, or on the coast of Africa, recoils before the discouragements of household ministry. If we better understood living with God, then we should not so often be disheartened in our aim at living to God and for Him.

Little Frank seemed always on the watch for opportunities of showing kindness to others, to run for his father's slippers, to bring his mamma a footstool, or to be employed in any errand of love. These were among his unselfish enjoyments.

One day his tenderness was specially exhibited, as he saw his mother's suffering, after the extraction of some teeth; he shook up the pillow of the couch, covered her carefully with a wrapper, and then in a voice of gentle sympathy he questioned, 'Was it very painful, mamma?' On receiving the comforting assurance that she was better, he kissed her forehead, and crept softly out of the room.

When the children were permitted to gather strawberries, Frank's quick eye and busy fingers sought the finest, and when he had found them it was not for himself, but to collect in a leaf and take in to his dear mother. He was ever proving that 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'

On his mamma's birthday he was diligently employed over some mysterious piece of work that appeared to take all his attention. When it was completed he sought her out, and with his face beaming with joy, and his hand behind him, which was generally its position when some treasure was forthcoming, he said, 'I have brought a present for you, a very useful one, but not very handsome, though.' He then produced a pen wiper of blue cloth, sewed round the edges with white cotton. 'It is not done very well,' he said, 'but I have made it as well as I could; I have been all the morning about it.' He was delighted to see it made use of, and when he saw his dear mother writing he would ask, 'May I fetch the pen wiper and wipe your pen for you?' Home ministry is composed of little deeds of love and words of kindness, looks and smiles, that make themselves felt when the soul is a living witness for Christ. Take courage, faint hearts; the world knows nothing of your labor of love at home. But the Lord looks on it, and waters it with the dew of His blessing.—Central Baptist.

Lay Preaching.—I want to tell you, said an American minister, what a layman did for me. I was only sixteen years old. My mother had died in the previous December. I was driving the cows home toward evening through a slight rain. A man with an umbrella overtook me, and, holding it over me, said, 'My boy, these are fine cows.' 'Yes,' said I, 'they are fine.' 'Why, that one with the short horns and broad back is a Durham!' His interest in what interested me won me. After a while he asked,

'Have you got a mother?'

'No, sir,' said I, 'she died last winter.'

'What was the last thing she said?'

'O, sir, the last thing she said was, 'May God have mercy on these children!'

'Well, my boy, ain't you a Christian?'

'No, sir.'

'Why ain't you?'

'I expect it is because I love sin so much.'

Fixing his eyes earnestly on mine, and shutting his umbrella so as to grasp my hand with his right hand, he said:

'What, my boy, and you not a Christian?'

'No, sir,' said I, with streaming eyes, 'but I want to be.'

And then he talked with me so gently and kindly that I never shall forget it. O the power of a seasonable word! It was lay preaching.

A GOOD STORY.

A very amusing anecdote is told of an Irishman who happened to be in Paris a short time ago, while three crowned heads of Europe were there on a visit to his imperial majesty Napoleon. These distinguished persons were the Emperors of Russia and Austria, and the King of Prussia. One day, having thrown aside all state ceremonial, they determined to see the sights of the beautiful city on the Seine, for their own delectation, and for that purpose they determined to go incog., so as not to be recognized by the people. However, in their stroll through Paris they went astray; and meeting a gentlemanly-looking person, who happened to be an Irishman, they politely asked him if he would kindly direct them to the Palais Royal. "Faith and that I will, my boys," says Pat, at the same time taking a mental photograph of the three "boys." "This way, my hearties," and so they were conducted to the gates of the Royal Palace, and the Irishman was about bidding them farewell, when the Emperor of Russia, interested and pleased as much by the genuine politeness of Pat (and what son of Erin was ever yet deficient in courtesy and politeness) as by his naivete and witty remarks, asked him who he was. "Well," rejoined their guide, "I did not ask you who you were, and before I answer you, perhaps you would tell who you may be." After some further parleying one said, "I am Alexander, and they call me Czar or Emperor of all the Russians." "Indeed," said Pat, with a roguish twinkle in the corner of his eye, and an incredulous nod of the head, (as much as to say, "this boy is up to codding me a bit.") "And might I make bould to axe who you are, my flower?" "They call me Francis Joseph, and the Emperor of Austria." "Most happy to make your acquaintanee, Frank, my boy," says the Irishman, who, thinking he was hoaxed, and in his despairing efforts to get the truth, as he conceived, out of any of them, turned to the third one and said, "who are you?" "They call me Frederick William, and I am King of Prussia." They then reminded him that he promised to tell them who he was, and, after some hesitation, and mysterious air of confidence, Pat, putting his hand to his mouth, whispered, "I am the Emperor of China, but don't tell anybody."

An Irritable Grandfather.—There was a clergyman who often became quite vexed at finding his little grandchildren in his study. One day one of these little children was standing by his mother's side, and she was speaking to him of heaven.

'Ma,' said he, 'I don't want to go to heaven.'

'Don't want to go to heaven, my son?'

'No, ma, I'm sure I don't.'

'Why not, my son?'

'Why, grandpapa will be there, won't he?'

'Why, yes, I hope he will.'

'Well, just as soon as he sees us he will come scolding along, and say, 'Whew! whew! whew! what are these boys here for?'

Marrying an Heiress.—Chambers' Journal tells a story of a young minister who was persuaded not to marry his betrothed because she was penniless. She sued him for breach of promise and obtained $25,000 damages. He then confessed his sin against her and pleaded with her to marry him, since her friends' objections were removed by the received $25,000, now her own. She was convinced.

In his speech against confirming the Alabama treaty with England, Senator Sumner estimates our loss at about $100,000,000.

SCIENTIFIC.

ENGINEERING UNDER GROUND.

We learn from the Artisan, London, that a new length of the line of the underground railroad of that city has been completed at a cost of $3,500,000 per mile, the bulk of which has been applied toward compensation for damages. The length of new line is nearly three miles, and has six stations—one at Westminster bridge; one in the Broadway, at St. James' park; one at Victoria, where it joins the Chatham and Dover line; one at Chelsea, near Sloane square; one at South Kensington; and one in the Gloucester road, West Brompton. Of the whole length of line about one third is tunnel and the rest open cutting.

No very special engineering difficulties were met within the construction of the line except the continued presence of water, as some parts of the works are below low water mark. The greatest depth below the surface to the rails is not more than thirty two feet, the quickest curve is four hundred and forty feet radius, and the greatest incline one in two hundred and fifty feet. Considerable difficulty was experienced during the construction of the line from water, both from the sewers and from the surface drainage. On one very wet day in the early summer no less than six sewers burst at once, and gave the pumps enough to do to keep their contents, with the surface drainage, from flooding all that was then built of the line. To this day, and as long as the line is in use, there must always be permanent pumping stations for the mere surface drainage, there being no outlet toward the river without raising it to a higher level. This water difficulty, however, is very ingeniously met by Messrs. Fowler and Johnstone, the engineers of the line. The side walls both of the arched tunnels and open cuttings are made of extra thickness, and, above all, are connected beneath the ground by an inverted arch of concrete nearly three feet thick. This effectually prevents the water rising up through the floor of the line, and equally prevents the surface water from draining off. For this surface drainage, therefore, special provision is made, by means of pipes laid in the center of the line, which carry the water on to the pumping stations, where it is raised and sent away into the Thames. Passing under the middle of the Broadway the line is carried, not in a tunnel, but in a broad, lofty, square chamber, with a flat roof, on massive wrought iron girders. This is a beautiful piece of work, both in its design and finish, and is of the most unexceptionable character from beginning to end. While passing along the Broadway special precautions were taken to guard against any possible vibration affecting Westminster Abbey. The walls on the Abbey side are here made seven bricks thick. Behind this comes the Victoria sewer in a tube of iron, and behind all a bed of peat seven feet thick. The peat checks all vibration, but as the nearest point at which the line passes is more than ninety feet from the Abbey walls, its deadening properties are scarcely required.

After Westminster bridge the first station is St. James' park, and leaving this the line continues in an open cutting to Buckingham row, where it enters a tunnel of about five hundred yards in length. Here the water occasioned so much difficulty that engines had to be kept going night and day, pumping at the rate of nearly four thousand gallons a minute. The tunnel at this point passes but a few feet below the surface of the ground, yet it forms the foundation of the brewery belonging to Elliot, Watney & Co. above. This building is now carried on a series of girders, but the work had to be done with great care, for the superincumbent weight was immense, and the soil below poor and treacherous. After finishing this portion of the line a fresh difficulty arose with the King Scholar's Pond sewer, the largest sewer next to that of the Fleet in London. This had to be entirely diverted and reconstructed in an iron tube, eleven feet wide by fourteen feet high. So very limited was the space at command that this sewer had to be built over the up and down line in a deeply arched form in order to make room for the funnels of the locomotives. This most difficult of all the tasks on the line has been admirably executed by Mr. T. A. Walker, the resident engineer, who has had charge of the works throughout. A few yards from this point is the station at Victoria, which, like all the others on the line, is open, or rather only closed in with light glass and iron roofs. From this point the line passes on to Sloane square, a wide and lofty station, but the architectural effect of which is much marred by the Ranelagh sewer being taken in a huge cylinder of cast iron right across its very center at the springing of the arches. Continuing westward, the next station is near the site of the exhibition building of 1862, and to this a new road will be made by a continuation of the exhibition road from Kensington. The last station is at Gloucester road, West Brompton, where the junction is effected with the Metropolitan Extension. The District line then branches to the south and forms a double junction with the West London, by means of which a communication is gained with most of the southern lines.—Scientific American.

FARM AND GARDEN.

RAISING ONIONS.

BY AN OLD SEED GROWER.

The reason why many do not succeed in their first attempt at raising onions is because they do not select ground which has been suitably prepared in the cultivation of the two or three previous crops. It is a mistake that onions do better, year after year, on the same ground, simply because onions follow onions. It is the higher manuring, more thorough pulverization and mixture of the soil and manures, and the cleaner and more careful cultivation required every year for onions, than is given to any other crop, that fits ground better for them.

Onions will undoubtedly succeed better many years on the same ground than most other vegetables, but there is a limit to this success. In Wethersfield, which has been so famous for its onions, the cultivation has greatly declined on account of the diminished product to the acre. The onions grown there now in many of the old gardens are small; they start quickly and grow vigorously the forepart of the season, but suddenly meet with a check when they should go on growing, even if there be no signs of smut or blast, and ripen too early to attain their former size and productiveness. Much larger crops are now grown in other towns.

One great trouble among beginners on new ground is that the onions will not bottom and ripen at the usual time, but continue to grow all the season and produce too many "stiff necks" or scallions. There are several causes for this. One is, the land, which is too poor to commence the cultivation upon, is heavily manured and plowed deep, bringing the poor subsoil to the surface. The seed in such soils comes up weak, if at all, and the onions grow very slowly until they get hold of the decomposed manure, when it is too late in the season for them to mature. Late sowing, a wet season, and foreign or bad seed, are other causes of scallions. If they do not begin to bottom before September rains, they never will.

The onion is not so particular about the character of the original soil as many suppose. Good crops are obtained on almost any soil, not too wet or too dry, except a stiff clay, light sand, or hungry gravel. It is essential, however, that the land should have been made rich by the thorough incorporation of manures in clean tillage for at least two years from the sod. Corn, and then potatoes, carrots or beets, are good preparatory crops. One or two heavily manured tobacco crops admirably fit the ground for onions; old vegetable gardens are perhaps the best, except where cabbages have been grown, which are the worst of all crops to precede onions. Heavy or rather clayey, moist, not wet, loam generally produces the largest onions. If coarse manure is to be used, spread on twenty to thirty loads to the acre late in the fall, say about the middle of November, and plow it in not very deep; or use one tun of fish guano, spread on after plowing and harrow it in. If raw fish is put on in the spring, the onions will continue to grow until too late to ripen. In the spring, as soon as the ground will work, plow four inches deep, and spread on a good dressing of fine compost or three hundred pounds Peruvian guano or superphosphate of lime, and harrow it in well; back harrow and harrow again, and if not smooth enough, dress with rakes. When not manured in the fall, fine hog pen or stable manure, free from grass and weed seeds, should be plowed in in the spring and the guano or other fertilizers harrowed in.—American Agriculturist.

Licentiousness.—The nearer we approach the center of the Romish Church the more shamefully the sanctity of the marriage relation is disregarded. The percentage of illegitimate births in the following cities tells a plain story: London, 4; Paris, 48; Brussels, 53; Vienna, 118; Rome, 243. Nearly two and a half to one born in lawful wedlock! In Roman Catholic countries houses of ill fame are regularly licensed. So does New Orleans.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of Filley's Hot Air Flue to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every Charter Oak guaranteed, or the money refunded.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of.....$10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of..... 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of..... 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of..... 25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

DARBY'S

PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

A CHALLENGE TO THE WORLD!

We challenge the world to produce a better or a stronger recommendation for any article, for any purpose, than the following:

NOVEMBER 1, 1868.

We very cheerfully unite our testimony in favor of the great merits of the valuable disinfectant manufactured by Professor Darby, and known as DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID. From the reputation of Professor Darby as a scientific gentleman, from our own knowledge of this preparation, and from the general esteem in which it is held wherever known, we have no hesitation in recommending it as one of the most valuable household articles with which we are acquainted.

CHURCH OF THE STRANGERS,

New York.—Visitors to the city of New York are informed that they will find divine service every Sunday, in the large Chapel of the University, Washington Square, at ten and a half A. M. and at seven and a half P. M. The evening service in summer is at eight o'clock. Waverley Place, immediately in front of the New York Hotel, out of Broadway, runs west to Washington Square, on the east side of which is the University. The entrance to the Church is the main door of the University. University Place cars run from the door of the Fifth Avenue Hotel to the door of the church. From the St. Nicholas and Metropolitan, take the cars corner of Broadway and Bleecker, leave at Waverley Place, and go west one block. At the Astor House take University Place cars, leave at Waverley Place, and go west one block. Strangers will find cordial welcome and polite attention.

The pastor is Rev. Dr. DEEMS, who devotes himself to the spiritual interests of strangers. If any be sick, let them address him a note by mail, as "Pastor of the Church of the Strangers, New York," and it will reach him. The ladies who compose the "Society of the Sisters of the Stranger" procure medical, legal and spiritual help for strangers in perplexity, distress or sickness. Address "Sisters of the Stranger," care Rev. Dr. Deems, New York.

If you are coming to New York soon, cut this out and paste it in your memorandum book.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution, are requested to give publicity to the fall reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT

Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this Institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Benners.

For further information apply for circular to

O. F. CASEY,

SIGN OF THE BIG TEA POT.

I would respectfully announce to my friends and the public generally, both in the city and country, that after an association of over twenty years, under the name and style of Austin & Goodwyn, formerly corner of Customhouse and Front Levee, I have permanently located as above, and shall continue my old business of

MANUFACTURING TINWARE,

in all its branches, as heretofore, and in addition will endeavor to keep at all times a full and complete stock of the best, as well as the latest and most approved

COOKING STOVES.

The names of a few will suffice to give an idea of the great variety constantly kept on hand:

The Charter Oak,	The Good Samaritan,
The Revenue,	The Torchlight,
The American,	The Brilliant,
The Magnolia,	The Fashion,
The True Kentuckian,	The Farmer,
The Maid of Orleans,	The Southern States,
The Mutual Friend,	The Sunny South,

and many others, too numerous to mention, all of which will be sold at

THE LOWEST MARKET PRICES,

for cash or approved city paper.

Being ever grateful for the liberal patronage bestowed and confidence reposed in me during my former copartnership, I would most earnestly solicit a continuance of the same, and shall pledge myself to do my utmost to maintain the reputation of the old house.

Remember the Big Tea Pot,

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTItute, Staunton, Virginia.

The next session begins on the 21st day of SEPTEMBER, 1868, and closes on the 24th of June, 1869.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with a Faculty of twelve professors, teachers and matrons.

This is a Female College of the first rank; one of the most flourishing in the South; young ladies here from nearly all sections of Virginia, and various Southern States. Method of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Health and comfort of pupils unsurpassed. Those from the Gulf States, especially, have greatly improved in health. No social disquietude. The population of this great Valley is nearly all white. This institution is an educational home for the daughters of the South.

Charges for the entire scholastic year, board and tuition, in collegiate course, embracing

Ancient Languages	$215 00
Music	50 00
French or one Modern Language	20 00

Refer to Professors Smith and Holmes, Virginia University; Mrs. John B. Floy; Bishops Pierce, Early, Doggett; Rev. Drs. Dunnen and Munsey.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has continued inanimate since our last report. There appears to have been a pause in the country demand, and wholesale dealers have done only a moderate business in supplying orders to replenish stocks or for seasonable goods. The rivers, at the same time, are all at a good navigable stage, and there is no restriction upon either the receipt of produce or the forwarding of goods. Only a moderate business has been done in sugar, the sales but little exceeding the receipts; and operations in molasses have been confined to a few small lots at about previous rates. The movement in Western produce has been of inconsiderable extent, there being, in fact, no stocks to attract the attention of buyers for shipment. We are promised, however, more liberal supplies from the upper Mississippi, but apprehend they will be held back until too late to profit by the present abundance of tonnage and low rates of freight.

The accounts from the country indicate that planters are making strenuous efforts to make up for the delay caused by an unpropitious spring.

The river has risen two inches since our last report, and is now one foot five inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 23d ultimo:

Louisiana and Missis.ippi	bales.	4688
Lake		6
Mobile		515
Texas		59
Total		5268

On Saturday the movement appeared to be nearly suspended. There was very little inquiry, and that mostly at lower prices, and as factors evinced no disposition to give way, the business was confined to 350 bales, part at previous rates, and part at a falling off of ⅛c. On Monday there were very few indications, at the opening, of any improvement in the demand, buyers still standing aloof or coming forward with unacceptable offers, but as two parties subsequently took 1,600 bales for Great Britain and the continent, the entire sales summed up 2,000 bales, at prices requiring no change in quotations excepting a reduction of ¼c. on the inside figures of good ordinary. On Tuesday the market opened with a pretty fair inquiry, but buyers claiming concessions which factors would not admit. Hence the movement continued languid throughout the day, and although it was favored by a decided advance in foreign exchange, yet barely 1,700 bales changed hands at prices showing a further advantage on the side of the buyers, but no material change.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 3,650 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 752,279 bales, against 570,084 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 138,353 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 14,699 bales to France, and a decrease of 288,756 to Great Britain, and of 16,934 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	25 to 25½
Good ordinary	26 to 26½

Middling	28 to 28¼
Strict middling	28½ to —

Sugar.—Louisiana sugar continues in good supply and limited demand, at drooping prices. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 300 hogsheads, part on private terms and the balance at 10½c. per lb. for common, 11c. for good common, 11¾c. for fair, 12½c. for good fair, 13c. for fully fair, 14 to 14½c. for choice, and 16c. for yellow clarified. On Tuesday the sales were confined to a few small lots, said to be at a fraction below the foregoing prices. Of Cuba sugar, sales in store are made, the particulars of which are suppressed. Refinery sugar is selling at 15½ to 16½c. for yellow clarified, 17 to 18c. for white, and 18 to 19c. for crushed and powdered.

Molasses.—The demand is limited, but the supplies of Louisiana are small and sell at 50 to 55c. per gallon for fermenting, 60c. for fair, and 62½ to 65c. for reboiled.

Corn has continued in comparatively light supply, and the demand, in consequence, is mostly confined to the local trade, although there are foreign orders here.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

Payments—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability. july25 W. H. N. MAGRUDER.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

LONDON, May 1.—Sumner's speech creates intense excitement in political circles here. At a cabinet meeting the subject was informally discussed. Bright declared that the embarrassment which its publication produced served England very properly, but he agreed not to consent to entertain the terms of settlement foreshadowed by Sumner. Lord Clarendon expressed the belief that actual negotiations on the subject, in progress between the two countries, were of a far less extreme character than the speeches of American Senators or articles of the press. The present administration was eager for the lasting continuance of friendly relations with the United States.

Gladstone professed to have good assurances from reliable quarters that the recent rejection of the Alabama treaty by the American Senate was purely a political movement, and that the present administration will endeavor to settle the Alabama question on liberal and honorable terms.

The outside tone of the English people is anti American, and more so in consequence of having read only a partial publication of Mr. Sumner's argument.

The Star asserts that Sumner's demands are new and startling, and must be regarded merely as enormous, and if it only shadows the instructions given Motley, that gentleman will stand in a very different position from that occupied by Mr. Johnson.

Motley's rejection as American minister to St James is threatened in case his instructions nearly coincide with the expressions of Sumner. Such demands are utterly untenable, and her majesty's ministers must be careful in entertaining them.

The Times breathes forth the spirit of war in defence of the treasury, claiming that Sumner's money estimate of the damages is portentous and enormous, adding that although his address is worthy of attention and consideration, no contrition or humiliation should either be expressed or endured by England; for if sides were to be taken the case would be prejudiced against her, and any project of an equitable settlement would be defeated.

The Standard, a Tory organ, exhibits a spirit of defiance toward the American people, and will resist to the last any capitulation by England.

This position is combatted by the Liverpool Post, which says that England cannot afford a quarrel, large or small, with America.

The government instructs Commodore Phillimore, commanding the West India British fleet, to demand restoration of the Mary Lowell and an apology for her seizure.

NEW YORK, May 3.—A Herald special says the rebel Congress was held at Sebanacan, Cuba; thirty representatives present; Cespedes presided. It was unanimously decided to fight for annexation, and Quesada was chosen Generalissimo.

MEMPHIS, May 3.—The reported riot at Brownsville, Tennessee, was a canard, growing out of a quarrel between a white man and a negro.

RICHMOND, May 3.—Chief Justice Chase arrived this afternoon and opened the United States Circuit Court, assisted by Judge Underwood. Chase briefly charged the grand jury.

The jury was composed entirely of whites, and the iron-clad oath being dispensed with, many old citizens appeared on the jury for the first time since the close of the war.

The case of Caesar Griffin, involving the legality of Underwood's decisions, setting aside the action of the State courts whose officers are ineligible under the fourteenth amendment, was called, and will be argued to-morrow.

The Seventeenth Infantry arrived here to-night.

MOBILE, May 3.—The incessant rains of the last ten days have overflowed a large portion of the crops, causing great destruction. All the low land and creek bottoms will have to be replanted, and there is a great scarcity of seed.

OMAHA, May 3.—The Southern Pacific reached its terminus at Promontory Point on Saturday. The Union Pacific road is delayed by heavy rock-cutting and bridging. It is doubtful if the roads meet before the 10th of May.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—It is rumored here in well-informed circles that the corruption which has long been known to characterize all the European consular agencies in Egypt has at length reached that of the United States. Our consul, Mr. Charles Hale, has, it is said, been granted a salary by the Viceroy. It is added that this step has been taken with the advice and concurrence of the French consul general, who is high in favor at the Viceregal court. The rumor may not be well founded, but our informant speaks of it as a well established fact. In official circles it is well known that this is the general Egyptian practice. Ismail Pacha is found to have representative agents from other lands in Egypt, but he wishes them to be as dumb as possible. The Viceroy has strong faith in the power of money. "Backsheesh," he has been known to say, makes even the British lion tame. It appears that henceforth he shall be able to use the same language in regard to the American eagle. He forgets that the United States has a vigilant press, and that the American people will not tolerate such conduct in their foreign agents. This matter ought to be thoroughly sifted. If Mr. Hale has taken money he should be recalled at once.

Mr. Nelson, the new minister to Mexico, will soon proceed to Havana, where a Federal war vessel will convey him to Vera Cruz.

There is no truth in the newspaper statement that the Mexican government proposes to sell Sonora to the United States. Roseerans' dispatches will receive no answer from the State Department, as Nelson's early presence will render answers unnecessary.

Wild statements regarding General Lee's visit to General Grant require the reassertion that the visit was very brief, not exceeding ten minutes, and conversation confined to matters of personal courtesy.

SPAIN.

The Cortes is deliberating on the new constitution, section by section. The article guaranteeing universal suffrage was carried almost unanimously, only fourteen of the deputies dissenting. The article relating to newspapers was finally disposed of. An amendment for establishing a modsrate censorship of the press was rejected, and the original proposition guaranteeing liberty of the press, the freedom of meeting and association, and the right of petition, was carried by a large majority.

The troublesome question of the kingship is still unsettled. An informal meeting of the monarchical party in the Cortes was held on the 21st, with the design of nominating a candidate for the throne. So great was the diversity of opinion that the meeting broke up without result, leaving the members more widely divided than before on the subject. The conduct of General Prim has given rise to a widespread belief that he would not be unwilling to accept the presidency of a Spanish Republic.

CUBA.

The London Morning Post, the Conservative organ, has an elaborate article on the Cuban question, and expressing the English view of it. The writer says: "It is asserted that President Grant has a longing eye on Cuba, and is not unwilling to distract the attention of the American people from their internal affairs by a foreign war. The issue of a conflict between the United States and Spain cannot be doubtful, unless England and France interfere. A blow at Cuba would be a blow at all the West Indies, and the acquisition of Cuba might be followed by the acquisition of Jamaica and Martinique," etc., etc. The Post goes on to quote the recent acquisition of territory by the United States in proof of her desire to acquire piecemeal all the possessions of the European powers in America. It would be natural to begin with Cuba, belonging to the weakest of the three powers holding possession in the West Indies. It may be that France and England will determine whether, in the event of the execution of the designs upon Cuba, they will aid Spain to resume her colony, or calmly look on.

The Cuban American question is agitating French political circles. Special meetings of the French cabinet have been held upon the subject, and it is rumored that a special agent has been dispatched to London to communicate with the English government about the complications likely to arise.

THE LONDON TIMES ON SUMNER.

The Times designates the estimate of American damage put forth by Mr. Sumner as portentous, as it has already reached four hundred and twenty-two millions pounds, and may in the future embrace all the possible earnings of all the soldiers drawn from the fields of productive labor by the war. The speech, it adds, is worthy of Mr. Sumner, and deserves an impartial consideration. He wants, however, something more than national reparation from England, asking for contrition and humiliation. The Times asserts that in this England is cruelly wronged and America has had no useful object to serve by expressions of regret and penitence. Treatics of peace, however, dictated by conquerors at the head of armies, are found to be unencumbered by such expressions. An acknowledgment of the moral liability for those claims, made beforehand, would prejudice the controversy and stultify the proposed settlement, in the event of arbitration. The court declaring England not liable to pay damages, would her apology be taken back? The views taken by Sumner in his arguments on these points are puerile, unreasonable and unstatesmanlike. The Times argues that the concession of belligerent rights to the South was a simple act, and in fact not dependent on the Union blockade, for had there not been a blockade it would not have altered the case to any appreciable degree.

The prevailing tone of Sumner's speech is characterized as passionate and remonstrative, and his menace betrays a one-sided partisanship, lamentable as coming from the representative of a great country. Mr. Sumner makes no complaint against France, although Napoleon was desirous of recognizing the independence of the Southern confederation. It is alleged that, though England is held forth as the only foreign power implacably hostile to America, it is not too much to say that at one moment, during the war, the fate of the American Union depended on the voice of England, whose sword thrown into the scale would have altered the result. She declined the contest, and it evinces a degree of unfairness, bordering on infatuation, to leave this consideration out of the account. It is a common practice with American journalists and politicians to villify England, and the protective tariff plan is popular with them merely as likely to inflict injury on Great Britain. Let atonement be made for the use of insulting language by individuals, and it will be seen whether England and America, by a retrospective verdict of public opinion, will continue the cultivation of mutual respect, which is as necessary as in private relations of life. Nations, as such, only deal in overt acts, and these constitute more possible subjects for pecuniary compensation.

THE AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

This body of distinguished gentlemen, composing the American Medical Association, met in the lower hall of the Mechanics' Institute on Tuesday, May 4, at eleven o'clock A. M., and immediately proceeded to attend to business. The rule of the association restricts the general business of the association to the morning sessions.

Dr. W. O. Baldwin, president, called the meeting to order, and the regular business proceeded. The ex-presidents of the association were invited to seats beside the presiding officer. A special invitation was extended to Dr. Warren Stone, of New Orleans, as being one of the most distinguished gentlemen present, and the request was acceded to. Dr. Lopez, an ex-vice president, was also invited and took his place on the stand.

The meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. Mr. Galleher, of Trinity church.

Dr. T. G. Richardson, of New Orleans, followed with an address of welcome to the gentlemen of the association. The address complimented the members on their advances in the science of medicine, surgery and the general branches incidental to the profession. He paid a pleasant tribute to the amity which is cultivated in this association. His reference to the general community of interest which binds the members together from all sections of the land, which knows no political differences, and to the stores of our South, with its great floral and medicinal treasures, etc., were received with much applause.

The president announced the programme for the day's proceedings. The committees on surgery and anatomy were appointed to meet in the University building; on meteorology, medical topography and epidemic diseases, in the Hall of Mechanics' Institute, at three P. M.

The nomination of members, by invitation, was pronounced by the president.

The usual annual address followed. This was delivered by the president, Dr. W. O. Baldwin. The address was of a very polished character, filled with references to the excellence of the profession, and the amenities and courtesies which make it great and noble. Referring to the unity of its interests and aims which keep its members from animosities and sectional differences, he paid a special tribute to the principles which actuate the members of the profession, regardless of aught but humanity and duty.—He referred to the sympathies which bound them together in the bonds of a great brotherhood that knew no disruption of its catholic spirit, during the sorrowful days of war and battle. Amid the shock of arms they stood above the differences that terrified the world with its horrors, the members of the association practicing the beauties and charities that have ever made the brotherhood noble in all its endurance and Christian practices. The remarks were received with much applause and listened to with profound attention.

Among the members and visitors present, we noticed some of the most celebrated and distinguished gentlemen of the profession in this country. Prominent among these loomed up a head taller than those that stood about him—the towering form of Dr Warren Stone, of our city. The giant intellect of this celebrated man has made a name in the annals of surgery in the South, which is so well known, and has such a wide reputation, that it is impossible for our poor words to add a sentence to the record of his fame.

We also noticed the presence of Dr H M. Skillman, of Lexington, Kentucky; Dr. Alden March, of Albany, New York; Dr. J. C Hupp, of Wheeling, Virginia; Dr. Thomas McKennan, of Washington, Pennsylvania, and many others of note and repute in the profession.—Picayune.

THE Western papers are broaching a project second only in magnitude to that of the Suez Canal or the Pacific Railroad. It is the construction of a grand ship canal, one thousand feet wide by sixty feet deep, across the State of Illinois, uniting Lake Michigan and the Mississippi river. The trade of New York and the Eastern ports is to be thereby diverted to New Orleans, thenceforth the great commercial emporium of America. Of the grand results and changes to be brought about by its completion, an enthusiastic journal speaks as follows: "The river St. Lawrence will become but a brook. Niagara Falls will stand a damp wall of rock. Buffalo, Cleveland, Toledo, Detroit and Milwaukee will be sixty feet above the present high water mark, and millions of acres of new land will appear in the shallows of the lakes. The largest vessels in the world would navigate the Mississippi, and steam tugs of extraordinary power would bring sailing vessels from New Orleans to Chicago in four days. This work will cost $84,000,000."—Times.

PRESIDENT GRANT is sinking in health, under the annoyances of his position. Visitors complain of his irritability and brusqueness. He is frequently indisposed, and refuses to see any one. He runs away every afternoon at four o'clock for a ride and a smoke, and shuts himself up with his family in the evening. The politicians are worrying him to death, and the country must not be surprised if he meets with the fate of Harrison and Taylor before his term is half through. He is so unacquainted with the duties of his civil position that he is obliged to lean on others, and he has already found that those whom he has been obliged to trust have been intriguing against him, and he is said, therefore, to have grown morose and suspicious of everybody.—New York News.

RECENT FLOODS.—The Mobile Register of the 1st says:

The intelligence from the rivers indicates the probability that the flood is the heaviest ever yet known. For sixty miles below Tuscaloosa everything was under water before the last rain, and affairs must be more serious now. Captain Charley Locklin reports that during the Gertrude's last trip it rained every mile of the way from Mobile to Wetumpka. It is not only the overflow, but the extreme saturation and washing of the ground which has interrupted and retarded the operations of agriculture. Replanting of cotton, on a large scale, will be necessary, and even this will have to be relinquished in many instances for want of seed.

"Why don't you ask me how I am?" smilingly said a lady visitor to a four-year-old girl. "I don't want to know," was the little innocent's reply

BOSTON CHRISTIANITY.

It has long been a trite saying that "Boston is the cradle of notions." In relation to "religious notions" this is eminently true. For example, take the latest "religious ideas," dancing in the school and theatricals in the church. Among the many mission institutions for which this city is famous, about the most popular is the Warren street chapel, sustained and conducted by the leading religious denomination. Among the accomplishments taught at this mission school, that of dancing is not the least important—so the managers think; hence, at the last exhibition given by the school in Music Hall, on Washington's birthday, the chief—I might almost say the only—performance given was dancing, and the secular papers next day gave full reports, in a very graphic and descriptive style, of the various fancy dances performed by the children, to the apparent delight of the large and fashionable audience which had assembled to witness the sports. When a denomination will teach dancing in her mission chapels, your readers will not be surprised to learn that the churches are being opened for theatres—at least one of the churches of that denomination. I might almost say the largest church has been so used. That I do not bear false witness, the following notice, which I saw a week ago stuck up in the window of a prominent book store, on Washington street, will prove:

GERMAN
PRIVATE THEATRICALS,
Saturday Afternoons,
At 3 o'clock, at the Rev. J—— F—— C——'s
Church Vestry.
Tickets for Sale Here.
Price, $1 50.

And sure enough, last Saturday at that hour I witnessed large numbers of fashionably dressed people enter the church. What the teaching must be that is taught by the pastor of this church, who is also a professor in "Harvard," I leave your readers to judge.—Correspondent Presbyterian.

THE EARTHQUAKE.—On Thursday afternoon, while we were seated at home eagerly scanning the columns of the evening paper, in search of a sensation, (city people are supposed to require local sensations for digestive purposes, at any rate our city papers act on this presumption,) when suddenly we felt that awful, indescribable motion which so often reminds us that all things of this earth are perishable and not to be relied on for stability—not even the "everlasting hills." We felt the throbbing of the earth's mighty heart, and our own stood still in awe. It was only a slight tremor, but sufficiently distinct to reproduce the feelings that thrilled us on the morning of October 21, 1868. That thirty seconds of convulsion and mortal fear made us skeptical in regard to terra firma, and we have not been able to regain our former faith. It is a dire calamity to find that a dear friend has turned traitor to us; it robs us of our confidence in humanity; but from such a misfortune one may in time recover; it is not often that men become misanthropic. But when Mother Earth "shakes" us we are undone. Talk of the "treacherous ocean"—it is her nature to be unstable; she may glitter and dance and smile, and still we have no confidence in her; she may become wrinkled with heavy frowns and lash herself into a fury of wrath; we shorten topsails, trim ship, and laugh at her. But where is the man who has felt the earth moving under his feet with a smile on his lips? We have felt the pang of mistaken confidence; we know not where to place our feet in safety.—San Francisco Spectator.

GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN, the irrepressible lightning American, is again in the field. His last sensation is the organization of a party of fifteen, to go around the world in ninety days, at an expense of $1,200 each. The party will leave New York in August. Six days to San Francisco, twenty to Japan, and then Shanghai, Canton, Hong Kong, Singapore, Malacca, Penang, Calcutta, Madras, Ceylon, Point de Galle, Aden, Red sea, Suez canal, Land of Abraham, the Nile, Pyramids, and Cairo, Pompey's Pillar, Cleopatra's Needle and the Catacombs at Alexandria, Joppa, Jerusalem, Mount of Olives, Bethlehem, Dead sea, River Jordan, Damascus, Beyrout, Smyrna, Rhodes, Constantinople, Trieste, Venice, Berlin, Frankfort, Brussels, Paris, London, Dublin, to New York. The party is already completed and no doubt will try and make the schedule.—Times.

OPELOUSAS RAILROAD.

The true condition of affairs, as we understand the case, is this: If Mr Morgan buys that part of the Opelousas railroad now built from Algiers to Berwick's Bay, eighty miles in length—and it is almost certain that he will do so, if it is sold—he could not if he would, and it is reasonably certain that he would not if he could, build it a single foot beyond Brashear.

If the road, therefore, is sold, then the property holders and planters of St. Mary, Iberia, St. Martin, St. Landry and the rest, will have no more prospects of having a railroad than if no portion of the road had ever been built.

A writer in our paper of yesterday says: "The city has given her bonds for $1,500,000, the State for $600,000, (should be $650,000,) making over two millions in all. Should the road be sold, all this money is lost, and we and our descendants will be taxed for three generations to make up this loss. Your property is bound for every cent of this money."

It is easy to prevent this loss, and easy to secure the immediate extension of this railroad to Vermilionville, and thence to the Sabine river, and to a connection with all the railroads in Texas, by a joint effort at this time. We urge upon our city and country property holders, bankers, and business men generally, to come forward to unite to contribute and make the proposed plan a complete success, and we feel justified in believing that it will succeed.—Picayune, May 6.

The Houston Telegraph is very severe on our people for not giving such aid to the Opelousas railroad as would secure its completion to Texas.

Such a people with such indifference, sleeping over their own interest, deserve no sympathy. Let them sleep on and wake up when they find the trade of Texas seeking intercourse with a people who have more energy, enterprise and liberality. Let them sleep on in fancied security, until they find that they have lost a trade which would have brought them more millions per month than are needed to complete the road to Houston.

GRANT has thought better of his peace policy toward the Indians, and now proposes sandwiching each of the twelve Quakers between two unattached army officers. This will make a pretty fair average; but only think of Aminidab Sleek out on the hunting grounds in company alone with Captain Murphy Maguire and Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines. They have so many views in common, and such assimilating natures, that a perfect harmony is apt to result. If there is anything Broadbrim loathes and despises, it is shoulder straps, and either this last act of Grant's must be regarded as the refinement of jocular cruelty, or the development of a most crooked, wavering and contradictory policy.

CARD PLAYING.—I have all my days had a card-playing community open to my observation, and I am yet to be made to believe that a game which is the universal resort of the starved in soul and intellect, which has never in any way linked with itself tender, elevating, or beautiful associations, the tendency of which is unduly to absorb the attention from more weighty matters, can recommend itself to the favor of Christ's disciples. The use of culture and genius may embellish, but can never dignify it. I have this moment ringing in my ears the dying injunction of my father's early friend: "Keep your sons from cards; over them I've murdered time and lost heaven."

A NOVEL WEAPON.—A Parisian has invented an electric cane, which is intended as a defense against highwaymen and burglars. It consists of a horn inserted in the end of a cane, which horn contains an electric battery and a lamp with two powerful reflectors. The intensity of this light temporarily blinds any person at whom it is pointed. The lamp is kindled at will by pressing a small knob at the other end of the cane, which knob communicates with an electric wire.

CASES OF SNAKE BITE TREATED BY HALFORD'S METHOD.—A correspondent of an English medical journal reports three cases of snake bite, treated successfully by Halford's method, which consists in injecting into one of the large veins liquor ammonia, diluted with two or three times its quantity of water. Twenty to thirty drops of the solution should be introduced.

NUMBERS FOR THE SORROWFUL.

Trust him who is thy God and have no fear:
His eyelids ache not with the drowse of sleep,
He cannot tire, and how should He forget?

Self-centred in his own infinity,
He that is all is cause and law of all:
Alike in orb and atom infinite.

The worlds He soweth broadcast with his hand,
As o'er the glebe the sower soweth seed,
Till with his glory all the heavens are sown.

Yet perfect from his shaping fingers sent,
The rain-drop glitters populous with life,
And in a jewelled surcoat wheels the gnat.

Behold the yearly miracle of spring!
The pinky nipples of the budding leaves
Break in a night, and, lo! the wood is green!

Art thou more bare than is the winter wood,
Or less esteemed of Him who gives thee joy
In the fresh rustle of the April leaves?

And if thy prime be gone and thou lament,
"The leaves are falling and the fruit is done!"
Yet shrink not from the winter of thy days.

See where the cruel winds have swept the trees,
And all are branching bare against the night,
There, in the barren spaces, hang the stars!

So, when the leafage of thy days is past,
And life is desolate, repine thou not:
God can give thee the stars of heaven for fruit!

Nor fear thou death. God's law is gain in loss:
Growth and decay obey a common law,
The starry blossom and the seed are one.

Think! Thou wert born and fashioned for a world
Assorted to thy needs and thy delights,
And wherein thou has dwelt and had content.

Not of thy strength or cunning didst thou come
Into the fief and heritage of life,
And shall all fail thee in thy going hence?

The salt foam of the sea upon thy lips,
The blown sand of the desert in thy face;
Shall these outlast the ages and not thee?

Content thy soul and comfort thee in this:
In God's design is neither best nor worst,
But ever-ordered change is ordered good:

In Him love rounds the infinite of might,
And He who giveth both to live and die
Is equal Lord of Life and Lord of Death.

Jasper District, Mobile Conference.

JASPER, ALABAMA, April, 1869.

BISHOP G. F. PIERCE—Rev. and Dear Sir: In the ever changing scenes of an itinerant preacher's life, if you have ever been called to take a helpless family and move five hundred miles—from the Gulf to the mountains—in the dead of winter, without a dime in your pocket, and no known resource of getting the amount necessary for such an emergency, then you can easily imagine my bewilderment when you announced my name in connection with this district. But it is said, "Where there is a will there is a way." So I found it.

Friends came to my relief, and, before I dreamed of it, we were packed up and on our way. A kind Providence prospered the journey, so that instead of the delicate health of my wife giving way under the fatigue of travel, as my fears had depicted, it improved every day.—The children, too, who had been literally cooped up for the two past years, grew more cheerful and rosy as we moved on over mountains and rocks, and rain and snow. One week's travel found us all safe at our new home, where a cordial reception and kind attention soon made us forget that we were among strangers.

I have just closed my first round, and beg leave to make a short report, and give some of the thoughts that this new standpoint has forced upon my mind. The winter has been severe, the rain abundant, and the water courses high; but through the mercy of God I have been able to meet all my appointments except one. The preachers were all at their posts in good time, and are doing well. The most of the quarterly meetings have been well attended, and were occasions of interest as well as of profit to the church. The church and the people generally are beginning to look up and take courage. The finances of the most of the district are moving off well. The spiritual animus of the church is quite encouraging. Only a few seem to have gone into winter quarters this season. Under the blessings of God we expect a useful and a happy year.

I tell you, bishop, a quarterly meeting means something in this country. The three or four thousand members in this district are not near ready to give up this wheel in our machinery. Though it be a fifth wheel, yet it is the pivot on which great interest turns, and without which the machine cannot be run here without colliding with projecting cliffs, or running off into yawning chasms that would involve life itself. As steam cars have no need of a fifth wheel, for aught we know up here a "railroad district" might dispense with the office of presiding elder; at least we can see how he must follow the track however rich the field of harvest beyond the hills. Be that as it may, the church here wants no change in our machinery; at least no change that would involve such organic principles as stand or fall with the office of presiding elder. But while the people here are satisfied with the machinery of the church as it is, and while they have no complaints to make against the men who have been sent here to run it, yet it is a notorious fact that this district has been denied that variety of talent which our Conference affords, and which was originally more generally distributed. In saying this I cast no reflections upon any one, for the idea involved here is the central idea of our itinerant system. The objective point in our economy is not the mere changing of preachers from one place to another, but the distribution of talent—the distribution of the greatest variety of talent to the greatest number of places possible, so that every grade and class of society in each locality might be reached. To do this changes were inevitable; but changing was the mode by which another object was intended to be accomplished. Here is the pyramid which has been inverted, and whose gyrations threaten to grind us to powder! Wherever the whole corps of presiding elders of any Conference has been selected from any one class of men, another class selected for the stations, and another for the circuits—one for the Gulf and another for the mountains—one for the center and another for the border—and these lines of demarkation have been kept down for a time, it has produced friction, which the oil of mere changing will not, cannot lubricate.

Why, sir, it does not take a bishop to see that a man may be kept pent up in a station or one of our little circuits until he feels that all the interest of the church centers there, and that all its grand machinery ought to be and must be adjusted and modified to suit the narrow bounds of the sphere in which he lives and moves. But you take that man and throw him out on a mountain circuit or district, and, my word for it, he will find that the wants of the church—the very thing which he thought he understood to perfection—are a "bigger thing" than he had ever dreamed of. Nothing but an itinerant episcopacy saves our bishops from the narrow views of local influences. And, sir, if you and your venerable colleagues share the hard and soft places in regular rotation in your field of labor, why may not all your subordinates do the same in their field of labor? Yet, so far as a large class of our preachers are available for any locality, where do we stand to-day? In what direction is the needle of legislation pointing? What is it but local influences that distracts that needle and turns it from the magnetic pole of true itinerancy? What does that man who never received an appointment outside of a station know about the practical working of our system as a whole? What a change would one year on a mountain district produce in his mind about the wants of Methodism? What a grand system our itinerancy is when manned by men who are willing to endure the hardships and sacrifices it imposes!—But how terribly it crushes and grinds when we miss our way and fall into its ponderous wheels! No wonder those who never have fully adjusted themselves to it cry out for a change in its very organism. But if we take out all the cogs and wheels that threaten danger, we lessen the danger by curtailing the efficiency of the machine! Who represent a non-itinerant clergy and a diocesan episcopacy in "the regions beyond?"

We ask again, Where are we tending?—where are we likely to take up? As things are now drifting, how long, think you, we are likely to steer clear of the shallows, beyond which no other church has ever been able to explore? We may shut our eyes, or look in another direction, but there are breakers ahead! This local or classified itinerancy has perverted the needle and we have lost our reckoning. Already has the name of "circuit rider" become odious in some of our city charges! Many of them would feel like rebelling if you or any of your colleagues were to send them a pastor next year who had always been on a circuit, whatever might be his gifts and graces!

Many of our stationed preachers would feel deeply mortified—let angels blush!—if they were appointed to any one of our large circuits or mountain districts!

This is not all. While "circuit riders" are below par in our towns and cities, there has also grown up a prejudice in the country charges against the stationed preachers.—They are regarded by many as being proud, and holding themselves above country people.

Everything in the country is looked upon by the city people as being "old fogy;" while everything in the city is regarded by the country people as a departure from "old Methodism." The preacher in the station wonders why these mountain boys are no better posted in polite literature, not knowing that a man who has to travel on horseback two or three hundred miles, and preach from twenty five to thirty times a month, has no time left for study. The preacher who has never been in a station thinks that the station preacher has almost nothing to do, because he knows but little about the amount of study and pastoral work connected with such a charge. How a little well-timed transposition might have kept the vessel well trimmed. We trust it is not too late to apply the remedy yet. There is but little time or opportunity for study on these large charges. We need a few men thrown into this country who are already posted. What a work could one of our first class men do in this country! What a field opens here for even a young man who has enjoyed good opportunities for acquiring knowledge—who has acquired mental discipline—whose mind is now prepared to do its own work!

The faithful corps of men who have cultivated this field up to this time deserve all praise. Some of them have accomplished wonders, under the circumstances. But it is no discredit to them to say that there is material here that they cannot reach—work which they cannot do. It is true that they have done a work that a bishop could not do; but it is also true that a bishop could do here what they cannot accomplish.

This whole country is white to the harvest! My soul is stirred as I ride over it and see the magnitude of the work to be done! We need help—men ready to "endure hardships as good soldiers." The work must go forward, whether reinforcement comes or not. With the self-sacrificing corps of staff officers you gave me, aided by the noble corps of subordinates I find in the ranks, and the three thousand five hundred regulars, with the blessing of God, we expect to take this country.

Your obedient servant,

J. M. BOLAND.

Dip the ends of nails into grease, and they will drive easily into any hard wood, where they would otherwise double and break.

[Caution.—Be sure to grease the right end. We once knew an old lady who had 'a garden to pale,' and hired a kind of jack-at-all-trades man in the neighborhood 'to fix it up.' She had also heard of the above recipe, from her preacher, a sterling specimen of the Hard-shell Baptist school. By some unaccountable misapprehension, the fault of either the giving or the receiving of the information, the wrong end of the nails was greased! Mr Jones, after divers and sundry efforts to drive, in which his thumb and fingers received as many blows, threw down his tools, with an exclamation more pointed than pious, and declared he 'would never attempt to drive another greased nail!'—San Francisco Spectator.]

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The London Engineer has a long and interesting article on the American Pacific Railroads. It much doubts if they can be worked on the highest levels during the winter months, and regards the route as out of the question for China travelers, it being more expensive and longer than the Peninsular and Oriental route. The Engineer, speaking of the Central Pacific Railroad, says:

"The line is carried across wide ravines on timber trestling, in some cases ninety feet high.—Many of these viaducts are sharply curved and steeply inclined, and for a train to run over them at a high speed would be certain death. Timber, however, is not spared in their construction; they are very light—likely to be safe enough as long as the material remains sound. The company are under an obligation to the government to replace them by embankments or stone viaducts within a given period.

"The gradients become very abrupt as the higher levels of the Sierra are approached, in some cases being as much as one in twenty. The height of the summit station is about seven thousand five hundred feet above the sea, at an altitude considerably above the snow limit in that latitude. At the season when we passed over the line—late in the autumn—there was, of course, less snow than at any other time during the year. Nevertheless, it lay in considerable masses in the ravines, and many indications threatened serious danger from the winter drifts and avalanches. Snow falls on the Sierra Nevada during the winter in extraordinary abundance. It is asserted by settlers in the neighborhood that the average depth over the upper ranges, in places where no drifts have taken place, is not less than thirty-five feet. It is difficult to imagine how a line of railway could be kept in working order under such conditions. In all exposed situations the 'track,' as the Americans always call it, has been protected by massive sheds constructed of complete tree-trunks, but it is needless to say that these are not extended over the whole line; and even where they exist some old residents shake their heads at them, and even deny their power to withstand the pressure they will be called upon to bear.

"The line is carried along for a considerable distance at a very high level through some of the sternest and wildest scenery in the world, with giant pines one hundred and fifty to two hundred feet high on every side. Vast expanses of black forest, covering precipitous slopes, sweep down into rugged valleys thousands of feet deep, and in all directions the white capped, jagged peaks of the Sierra bound the view. In one place a large and dreary lake is seen by the traveler far below him; and utter desolation, unrelieved by any pleasanter sign of human handiwork than the stumps of fallen trees beside the line, reigns over the landscape. The track descends by rather gentler gradients than those on the western side, but the character of the work is everywhere the same. It is needless to add that all the way the line consists of a single pair of rails. The surface of the ground is roughly dressed. Sleepers—called, or mis-called in America, 'ties'—are laid down at intervals of two or two and a half feet, and a flanged rail is fastened upon them by spikes, driven in at the side. Nothing can be rougher or cheaper than such a line, and no fast trains could be run upon it; but even on the railways in the Eastern States of America the speed is very low, and in the far West—with one passenger train a day—it may be imagined that the public has to be very patient when traveling by rail."

"Nothing can be rougher or cheaper than such a line," says this authority, and yet the people are told by the managers of this affair that the "mere grading" cost in certain cases $100,000.—The London Engineer does not know the extent of this great swindle upon the people, but it easily discovers the impracticability of the route for Eastern freight or passengers.

A DIVERSION THAT NEVER TIRES. "You ask me, my children," writes Margaret, Duchess of Alencon, the favorite sister of Francis I, of France, and a devoted Christian woman, "to do a very difficult thing—to invent a diversion that will drive away your ennui. I have been seeking all my life to effect this; but I have found only one remedy, which is reading the Holy Scriptures. In perusing them my mind experiences its true and perfect joy, and from this pleasure of the mind proceed the repose and health of the body.

"If you desire me to tell you what I do to be so gay and well at my advanced age, it is because as soon as I get up I read these sacred books. There I see and contemplate the will of God, who sent his Son to us on earth to preach that holy word, and to announce the sweet tidings that He promises to pardon our sins and extinguish our debts by giving us His Son, who loved us, and who suffered and died for our sakes. This idea so delights me that I take up Psalms and sing them with my heart, and pronounce with my tongue as humbly as possible the fine hymns with which the Holy Spirit inspired David and the sacred authors.

"The pleasure I receive from this exercise so transports me that I consider all the evils which may happen to me through the day to be real blessings, for I place Him in my heart by faith who endured more misery for me. Before I sup I retire in the same manner, to give my soul a congenial lesson. At night I review all I have done in the day. I implore pardon for my faults; I thank God for His favors; and I lie down in His love, in His fear, and in His peace, free from every worldly anxiety."

SAVAGES have an awkward way, sometimes, of arguing on first principles. The London Review gives the following instance:

A Maori chief has been lecturing Colonel Whitmore, the commander of the force sent against the rebel natives in New Zealand, on the abstract rights of the case. Two men belonging to this chief's party rode into the British camp at Woodalls and delivered a letter from their great man (who bears the high-sounding name of Tito Kowaru,) in which, after the terse little exordium, "This is a piece of earnest and sound advice for Whitmore," and the courteous form, "Salutations to you!" the writer asks: "Whom does England belong to, and to whom belongs the land or country you are now standing upon?" And he then goes on: "I will tell you: the heavens and the earth were made at one time. In one day man was created, and all productions of any kind that are in the world; and if you think or are aware that God created all, it is well—we are equal thereon. You were formed a European, and England was formed as your country; we are Maories, in New Zealand. There has been placed between you and me a wide barrier—an ocean. Why did you not consider, or take thought before you crossed over here? I did not go from here over to you. Stand away from my place to your own country in the middle of the ocean; go away from the town to some other place." Tito's cosmogony seems a little old-fashioned and out of date; but this reasoning on national rights has a very awkward cogency. His final advice to the colonel, "Arise, and be baptized," is hardly so pertinent, because there can be little doubt that the gallant officer was long ago subjected to that religious ceremonial. But, on the whole, there is something about Tito Kowaru which one cannot help respecting.

BIRDS AND THEIR USES.—Baron Von Tschudi, the well known Swiss naturalist, says:

"Without birds successful agriculture is impossible. They annihilate, in a few months, a greater number of destructive insects than human hands can accomplish in the same number of years. Among the most useful birds for this purpose may be classed the swallow, wren, robin redbreast, titmouse, sparrow and finch."

Tschudi tested a titmouse upon the rose bushes of his neighbors, and rid the same in a few hours of innumerable lice. A robin redbreast killed about eight hundred flies in an hour. A pair of night swallows destroyed in fifteen minutes an immense swarm of gnats. A pair of wrens flew thirty-six times in an hour, with insects in their bills, to their nests. He considers the sparrow very important, a pair of them carrying in a single day three hundred worms or caterpillars to their nests—certainly a good compensation for the few cherries they pluck from the trees. The generality of small birds carry to their young ones, during the feeding period, nothing but insects, worms, snails, spiders, etc. Sufficient interest should be manifested by all to prevent the discharge of firearms in the vicinity of orchards, vineyards, and flower-gardens, as thereby the useful birds become frightened.

CONVENT EDUCATION.—The Canadian Independent, in an article on "convent education," protests strongly against the practice of Protestant parents in sending their children to convents to be educated. It says that by reason of the supervision of the Roman Catholic clergy over their flock, the question of secular education becomes a religious one. The masses have nothing to say in the matter. But Protestants are granted certain immunities and protection by legislation. Their colleges and schools are acknowledged to be infinitely superior to Roman Catholic institutions, and unprejudiced Romanists even avail themselves of their advantages for their children. For Protestant parents to educate their sons and daughters at convents is inconsistent with Protestant principles, as they thus make an actual concession to Rome. In connection with this subject, the Daily Witness of Montreal states the case of two ladies, pupils in a nunnery. One made her escape, but was forcibly returned to the convent by men who claimed that they were acting under authority of the priests. The other was a young lady from Rhode Island, who, after making repeated attempts to escape, for each of which she was severely punished, made a profession of Romanism in order to escape further persecution.

HOUSEKEEPER'S DEPARTMENT.

AN EXPENSIVE BREAKFAST.

There seems to be a diversity of opinion about one of Cleopatra's breakfasts. It was the most costly breakfast that has ever been served to a single human being. I will, therefore, tell what I know about it. After having partaken of Cleopatra's necklace, Mark Antony determined to devise the costliest breakfast ever given. After several days of gastronomical meditations, not having found what he was looking for, he summoned his cook to his presence, and told him that if he could get up a dainty breakfast for a lady, which should be composed of as few and as small dishes as possible, and, at the same time, be most costly, he would reward him accordingly.

Several weeks afterward the cook entered Mark Antony's study and told him that he was ready to serve the dainty breakfast asked of him, and that it was composed of one olive only. At the appointed hour the cook entered the dining room, followed by one hundred men carrying the olive, in its artificial envelope, on their shoulders. They deposited it on a table made for the occasion, and fifty carvers were set to work on it. After several hours of hard work the triumphant cook placed the olive before the Egyptian Queen, who looked at it with amazement, still with perfect delight.

The olive had been prepared in the following way: After having been stoned it was stuffed with a rich custard, then put inside of a boned canary, which was used to stuff an ortolan. The latter was placed inside of a boned oriole, which was used to stuff a thrush, which thrush stuffed a boned lark. A boned snipe was stuffed with the lark and placed inside of a robin, which was used to stuff a plover, and which latter bird filled a quail, which was then placed inside of a pigeon. The pigeon filled a woodcock, the woodcock a partridge, the latter a grouse, the grouse a pheasant, the pheasant a chicken, the chicken a guinea fowl, which was placed inside of a goose; the goose filled a turkey, the turkey a swan, the latter an ostrich, which was used to stuff a sheep, the sheep a calf, the calf an antelope, the latter a pig, the pig a deer, the deer a bear, the bear a heifer, the latter an elk, the elk an ox, the ox a hippopotamus, the latter an elephant. The olive was then roasted in its envelope, which envelope was then thrown away and the olive only was served.—Pierre Blot, in March Galaxy.

THERE are no Sabbath schools in Vienna, no prayer meetings, no gatherings for the study of the Bible. That is a sealed book to the multitude—a dangerous book.—There are numerous churches, priests by the thousand; there is much of religious observance, of high ritualism, tho burning of candles, incense, procession, display of banners and crucifixes, excellent singing—the best music; there are numerous hospitals, and the people of Vienna and the church are not behind other cities in their charities; and yet this city has the name of being the most dissolute of any in Europe.

THE MER DE GLACE.

The feeling of astonishment and dread which these "ice morsels" produce at a distance is greatly increased by a closer acquaintance with their physiognomy. Everywhere their surface is broken up into rents or fissures called crevasses. These are largest and most numerous at the edges, and are caused by the motion of the glacier over the inequalities of its bed. They are sometimes very deep, the plummet failing to find bottom at the depth of six or seven hundred feet; and they vary in width from a narrow crack, over which a child can step, to yawning chasms three or four hundred feet across. It is no easy task to thread one's way among their slippery labyrinths. So tortuous is the maze into which the traveler is led that escape often seems hopeless; while so narrow is the neck of ice that separates the one from the other that there is often hardly standing-room between them, and the unconscious dangers behind have to be guarded against as well as the obvious ones before. During a fall of snow many of the crevasses are concealed by a treacherous covering of it, and the surface of the ice looks uniformly smooth and white. In these circumstances a single incautious step may be attended with the most fatal consequences; and no traveler should cross a glacier so coated without carefully sounding his way and being tied with a rope to his guides. In the higher ice regions the crevasses are on a vast scale; but even on the more disturbed parts of the Mer de Glace they present a spectacle of great grandeur. In crossing the glacier on my way homeward from the Couvercle I had often to retrace my steps, or take a long circuitous route, in order to avoid them. Some of them were fringed with icicles of the most fantastic shapes, and others had smooth, perpendicular walls of glittering ice. I had the curiosity to descend into one, which happened to be choked up at a depth of thirty or forty feet by huge boulders of granite; and the appearance which it presented was most magical. It was like a fairy-palace of sapphire; the walls of ice around me being of the loveliest and most vivid blue color, radiating a soft cerulean light throughout the whole place. There was a coldness and unearthliness about it, however, which repelled, and prevented me from fully enjoying its exquisite beauty; and I remember well the involuntary shudder that crept through my frame as I looked down through the vacant space between the boulders into the blue gloom of the fearful abyss, hundreds of feet below, and listened to the hollow, all-pervading murmurs of the subglacial streams that came up to my ear like the groans of tortured spirits.

Accidents in these crevasses have been very numerous. Hardly a year passes but one or other of them forms the grave of some hapless traveler or mountaineer. About the end of last century the innkeeper of Grindewald fell into a deep crevasse in the upper glacier which flows into that beautiful valley. Happening to fall gradually from ledge to ledge, he reached the bottom in a state of insensibility, but not seriously injured. When he awoke from his stupor he found himself in an ice cavern with a stream flowing through an arch at its extremity. Following the course of this stream along a narrow tunnel, which was in some places so low in the roof that he could scarcely squeeze himself through on his hands and knees, he came out at last at the end of the glacier into the open air. A priest of the same district was not so fortunate. Being an enthusiastic student of natural history, he set out one day to explore the higher regions of the same glacier, accompanied by a guide. Late in the evening the guide returned to the village alone, asserting that his companion had fallen into a crevasse. Suspicion was excited that he had been murdered for the sake of the money and valuables which he carried about with him; and for twelve days a diligent search was made for his body without success. At last they came to an awful chasm, which the guide identified as the scene of the tragedy. A man was let down by a rope with a lighted lantern round his neck, and twice was he drawn up in a state of exhaustion, but the third time he returned with the corpse in his arms. It was horribly mangled, but all the property was safe, and so this Judas turned out to be "not Iscariot." Jacques Balmat, who was the first to set foot on the virgin summit of Mont Blanc, a feat which he accomplished all alone, terminated his adventurous career in one of the most frightful crevasses in a glacier of Mont Ronan. A most touching story is told of a Russian gentleman who fell into a deep chasm in the St. Theodule glacier about seven years ago. As his guides looked over the edge, they saw him far below, wedged in between two walls of ice, "with his head down, waving his right arm, which was free, for help." They let down their rope, but it was not long enough to reach him. One guide ran to the nearest habitation, many miles off, to get a longer one, while the other remained beside the spot. "Pray for me; I need your prayers," came in a faint voice from the depths. For five terrible hours, that seemed as long as centuries, the poor prisoner's hand was seen rising and falling in dumb, piteous entreaty. Slower and feebler grew the motion, and at last the arm fell down forever in the stillness of death. When the guide came with the rope all was over. He called again and again, but no voice replied. It is impossible to exaggerate the horrors of such a fate, and the imagination shrinks from picturing the feelings of the wretched man as minute after minute passed without succor, and his life ebbed slowly away, frozen in the Medean embrace of the glacier. The mercilessness of nature strikes one forcibly in such situations. It ploughs its resistless way with equal carelessness over palpitating human flesh and blood as over the insensible rock, and engulfs in its icy bosom a warm, loving, human heart with the same steadiness as it does a boulder stone. Oh how weak and helpless is man when thrown forth from the social scenes and comforts of civilized life, and forced to contend with the stern energies of the physical world! It is a blessed thought, however, that we are not left in the power of blind, unsympathetic nature. There is One who "casteth forth His ice like morsels," upon whose infinite pity and futherly love we can count, and whose strength is made perfect in our weakness. The display of His power is at the same time the revelation of His heart; and the forces of nature, when connected, as they ever should be by us, with His guidance and control, are not reasonless, merciless forces, but the kind servants of a holy Will, the faithful messengers of an Intellect that cannot err.

Beside crevasses, the surface of the glacier exhibits many other strange phenomena. Great blocks of stone, many of them tons in weight, rest on the smooth and slippery ice as lightly as sea-gulls on the crests of the billows. They are sometimes so delicately poised on the edge of a chasm that a touch, a sound, the slightest vibration of the air, sends them into the abyss with a loud reverberation. Huge fragments of rock by the score are seen lifted up on slender pyramids of ice, ten or twelve feet high, only to be hurled down again when these capricious columns have melted. All these boulders are broken off by the weather from the precipitous rocks that tower above the flanks of the glacier and fall upon its surface; and it is one of the strangest things imaginable to see them day by day borne slowly onward by the motion of the ice, until at last they are buried into the huge heaps of mud and stones called moraines, which the glacier deposits at its termination. It is extremely dangerous to stand beside or beneath the end of a glacier, on account of the volleys of stones that are constantly discharged from it. Such boulders are the movable milestones by which the motion of the glacier is made palpable to the eye. It is so contrary to our usual observation and experience to be told that vast structures of ice like these can move, that we require a simpler and more obvious test of its truth than the explanations of scientific men. There is no ductility that we can see in the substance. It seems as hard and inflexible as iron, flies in pieces beneath the blow of a hammer and cuts the flesh like a knife. And yet, notwithstanding the evidence of our senses, the onward movement of the stones convinces us that "it moves still." Nor can the imagination fail to be powerfully impressed when it contemplates the slow and gradual but constant march of these stupendous accumulations of ice. Every particle of snow that falls upon the heights above is pressed down into these glaciers, undergoes all the changes to which in form and substance they are exposed by the pressure of their own mass and by the irregularities of the rocky surface over which they flow, and at last it arrives at the terminal moraine, and there weeps its chill life away. The motion of glaciers varies in different parts—being more rapid at the center and on the surface, and slower at the bottom and sides. They have been calculated to advance in general on an average at the rate of five hundred feet a year. A very remarkable incident was the means of shedding considerable light upon this difficult problem. In the year 1820 three of the guides who accompanied Dr. Hamel, of St. Petersburg, in his ascent of Mont Blanc, were swept by an avalanche into a crevasse in the upper portion of the Glacier de Bossons. In 1861 traces of them were found in the shape of a knapsack, lantern, two skulls and portions of human limbs to which particles of flesh still adhered, on the surface of the lower levels of the glacier. Thus, after an entombment of forty years, these bodies, by the nourring laws of nature, were disgorged; and the distance between the spot where they perished and that in which they were found, indicated the rate of motion of the most precipitous and tumultuous of all the glaciers on Mont Blanc.

There are no less than five hundred and forty glaciers in Switzerland, of which the mightiest mass is the Bernina, and the most extensive the great Aletsch Glacier, fifteen miles in length. The glacier domain extends from Mont Blanc in Savoy to the Ortler Spitz in the Tyrol, over an area of more than a thousand square miles. And yet mighty as these "ice morsels" are, they are as nothing compared with the great glacier systems of the Arctic and Antarctic regions. Dr. Kane describes one in the far north which presents a continuous sea cliff of ice more than a thousand feet in height and seventy miles in breadth; and the terrible mysteries of frost and fire in the Antarctic regions are rendered inaccessible by a glacier cliff called Victoria Barrier, four hundred miles long, one hundred and twenty broad, and upward of eighteen feet in depth, descending into the sea from the frozen sides of the burning volcano of Mount Erebus. It is from these grim walls, guarding the northern and southern poles, that icebergs are broken off, which serve to modify the temperature of the regions between, and whose vast size and fantastic shapes excite the curiosity as they appall the heart of the mariner. When our imagination realizes, in some faint degree, these wonders of the frost kingdom, we are overwhelmed by the thought that He who "casteth forth His ice like morsels" is the God with whom we have to do. "Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow? or hast thou seen the treasures of the hail? By the breath of God frost is given; and the breadth of the waters is straitened."

ICE MORSELS.

And not wantonly or capriciously are these morsels of ice cast forth. There is no waste of power with the Almighty. There is an economy in nature's miracles as well as in those of grace. We are not accustomed to think of frost and ice as affording evidences of benevolent design; on the contrary, we regard them with dread as elements of destruction and death. And yet for beauty and usefulness, for ministering to the corporeal wants and the æsthetic tastes of man, they yield to no other objects of nature. Examine under the microscope one of the flakes of snow that fall—so pure and white from clouds so black—and no lily or snowdrop can be more beautiful than that blossom of cold. It is six-leaved; it radiates on every side in the most exquisite crystalline forms, so ethereal, so spiritual, like the ghosts of the flowers that perished in the summer, coming back again from heaven to earth. Ice is but a mass of starry crystals closely compacted together.

When the rays of the sun are directed, by means of a lens, into a piece of pure ice, the most wonderful change is produced in its structure, clearly revealing the mode of its formation. Along the line which the concentrated sunlight traverses in the interior of the ice, hundreds of liquid flowers of six petals, sometimes isolated and sometimes grouped in bouquets, but all preserving with the utmost distinctness the starry outline, flash back the light like burnished silver, and form a spectacle of novel and entrancing beauty. And what can be lovelier than the glittering jewels with which the hoar-frost bedizens every leaf and spray of the woodland, or the translucent azure of the glacier crevasses with their long pendants of lustrous ice? There are beautiful things in winter as well as in summer, and we need the cold, unearthly splendors of the one as much as the glowing, living charms of the other to educate our sense of God's greatness in His works. But beauty is everywhere in nature the flower of utility, and in the realms of frost this quality is most strikingly displayed. The covering of ice which seals up our streams and lakes prevents the water from being frozen to any considerable depth, preserves its inhabitants from destruction, and places it at all times within reach of man.

The glaciers of Switzerland serve most important purposes in the economy of nature. They are placed where they are by a wise and benevolent arrangement. They bring down the refreshing coolness of the Alpine summits into the hot and stifling valleys; they repress, in their calm and placid bosoms, the violence of the avalanche and the rage of the torrent; and carry within reach of man, in tamed and measured usefulness, forces which, if allowed to leap suddenly from the mountain tops at their own fierce will, would convert some of the fairest regions of Europe into waste and howling deserts. From them all the great rivers of the Continent spring; and thus a constant and unfailing supply of water, in summer's drought and winter's frost, is provided for all the uses, commercial and domestic, of the highest civilization. The vapors that fall in the shape of snow on the Alpine peaks are collected and frozen in these gigantic reservoirs, and thus borne, gradually and safely down the mountain sides, until they reach a point, often amid green fields and human habitations, where they remain stationary, the supply above and the waste below being exactly equal. At this point a full-bodied, arrowy stream, like the Arveiron from the Mer de Glace, caused by the melting of the glacier in the warmer temperature, issues from a cavern in the ice and flows down the valley, nourishing the meadows along its course. Turbid with mud ground from the rocks by the glacier, it gradually, as it descends and becomes more tranquil, deposits this mud along its banks, which are thus continually shifting, and year by year new soil and new elements of fertility are imparted as far as the stream extends. The loss of the mountain is the gain of the valley, and from the ruins of the Alps, by this sublime agency, many of the most luxuriant meadows in Switzerland and Italy are formed. All this ought surely to convince us that God "casteth forth His ice like morsels," not aimlessly or at random, where it may work ruin and death, but with that gracious care and wise forethought for life and beauty which are so conspicuous in all the physical arrangements of Him whose "tender mercies are over all His works."

Yet more. These "ice morsels" have been powerful instruments in ages past in shaping our earth. They have been, as they still are where they occur, nature's giant sculptors. The mountain ranges that were ejected from the burning depths of volcanoes into the freezing cold of the sky, were ground down into smooth and flowing outlines by the sliding of glaciers over them. In the Scottish Highlands we can trace, by the unmistakable signs which they have left behind, the presence and operation of ancient glaciers. Our valleys are made picturesque by their moraine-mounds, our hillsides are strewn with their gray boulders, and our rocks are smoothed and grooved by their powerful chisels. The soft and rounded contour of our mountains, on which the effects of light and shade at noon are so exquisite, and whose quiet beauty steals into the heart and lifts it up to a region of immortal peace like their own, has been molded by ice, passing from the high ranges of the interior outward and seaward ages and ages ago. The glory of Lebanon itself was due to the ice morsels which God once scattered on its summits. The fragrant cedars had their roots in the moraines deposited in the Kedisha valley by glaciers, that, under very different conditions of climate, once occupied the upper regions of the mountain. Revelations like these, which modern science has made, open up new vistas of marvelous thought in the calm old Bible subjects, and show to us how, by the most unfavorable means in the field of nature, as in the sphere of human life, the All-Wise brings order out of confusion and life out of death. The Alpine flowers are warmed by the snow; the summer beauty of our hills and the autumn fertility of our valleys have been caused by the cold embrace of the glacier; and so by the chill of trial and sorrow are the outlines of the Christian character molded and beautified. And we, who recognize the loving kindness as well as the power of God in what may seem the harsher and more forbidding agencies of nature, ought not to be weary and faint in our minds if over our own warm human life the same kind, pitying Hand should sometimes cause His snow of disappointment to fall like wool and cast forth His ice of adversity like morsels, knowing that even by these unlikely means shall ultimately be given to us too, as to nature, the beauty of Sharon and the excellency of Carmel.—Bible Teachings in Nature, Macmillan.

COURAGE AT THE BAR.—It has been the boast of the British bar for centuries past that it has ever stood forth as the defender of popular rights against the invasion of power; and one of its chiefest glories is found in the chronicles of the victories it has won in many contests on that noble field. Its American pupils and associates have hitherto followed in the same path, and the history of the country sparkles with brilliant examples of the same spirit of devotion to liberty and justice, until the advent of the present cycle, when partisanship and political fanaticism would seem to have somewhat clouded their judgments and fair fame. We hope that the members of that noble profession will soon recognize the danger that surrounds liberty at this critical moment, and quit themselves like men, in meeting and crushing it. Let the bar be but brave, and the bench dare not be cowardly.—Picayune.

RALEIGH'S WALK.

After those shameful scenes at Winchester, which Chief Justice Gandy, one of the presiding judges, described on his dying bed as having degraded forever the character of English justice, Raleigh was brought back to the Tower and lodged in his previous room; the upper chamber of the Bloody tower; the hinder passage of which led out by a door to the terrace, now known as Raleigh's Walk. From this walk—his favorite exercise for years—he could look down, on one side over the wharf and river, on the other side over the lieutenant's garden and the green.

No one thought as yet of his living in that room, of his pacing that walk, for fourteen years. The trial at Winchester exalted his credit for eloquence and patriotism; he was the idol and the hero of young and old. Nobody believed in the Arabella Plot; the princess herself had never heard of it; and the hint that Raleigh, the hero of Cadiz, the founder of free States, had been in league with Philip the Third against his country, was met by universal scorn. The noblest men and the holiest women were on Raleigh's side. Queen Anne admired him. Mary Sydney wrought for him; charging her son, Lord Pembroke, as he valued her blessing, to use his utmost power, and that of all his friends, in Raleigh's favor. Arabella did what she could. Cecil and Harvey kept their secret; yet no one believed that the great captain, who was engaged in planting a free State in the New World, could be penned for many weeks in the Tower, to please the mortal enemies of their native land.

The allowance for diet, fire and candle, was increased from four pounds a week to five. Two servants besides William Cottrel had warrants to share his cell. Thomas Hariot, and other friends, were suffered to see him; and Lady Raleigh and her boy, little Wat, were often at his side.

Early in this new imprisonment hope came gaily into his cell. The king was coming to the Tower on an act of grace; coming in his state barge down the Thames, accompanied by the queen and prince, and followed by all his court; coming to make golden holidays; to throw open the doors of every vault; to set the prisoners free; and to crown his act of grace by a mighty feast and show. This tale was partly true; James sailed down the river; but the day before he landed at the queen's stair his great prisoner was carried to the fleet, so that the king and a rout of lords and ladies might flutter through his empty cell.

Raleigh remained two weeks and a half in the fleet prison, attended by his servants, with the same allowance for food, fire and candle, as in the Tower. At the end of seventeen days, the court fooleries being then over, the prisoners were brought back and lodged once more in their empty cells.

It was long before either Raleigh or Lady Raleigh could be brought to see that the men in power were bent on holding him fast for life. Raleigh could not know that he was held in bonds for Spain; he could not tell the sums for which Cecil and Howard had sold him to Philip the Third. But neither Raleigh nor his wife was patient under wrong. Lady Raleigh came to live at the Tower with little Wat; and in the chamber in which King Edward had been killed, her second son, Carew, was born. But she could not sit by her husband's side, a silent witness of his pain. She was often at Sherborne castle, their magnificent home in Dorset; oftener still in the galleries of Whitehall, on the terraces of Windsor, among the fishponds at Theobalds; wearying the king with her petitions; troubling the court with a remembrance of her wrongs. No captive ever found a bolder, a more winning advocate than Lady Raleigh. Her efforts were all in vain; yet years passed by ere Raleigh could be brought to see that men who had served in the same field, sat on the same board with himself, under the great queen, could sink into the depths of infamy into which Howard and Cecil had fallen as the pensioners of Spain.

Of course their high pretense was fear of Philip. If England wanted peace at any cost, why haggle in the chambers at Madrid? But they had lower motives. Rich in money and in friends, Raleigh might find a thousand ways of making his anger felt; and they had done him wrongs which they could never expect a proud man to forgive. Exile would not serve him, as with his fellow-captive, Markham, whom they sent abroad, with leave to sell his sword in a foreign camp. Raleigh was too great a captain to send away in search of bread. If he went abroad he might find not only bread but power; for princely offers were being already made to him by foreign States. Henri, of France, strove hard to obtain his sword. The Dutch would have sent him to the Indies. Christieru, of Denmark, wanted him as admiral of his fleets. In Italy his services were sought. Had Raleigh been thrown into a boat, like an old Celtic criminal, and turned adrift at sea with a jar of water and a pole, he would probably have been found in three or four years directing the councils and leading the forces of some powerful king.

Not daring to deal with him as they would have dealt with ordinary men, they locked him fast in the Tower and plundered his estates. One of the spoilers, and to say, was the great sailor Effingham, who had once thought it no dishonor to be seen wiping the dust from Raleigh's shoes with his own silken cloak. Though Effingham was rich and old he begged for Raleigh's wine patent; the chief source of his old friend's income, the reward for many years of service; and he got it. "His lordship hath six thousand pounds," wrote Lady Raleigh, "and three thousand pounds a year, by my husband's fall." Effingham claimed still more, and the weak king, whose penniless cousin he had married, gave him what he asked. "If his conscience warrant him," wrote Lady Raleigh, in despair, "we must yield to God's will and the king's. * * * The bread and food taken from me and my children will never augment my lord's table, though it famish us."

In the stress of his poverty Raleigh had to part from some of those companions who lived at his board and slept under his roof. One of the nearest of these old friends was Thomas Hariot, the famous voyager and algebraist, from whose "Brief View of Virginia" Raleigh learned much of his geography, and from whose "Artis Analytica Praxis" Des Cartes was accused of having stolen most of his mathematics. Raleigh had sent Hariot out to Virginia, in 1584, and for the next twenty years had kept him in his household. When his fortunes were broken, his manors seized, and his means cut off, he gave this faithful servant of science a letter to Northumberland, who carried him down to Petworth, helped him in his studies, and settled on him a pension of £120 a year for life.

Though Raleigh was now lodged in the Tower, with three poor servants, living on five pounds a week for food and fire, the men in office considered him far too strong. His fame was rising instead of falling. Great ladies from the court cast wistful glances at his room. Men from the streets and ships came crowding to the wharf whence they could see him walking on the wall.

Raleigh was a sight to see; not only for his fame and name, but for his picturesque and dazzling figure. Fifty-one years old; tall, tawny, splendid; with the bronze of tropical suns on his leonine cheek; a bushy beard, a round moustache, and a ripple of curling hair, which his man Peter took an hour to dress. Appareled as became such a figure, in scarf and band of the richest color and costliest stuff, in cap and plume worth a ransom, in jacket powdered with gems; his whole attire, from cap to shoe strings blazing with rubies, emeralds and pearls; he was allowed to be one of the handsomest men alive.

The council got alarmed at the crowds who came to see him. Harvey was thought too careless; and a stricter gaoler was appointed to take his place. Sir William Waad ("that villain, Waad," as Raleigh had only too much cause to style him,) began his services as lieutenant by proposing to abridge the very few liberties which Raleigh then enjoyed.—Her Majesty's Tower, by W. H. Dixon.

A WELL qualified candidate for police service in New York city is said to have been recently rejected because he was not quite tall enough. He was, however, so nearly of the requisite height that his physician advised him to go home, get up early in the morning, take a warm bath, and apply again, as a man is a little taller in the morning, and just after taking a warm bath, than at other times. The applicant followed the doctor's advice, and succeeded in getting appointed.

A GOLD NUGGET, weighing not less than two hundred pounds, has been found in Victoria. It is doubtful whether so large a quantity of the precious metal has ever before been found in one mass. The great nugget of 1858 weighed only one hundred and forty six pounds. It is noticeable that all these great lumps of gold have been found in Australia. In 1730 a nugget, thought at that time to be immense, was turned up in Peru, but it weighed not more than sixty pounds.

THE RESOLVE POULTICE.—The president of a missionary society in Ohio, in an annual address, said: "If we are not prepared to meet the great demands upon us, it is altogether useless to waste our time in passing meaningless resolutions, remarkable only for the satisfaction they give to consciences whose sensitiveness to the pressing demands of the age is easily soothed by the application of a poultice of resolves on paper."

To Subscribers.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying he Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a Post Office Order, DRAFT, or by express. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

TO AGENTS.

We have been sending to some of our agents surplus copies of the ADVOCATE, and each week will continue to do so, for a while. Our church needs, must have, a sweeping revival of religion. One of the means to accomplish this is the diffusion of light. We have thousands of members who are asleep and do not go to church often enough to wake up. Once a month the preacher comes; that they expect, and feel no unusual sensation at the sight of him. Now throw in the ADVOCATE once a week, and see what effect that will have on the brother. It may wake him. At any rate it is worth the experiment. Give him a specimen copy, and follow him up. We can live without him, but he may die without us. There is no swifter way of stirring up a circuit and opening the channels of spiritual life than by circulating good books and good papers. Try the eyes of the people if you fail to take their ears.

ROMISH LIBERALITY.

ST. LANDRY PARISH, LA., April 29, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: A few evenings since a wedding party repaired to the Catholic church in Grand Coteau, to witness the marriage ceremony between a Protestant gentleman and a Catholic lady. The priest informed them that as the gentleman was a Protestant he could not marry them according to the Catholic form, telling them, at the same time, that no other form was binding. He then conducted them into a very small room attached to the church. There he made the gentleman promise to exert no influence in changing the opinions of his wife from her Catholic faith, but allow her to raise up the children in the Catholic Church. The lady promised to use all the influence in her power to win her husband from the Protestant faith, and to bring up their children in the faith of Romanism.

PUBLIC GAMBLING.

By looking into the public gaming saloons at St. Charles street one may see the tail of the dragon of which the present government of Louisiana is the head. These "hells," where the last barrier between virtue and vice is passed, are the monstrous but natural progeny of legislative corruption. Men of the worst passions have been sealed and maintained in legislative halls of the State, contrary to the will of the people. This false body represents nothing but power and undying malice, and has in every way preyed upon the vitals of this State, robbing its treasury, degrading its morals, and corrupting its courts. Whatever can be done under this cover of legal form to impoverish and to destroy society, this body has attempted. It exists by force, it legislates by corruption. It has conspired to rob the State of millions by pretending to grant rights and privileges to certain corporations which were, in fact, composed of its own creatures, and created for its own benefit. A few individuals of the body form an honorable exception to its vicious condition, and but a few. It is a marvel how the people have so quietly endured so stupendous an evil. They have been willing to allow something, indeed much, to the slowly subsiding passions of war—to that inevitable relaxing of wholesome sentiment—which such a period produces, calculating that patience and quiet would eventually give strength to law, restore courage to the courts, and increase the respect of all for the constitution. Four years have now passed and the condition grows hourly worse. Corrupt legislation is swiftly affecting the whole mass. Its baleful influences stream forth as from a fountain. Slaughter house companies, open gambling saloons, and licensed lotteries, are only so many different forms of debasing and robbing society.

We are glad to see that some of the city papers have spoken out decidedly against these evils.

"We trust," says the Picayune, "that the good offices of all our thoughtful and prudent citizens, and of all who feel for the helpless child, the toiling wife and the widowed mother, will be used to warn away from the gaming table those unfortunates who are to be seen flocking, day and night, to the now numerous gambling houses—poor laborers, clerks and office boys, old men, who should blush thus to disgrace their gray hairs, and young men, who are blasting reputations forever.

"We must all unite to prevent these moths from flying into the flame, which must and will consume them. Let those who belong to the gaming fraternity, and who have followed hitherto that vice, have their licensed game; but we must prevent the spread of it among the poor, the dependent and those whose means are absolutely needed to support their mothers, their wives or their children."

The Commercial Bulletin has written some admirable articles and taken a firm stand against this reckless state of public morals. It says:

* * * Indeed it is certain that many have already begun to contract gambling habits who were not before exposed to temptation. To use a variation of a familiar couplet—

Those gamble now, who never did before,
And those who always did, now gamble more.

For New Orleans, as the seat of a great and varied commerce, the worst aspect of the legalized public and wide-spreading system of gambling, which has recently sprang up here, is its infallible tendency to produce these two results—to absorb capital that might otherwise flow into productive industries and useful enterprises, and to impair confidence in all cases of pecuniary trust where fiduciary agencies are created, either by law or by the necessities of commerce.

Perhaps an aggregate of several hundred thousand dollars have been sunk already in the outfit and decoration of "gambling hells" And more than this sum must have been poured into them by customers. * * * The whole range of commercial exchanges is bottomed on confidence. If men are not prepared to exchange confidence, they are not prepared for any further operations of commerce. The play of this element in the active world corresponds with the systole and diastole of the heart in a living body. And this is the element which the increased diffusion in the community of the gambling infection necessarily weakens and threatens to kill.

The question is, how can this state of things be corrected? In California and in Vicksburg society determined to free itself from the crushing folds of this monster by violence, considering that laws which uphold so great an evil offered no security to the citizen and deserve no respect. So far as a stream can be indicated by a fountain, these saloons are in evidence that there is no law.

In the election which is about to be held for City Councilmen there may be found a partial remedy. Let the people elect no person who will not pledge himself to put down these gambling places by taxing them so heavily as to amount to a prohibition. Twenty of the present twenty-four City Councilmen are members of the Catholic Church. This ought to have been a sufficient guarantee against the existence of these public gambling houses; but it has not been. We hope that all time-serving gentlemen will be shelved, and that true men will be put in their places who are not afraid to stem this tide of ruin which has been turned full upon us by the present forced government of Louisiana.

Foreign Missionary Collections.

During the week the Felicity street collection has swelled to $900; Algiers to $50; the meeting at Carondelet yielded $908, and that at Moreau street $240. So the secretary leaves New Orleans with the blessing of hundreds and $2,098.

One good soul gave him a car ticket—her all; and three lads, aged fourteen, twelve, and ten, the sons of one of our friends, united in a note to the doctor, from which we give this extract:

"Having some money on hand from the sale of a mule belonging to us, we beg leave with pleasure to send our father's check for $50, for the China mission, as you said this morning that it required $50 a year for one teacher. Please report to us, through Dr. Walker, the progress of said teacher. * * *

"SHEPHERD T. MURRAY.
"JAMES T. MURRAY.
"RICHARD B. MURRAY."

We will not mar the pleasure which awaits other communities by attempting to give either the text or syllabus of Dr. Munsey's sermons. They are so full and make such rapid progress that no person can report them justly. Only this: they can empty other churches, and pack the one where they are preached. A loyal son of Tennessee attempted to characterize the doctor's preaching; but having exhausted all his adjectives, he exclaimed that he believed him to be "a greater preacher than Dr. Green." It is proper to add that the brother was very much excited when he said this. All we have to say to any one is, go and hear him, as the Queen of Sheba went to hear Solomon—that is, carrying a considerable quantity of gold with you, that your presents and offerings may be worthy of the sermon and the occasion.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

GREENSBURG, LA., April 29, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: My circuit is improving. We are beginning to have some interesting meetings. Several have joined the church lately, and nearly whole congregations come forward for the prayers of the church. We are expecting and hoping and praying for a Pentecostal baptism. I, or rather my wife, is living forty miles from my nearest and sixty miles from my furthest appointment; but if I can do good I cheerfully relinquish home endearments.

We have a fine colored society in St. Helena parish—the only one in this part of Louisiana, so far as I know.

Yours in Christ,
J. NICHOLSON.

GADSDEN, ALA., April 27, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: A good revival has been in progress for almost two weeks, and continues to grow in interest. Twenty-three accessions, twelve professions, and many reclaimed—deep work.

Brother Brandon, pastor at Jacksonville, and Brother Brindley, pastor of Gadsden circuit, and Doctor Slaughter, presiding elder, have all labored well. Our local brethren have done good service. More about the meeting hereafter.

Yours truly, R. E. CARY.

THE EPISCOPAL METAIRIE.

"The Children's Home of the Protestant Episcopal Church" is receiving this week a somewhat remarkable "benefit." Every evening "refreshments" and a "dance" at the Varieties Theater, including a "full dramatic representation" on Saturday night; and on Friday afternoon, at four o'clock, at the Metairie course, "races," "refreshments" and a "dance." The committee of the "Home" publish a "programme" for this post-lenten week. We give its concluding paragraphs:

For admission to the Varieties and the race course, including stands, $1 for each entertainment. Admission to the dance at race course, $5 for each gentleman, with the privilege of taking two ladies. To obtain admission to the Metairie race and dance, it will be necessary to procure the tickets specially issued for that purpose by the Committee on Matinee, at No. 18 Carondelet street.

Season ticket for five representations at Varieties Theater, $4.

The chairmen of the Executive Committee and Committee on Arrangements have deemed it advisable to alter the rule relative to admission, so that the pulpit and press, and all persons, young and old, engaged in the actual exhibitions at the Varieties Theater, will be admitted free of charge. All others, children and adults, $1 to each entertainment, except dance at Metairie course.

GEO S. LACEY, Chairman.
A. C. LEWIS, Secretary.

By which we understand that the "pulpit and press" will be "admitted free" to the Varieties; but to "obtain admission to the Metairie race and dance" it will be necessary for them to procure tickets—"$5 for each gentleman, with the privilege of two ladies." Rather hard on the "press," and not very easy on the "pulpit." In addition to such machinery we see that the "committee" have applied for and obtained a benefit "from the Academy of Music." "The Olympic," we suppose, is still undergoing repairs, or probably a "benefit" would have been solicited from that moral sink. We have understood, from sources which we think reliable, that the same enterprising representatives of this church or phan-house have also received some $200 from one of the public gambling houses on St. Charles street.

It occurs to us that a body of benevolent citizens must be very hard run to resort to such expedients for the support of any cause, especially so meritorious a one as that of an orphan asylum. A more desperately consuming zeal we have never heard of. And if it be necessary to tacitly endorse theaters, race courses and gambling "hells," in order to support orphans, we question if even the great excellence of the end will repay the community for the weighty sanction which is thus given to the most active agencies now at work for corrupting the morals and youth of our city.

Though we doubt not the committee will avail itself of the ready anti-"Puritanical" response, we beg leave to suggest that there is a wide margin between Puritanism and such an utter letting go of the proprieties of the Christian profession. We do not expect more of the Episcopal Church than any other, but certainly as much; and we can not see her representatively trail the cause of God in the dirt and mire without uttering a protest. The church is not at liberty to receive everything, from everybody, in every way, upon the plea either that her altars, her widows, or her orphans need support. The law of Moses has definitely settled this principle in the 23-1 chapter of Deuteronomy, at the 18th verse.

THE TIME FOR FIGS NOT YET.

The Methodist Book Concern of Cincinnati publishes the Methodist Advocate, an official organ, at Atlanta, Georgia. We do not know upon what principle the editor was selected; but trust that he was not taken as a fair exponent of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His knowledge of facts may be illustrated by the following in the paper of April 16:

"As a matter of fact, we will say to our friends that the Supreme Court has not in 1854, 1844, 1851, or any other year, affirmed that the church was legally divided. THE CASE HAS NEVER BEEN BEFORE THE SUPREME COURT."

In answer to this erroneous statement the Southern Christian Advocate has an exhaustive and capital article setting forth the history of the whole case. The ample reply is a quotation from the discussion of the Supreme Court at Washington, delivered by Judge Nelson on the 25th of April, 1854. (See Howard's Report, vol. 16.) It decides that

"The Methodist Church was divided; that it was not a case of secession of a part from the main body; that neither division lost its interest in the common property; that the General Conference of 1844 had the legitimate power thus to divide the church, as in 1808 the General Conference was made the representative body (of the preachers,) with six restrictive articles upon its power—but none of these articles deprived it of the power of dividing the church;" that the proposed alteration of the sixth restrictive rule "was not imposed as a condition of separation, but was merely a plan to enable the General Conference to carry out its purposes"—and that "the separation of the church into two parts, being legally accomplished, a division of the joint property by a court of equity follows, as a matter of course."

This decision of the Supreme Court is certainly very much in the way. The Atlanta editor evidently contemplates regulating his course "by circumstances" rather than by principle, for he continues:

"When this secession occurred there were churches and parsonages all over the South deeded to the Methodist Episcopal Church, built by money given to that church for that purpose, and to be held by that church forever—houses built expressly for the preaching of the Gospel of Christ, as pertaining to purity, freedom and temperance, according to Paul and Wesley. Those churches were claimed and held by those who occupied them, but by what right, legal or moral? Neither, but without authority. All such property belongs in law and equity to the Methodist Episcopal Church If the forts, arsenals, and guns retaken in the war belong to the United States government, these churches belong in justice to the Methodist Episcopal Church. The authorities of that church alone, we think, can give, because they alone have a valid title to them, as has several times been decided by the courts."

Quite a military view of things. The brother will no doubt find the decision inconvenient; but there is no telling what may yet be achieved by patience and "circumstances." So far he has been, "very patient," "very conciliatory," because the time of figs is not yet.

"The course of the (Methodist Episcopal) Church in the future must be determined by circumstances. But where we go to a town in which there is one or more churches clearly belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and we are denied the use of church, hall, school house, and every other suitable place for divine service, it would seem that in such case forbearance had ceased to be a virtue, and that duty lay in the direction of taking that which is our own. But the church has been very patient, very conciliatory, and that course was probably both wisest and best."

TIDE TURNING.

Cotton factories are springing up all over the South. Already there are eighty-six mills started there, distributed as follows:

States.	Mills.	Spindles.	Cotton spun.
Virginia	10	26,000	4,010,000
North Carolina	17	24,249	3,537,000
South Carolina	6	31,588	4,171,100
Georgia	20	69,782	10,861,350
Alabama	8	25,196	2,820,596
Mississippi	6	8,752	1,437,000
Texas	4	8,528	1,361,104
Arkansas	2	924	258,400
Tennessee	10	13,720	1,847,200
Kentucky	3	6,264	1,075,000

This is the "beginning of the end" of New England cotton-spinning. Within ten years, probably within five, the South will manufacture nearly all the cotton produced within its borders. And the starting of factories there will cause a direct trade to spring up between the South and Europe, which will, in the end, put a stop to nearly all that commercial dependence on the North which caused us to grow rich so fast. Hitherto the South has loaded our vessels for European trade, and has also been the market for all our wares. The permanent result of the war will inevitably be, to strip the North of these great advantages, which were the real source of our wealth.—Day Book.

THE ARREST OF THE DEVELOPMENT OF TUBERCLE.—Dr. Henry Cormall, of Belfast, states that the development of tubercle can be prevented by uniformly enforcing the habitual respiration of air not pre-breathed.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION AND SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY.

We republish the programme of the New Orleans District Sunday School Convention, to meet in Carondelet street church on the 14th instant, at half-past five P. M.; and, under "Special Notices," the president's request that the schools of the District Sabbath School Union shall meet and rehearse on Saturday, the 15th instant.

In addition to the admirable themes of the committee, there will be ample opportunity and a fit occasion for suggesting any improvement in our Sabbath school system, or in the working of that which we have. To instance:

1. The best method of opening, conducting and closing a school.

2. The conduct and instruction of the infant classes.

3. The importance of Bible classes—of whom composed; by whom taught; what methods of teaching; what range of discussion, etc.; what objects.

4. The advantages of teachers' meetings for preparing lessons for the ensuing Sabbath.

5. Text books—what besides the Bible and catechism, if any.

6. Whether church members should be subject to the direction of the pastor for this work, as are exhorters and class leaders for their employment.

7. What can be done to secure a full attendance of the children at church.

8. How to secure a good library for a Sabbath school.

9. How best to multiply, perpetuate and establish Sabbath schools.

10. How to advance in them a general spirit and habit of beneficence.

11. How to advance the children in the art and science of singing without infringing upon the time now allotted to teaching.

These hints we throw out suggestively.

Sabbath School Convention.

The New Orleans District Sabbath School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at the quarterly meeting of March last, resolved to hold a Sabbath school convention, in this city, on the 14th, 15th and 16th of May, and appointed the undersigned committee to make the necessary arrangements therefor.

The convention will be held in Carondelet street Methodist church, and the following will constitute mainly the order of exercises:

THURSDAY, MAY 13.

Half past seven o'clock P. M.—Introductory address by Rev. J. B. Walker, D. D. Subject: What is the influence of the Sabbath School upon the well-being of Society?

FRIDAY, MAY 14.

Half past five o'clock P. M.—Organization of the convention. Devotional exercises.

Seven o'clock P. M.—Address by Rev. A. E Goodwyn. Subject: What is the Relation of the Sabbath School to the Church, and what is the duty of the Pastor and Members of the Church toward the Sabbath School?

Half-past seven o'clock P. M.—Open discussion. Subjects: 1. Teachers, their Qualifications and Duties in and out of School. 2. The best Method of Securing and Retaining Competent Teachers. 3. What is the best Method of Teaching in the Sabbath School?

SATURDAY, MAY 15.

Half past five o'clock P. M.—Devotional exercises.

Six o'clock P. M.—Open discussion. Subjects: 4. How can Singing be made more Efficient of Good in our Sabbath Schools? 5. What Constitutes the best Sabbath School Library? 6. What is the best Method of Obtaining Money for Sabbath School Purposes? 7. What is the best System of Carrying on the Missionary Work in our Sabbath Schools?

Eight o'clock P. M.—Address by Rev. J. Hamilton, D. D. Subject: Personal Piety in the Sabbath School, its Influence and how to Increase it.

SUNDAY, MAY 16.

Nine o'clock A. M.—Regular exercises in all our Sabbath schools, visited and addressed by members of the convention.

Eleven o'clock A. M.—Preaching in all our churches by members of the convention, on the subject of Sabbath schools, and collections taken up for the benefit of the Sabbath School Union.

Half-past three o'clock P. M.—The twenty-third anniversary celebration of the New Orleans District Sabbath

School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church South

In the exercises of the anniversary celebration all the schools of the Union will take part, and the addresses, recitations and songs will be by the children; and thus will conclude the exercises of the convention.

The convention is not limited by the boundaries of the New Orleans Sabbath School Union, nor by those of the Louisiana Conference. It is desired that the convention shall be a success, and its influence for good upon the cause of Sabbath schools be felt far and wide upon city and country. The invitation is, therefore, extended to the neighboring cities and all the country around, and we hope to have a large attendance of ministers and laymen interested and engaged in the Sabbath school work.

Provision will be made for the accommodation of visitors, the same as on the assembly of our Conferences.

On arriving in the city members of the convention will please call at the Southern Methodist Depository, No. 112 Camp street, where they will receive the attentions of the committee.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

We have received from the publishers, through Mr. G. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street, the following new books:

IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND—A matter-of-fact Romance. By Charles Reade, author of "Hard Cash," "Griffith Gaunt," etc. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1869. 8vo, pp. 241.

BREAKING A BUTTERFLY. By the author of "Guy Livingstone," etc. Illustrated. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1869. 8vo, pp. 139.

THAT BOY OF NORCOTTS. By Charles Lever, author of "The Bramleys," etc. With illustrations. No. 323 of the Messrs. Harper's "Library of Select Novels." 1869.

We turn now to something more substantial and equally interesting:

FISHING IN AMERICAN WATERS. By Genio C. Scott. With one hundred and seventy illustrations. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1869. Small octavo, pp. 484.

This book offers no ordinary treat to sportsmen, and a great deal of valuable information to those who follow fishing as a livelihood. It discusses "coast and estuary fishing with rod and line; fresh water fishing with fly and bait; commercial fisheries; ancient and modern fish-culture; a glimpse of ichthyology; and cookery adapted to the resources of sportsmen." These themes are discussed by one who knows what he is talking about. The chapters on fish-culture are worth the price of the book. We turned to that part which described how to take sheepshead—having lost a good deal of bait in that direction; and obtained several excellent suggestions as to the how they ought to be caught. Our lake shore fishermen will often find this treatise a valuable aid in discovering why it is they have not taken fish, and should by all means, therefore, have it on their shelves.

NOTES, Critical, Explanatory and Practical, on the Book of Psalms. By Albert Barnes. Vols. 2 and 3. New York: Harper & Brothers. 12mo, pp. 383 each. 1869.

These "notes" are something more than a commentary; they are abbreviated lectures, such as we can suppose this able Presbyterian divine delivered to his flock from week to week. Full of all critical information, he gives us a true idea of David's devotion, and with much spirituality leads the reader in making an application of these inspired metrical breathings to his own heart. Clergymen will find many admirable suggestions in these volumes—reflecting, as they do, of course, the theological views of the author.

We have received from Messrs. Eyrich & Co., Canal street:

THE VILLA ON THE RHINE, and THE BLACK FOREST, both by Auerbach, which we will notice hereafter.

THE NEW ECLECTIC MAGAZINE FOR MAY. Turnbull & Murdock, Baltimore.

This number presents a rich table of contents, among which are "Dr. Dabney's Reply to General Early," and several excellent articles from the Gentleman's Magazine, the Overland Monthly, etc.

SONGS OF GLADNESS. For the Sabbath school, prayer meeting and choir. By J. E. Gould, No. 923 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

A very excellent collection, unusually complete, for all occasions.

SUEZ CANAL.

FORT SAID, February 7.

On Friday we came by rail via Zigzig to Ishmaella, a point half way to the great canal. Along this railroad is a fresh water canal from the Nile, and near the salt canal to Suez, and the water is conducted by iron pipes to this place fifty five miles. This fresh water canal will be ultimately very much enlarged and will be used to convert the adjoining desert into rich fields. The great canal is nearly a straight line from sea to sea, and is about a hundred and ten miles long. When finished it will be three hundred and thirty-three feet wide and twenty-seven feet deep. I think it will be open for small boats next winter, but probably a year more for seagoing steamers.

There are many points along the line where there are sunken places, some of them now lakes or beds of old lakes, and contain the bitter water mentioned by the Israelites. These they use to deposit their extra sand. The first operation is to open a small channel by hand; this is done principally by Arab labor. After that they let in the water and use their steam dredging machine. Of these they have a hundred and twenty-six, the largest I ever saw; these are worked by European labor and are in operation every day, including Sundays. They have six hundred steamboats and barges attendant on these dredges—all these are made of iron. The mechanical skill exhibited in this machinery is wonderful. I cannot give any detailed account of it now, nor will you find it in any English publication, for the English absolutely hate it, and will not talk to you on the subject.

I wish you would look at the map and you will see that Austria and Russia are opening routes to Odessa and the mouth of the Danube, thence by steamer here. Austria and Russia already have a railroad to Trieste and steamers here; Prussia, the valley of the Rhine and England have a system of railroads that terminate at Venice. France is crossing the Alps by railroads at two points which terminate at Brindisi in Italy. She has a route via Marseilles, and the two great companies, "Messagerie Imperiales," whose headquarters are at Bordeaux, and the "Peninsula and Oriental," whose headquarters are at Southampton, come here via Gibraltar. From these places the distance will be shortened from nine to fifteen thousand miles to Bombay, and those which are now the most remote, will, when this canal is open, be the nearest. And this is the reason of the English disliking the work, as they are now the nearest via Cape of Good Hope, but it is nevertheless a fixed fact that the work is to be completed on the largest scale, and in the race for the Eastern trade our Pacific railroad is not worth talking about. The time from Suez to Bombay is now fifteen days, and from Suez to Liverpool fifteen days more, and Liverpool is the farthest port. One of the great points to be gained in this canal is to furnish English coal to steamers on the Red sea and the Indian ocean, and thereby multiply steamers in those waters.

This town is now a handsome little French city with one of the best harbors in the Mediterranean. The city is supplied with water from the Nile, brought one hundred and fifty miles. Nine years ago it was a straight sand beach, without the slightest protection from the ocean, nor a vestige of vegetable matter or a drop of fresh water within fifty miles of it. Nine years hence it will be the most important port on the Mediterranean, and probably a large and flourishing city—the results of French capital, intellect and mechanical skill.

Tuesday I hope to land at Jaffa and go from there to Jerusalem. If I fail, I shall go to Beyrout, and thence to Damascus.

I am, your friend, H.

P. S.—I should have mentioned that all the stone used in the construction of these breakwaters was manufactured here out of the sand of the desert. They expect to be paid when the canal is finished $2 per ton transit dues, so that a steamer of two thousand five hundred tuns will pay $5,000, and she is to be towed through and not use her own machinery. There will be required one or two million tuns of coal at this point per annum, which will make return freights to England very cheap. I rather think Ishmaella will be the principal city on the route. It is a town in the center of the canal, as it has an abundant supply of fresh water and is at the point where it can control the railroads of Egypt, and sufficiently elevated to admit of city drainage.—Correspondent of Episcopal Methodist.

MARRIED.

On the evening of April 7th, at the residence of the bride's father, near Opelousas, by Rev. Benjamin F. White, Mr. MANSEL J. RICHARD to Miss FANNIE J. SMITH, formerly of Mississippi.

OBITUARIES.

HERBERT DAMERON died at the residence of his father, W. H. Dameron, in the city of New Orleans, on the 13th of April, 1869, in the eighteenth year of his age.

More than two years before his death, when in comparatively good health, he became a member of the Felicity street Methodist church of this city.

The precise time of his conversion was not known to himself, though he enjoyed the comfort of the Holy Ghost, and displayed the maturest fruits of a holy life. From his childhood he was under gracious influences, and was always obedient, affectionate and good. From a child he was a great sufferer, rarely in his life entirely free from suffering and weakness, and at times subject to sharp and protracted pain. Few persons of his years have suffered so much, and none ever bore their afflictions with more submissive faith. The last two years of his religious life were marked by many inward conflicts. He read and thought much, and grappled with the deepest truths of revelation and divine providence. At times he was sorely buffeted by temptation, and especially tempted with reference to his own life of pain and inactivity. For two or three months previous to his death, however, he felt conscious victory and almost uninterrupted assurance and peace. These last two years were years of conflict and of spiritual progress—a warfare crowned with complete victory. As he often said in his last days, "By grace I have been made perfect through suffering."

His death hour was serene and beautiful. The mind was clear and unimpaired, and he was conscious that the end had come. He bade each member of the family good by, and counseled the children to be truthful, religious, and to meet him in heaven. He spoke of loved and sainted ones in heaven whom he was about to join, and gave directions concerning the place of his burial. Young as he was, his was a truly noble life, and wonderfully mature in its religious aspects. The Christian graces could scarcely have been more complete in the aged believer. The discipline of suffering and the work of the Spirit were thoroughly accomplished.

None who knew him in his patient suffering, and in his calm triumph over death, can fail to be better. Such a life is encouraging and instructive to the Christian, and such a death is especially calculated to assure and strengthen our confidence in God's sufficient grace. He yet speaks, though dead. His mission to the family circle, to the youth of the church, and to all who witnessed this precious example, is not doubtful. He has not lived nor died unto himself, but unto the Lord whose love and truth he has illustrated.

L. PARKER.

NEW ORLEANS, May 1, 1869.

IN MEMORIAM.

MRS. ELIZA E. SMITH was born in Green county, Georgia, July 13, 1807, and died in Enterprise, Mississippi, August 22, 1868.

In 1824 she was married to Dr. Grimes, of Green county, Georgia, by which marriage she had two children, both of whom are still living.

Her husband died six or seven years after their marriage, and after twenty years of widowhood, in the year 1851 she was united to my father, Hampton S. Smith, then of Columbus, Georgia, but now of Mobile, Alabama.

Thus it was she took upon herself that most responsible of all responsible positions—a step mother; and then it was she began to exhibit to us those noble traits of character which will ever cause us to love and revere her memory. She had no children by my father; but when she entered his house she took all of his—six of us—to her arms and to her heart, and from that day to her death it was hard to distinguish by her treatment which were her own and which her step-children. In sickness she was always by our bedside; and no matter how long might be the spell, she remained there still, never tired, never weary, never cross, always gentle, kind and loving. In our childish troubles she was an earnest comforter and friend, and when sterner disappointment and grief came—when death chose as its mark the eldest and youngest of our little family—she drew all nearer to her and endeavored to relieve the sad stroke by words of condolence and deeds of affection and kindness.

Through all the ups and downs of life she was ever watchful, ever loving, ever true to her husband; and in every sense of the word was to him a wife, and to his children a mother.

But she has now gone. Faithful in life to her charge and to God, she has gone to meet her reward in heaven. Death, which appeared so cruel and terrible to those she left behind her, was to her but the jeweled gate through which she was to enter Paradise. It had no sting, no terror. Triumphant in life, triumphant in death.

This little tribute is paid to her memory by one who has experienced an own mother's love and affection bestowed upon

A STEP-CHILD.

Died, of consumption, on the 18th of April, 1869, at her home, near Jeanerette, Iberia parish, Louisiana, Mrs. OLIVIA C. RICHARDSON, wife of Dr. William M. Richardson.

Sister Richardson was the daughter of Colonel W. P. Johnson, of Anson county, North Carolina. She was born in March, 1840, and married in June, 1860. In her eighteenth year she gave her heart to God and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. About three years before her death her disease began to develop itself, when her devoted and anxious husband sought a home upon the banks of the Teche, hoping that the mild climate and sea breeze of this section would aid in building up her failing health. In her new home she soon won to her a circle of devoted friends, who shared largely in this hope; but they and her husband were doomed to disappointment. She gradually grew worse, and for a year before her death was confined to her bed.

It was a rich means of grace to visit and converse with her about her departure, and to hear her glorious testimony of the power of religion to support in triumph the dying. Many of her Christian friends came often to profit by communion with one "quite on the verge of heaven." When the end came it was one of the sweetest and grandest triumphs of the Christian religion.

She leaves a husband and two little girls to mourn her loss and profit by her example. May God have them in His holy keeping. Her funeral sermon was preached by the writer from the words, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints."

A. E. GOODWYN.

NEW IBERIA, April 25, 1869.

CHARLES D. LANEY was born in Mecklenburg county, North Carolina, November 30, 1810, and died in Eufaula, Alabama, April 11, 1869.

He had resided in Eufaula since 1838. He joined the Methodist Church when a youth, in whose communion he lived to the close of life. He was highly esteemed by the community for his prudence and uniform goodness. He had filled the various offices of trustee, steward, class leader and Sabbath school superintendent in the church, and died with the love and confidence of his brethren. His end was peace. A. J. TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Almigbty God to remove from our midst JOHNNIE B. SWEARINGEN, who for a long time was a member of this Sunday school, it becomes our duty and privilege as a school to give expression to a feeling sense of the loss which we have sustained. We therefore respectfully submit the following resolutions:

Resolved, That while we bow with humble submission to His divine will, we can but lament the loss of a friend so esteemed.

Resolved, That as a school we sincerely mourn his early loss, and earnestly desire that we all may cherish his memory and strive to emulate his many virtues.

Resolved, That our knowledge of our lamented friend prepares us to sympathize with his mother and relatives in their deep affliction, and we do hereby tender them the sincere condolence of this school.

A REAL HERO.

A SCENE AT SEA.

Two weeks ago, on board an English steamer, a little ragged boy, aged nine years, was discovered on the fourth day of the outward voyage from Liverpool to New York, and carried before the first mate, whose duty it was to deal with such cases. When questioned as to the object of his being stowed away, and who brought him on board, the boy, who had a beautiful sunny face, and eyes that looked like the very mirrors of truth, replied that his stepfather did it, because he could not afford to keep him, nor to pay his passage to Halifax, where he had an aunt who was well off, and to whose house he was going. The mate did not believe the story, in spite of the winning face and truthful accents of the boy. He had seen too much of stowaways to be easily deceived by them, he said; and it was his firm conviction that the boy had been brought on board and provided with food by the sailors. The little fellow was very roughly handled in consequence. Day by day he was questioned and requestioned, but always with the same result. He did not know a sailor on board; and his father alone had secreted him, and given him the food which he ate.

At last the mate, wearied by the boy's persistence in the same story, and perhaps a little anxious to inculpate the sailors, seized him one day by the collar, and dragging him to the fore, told him that unless he confessed the truth in ten minutes from that time he would hang him to the yard arm. He then made him sit down under it on the deck. All around him were the passengers and sailors of the midday watch, and in front of him stood the inexorable male, with his chronometer in his hand, and the other officers of the ship by his side. It was the finest sight, said our informant, that we had ever beheld—to see the pale, proud, sorrowful face of that noble boy, his head erect, his beautiful eyes bright through the tears that suffused them. When eight minutes had fled the mate told him he had but two minutes to live, and advised him to speak the truth and save his life; but he replied, with the utmost simplicity and sincerity, by asking the mate if he might pray.

The mate said nothing, but hooded his head, and turned as pale as a ghost, and shook with trembling like a reed with the wind. And there, all eyes turned on him, this brave and noble little fellow, this poor waif whom society owned not, and whose own stepfather could not care for him—there he knelt, with clasped hands and eyes upraised to heaven, while he repeated audibly the Lord's prayer, and prayed the dear Lord Jesus to take him to heaven.

Our informant adds that there then occurred a scene as of Pentecost. Sobs broke from strong, hard hearts as the mate sprang forward to the boy, and clasped him to his bosom, and kissed him and blessed him, and told him how sincerely he now believed his story, and how glad he was that he had been brave enough to sacrifice his life for the truth of his own word.—New York Sun.

SCIENTIFIC.

Is a Flying Machine a Mechanical Possibility?

Notwithstanding the failures which have uniformly attended the attempts to construct a useful flying machine, and the emphatic negative given by a large number of scientific writers to the question which heads our article, the belief in the ultimate accomplishment of flight by means of human devices has never lacked adherents among the learned and the unlearned. The organization of the Aeronautical Society, which gave its first exhibition at London, last June, is an evidence that the belief is gaining rather than losing ground. Let us, then, examine the merits of this question.

The report of the above society contains some curious matter in the description of the engines exhibited. Steam engines have usually been considered as quite inapplicable to any possible flying machine, on account of the high relation their weight bears to their power. But what are we to say of an engine weighing only sixteen pounds, and being able to work to one-horse power? The council of the society voted their £100 prize to Mr. Stringfellow for an engine of this description; and whether or not it becomes the motive power for flight, it would seem, from its ingenuity, to be well worth the reward. "The cylinder," the report tells us, "is two inches in diameter, stroke three inches, and works with a boiler pressure of one hundred pounds to the square inch; the engine working three hundred revolutions per minute. The time of getting up the steam was noted; in three minutes after lighting the fire the pressure was thirty pounds; in five minutes, fifty pounds; and in seven minutes there was the full working pressure of one hundred pounds. When started, the engine had a fair amount of duty to perform in driving two four-bladed screw propellers, three feet in diameter, at three hundred revolutions a minute."

The data for calculating the power are taken as follows: Area of piston, three inches; pressure in cylinder, eighty pounds per square inch; length of stroke, three inches; velocity of piston, one hundred and fifty feet per minute; 8x80x150=36,000 foot pounds. This makes rather more than one-horse power (which is reckoned at thirty-three thousand foot-pounds.) The weight of the engine and boiler was only thirteen pounds, and it is probably the lightest steam engine that has ever been constructed. The engine, boiler, car and propeller, together were afterwards weighed, but without water and fuel, and were found to be sixteen pounds.

This engine seems to demonstrate the possibility of making engines light and powerful enough for purposes of flight. The American wild goose frequently weighs more than this entire machine, boiler, propeller, and all; and the power exerted by this bird in flight must be vastly less than that performed by the engine, according to the report referred to. Borelli assumed that a goose exerts in flight a force of four hundred horse-power, an estimate so wild and extravagant that it is simply ridiculous.

Dr. Fox, of Scarborough, has translated an instructive paper written by M. de Lucy, of Paris, "On the Flight of Birds, of Bats, and of Insects," in reference to the subject of aerial locomotion, in which it is stated, as the result of numerous investigations, that in flying animals the extent of winged surface is always in inverse ratio to the weight of the creature. He compares gnats, dragon-flies, large and small, ladybirds, daddy-long-legs, bees, marsh-flies, drones, cock chafers, stag-beetles, and rhinoceros-beetles together, and arrives at the following highly interesting and unexpected results. The gnat, which weighs four hundred and sixty times less than the stag-beetle, has fourteen times more of (proportional) surface. The ladybird weighs one hundred and fifty times less than the stag-beetle, and possesses five times more of surface, etc.; and it is the same with birds. The sparrow weighs about ten times less than the pigeon, and has twice as much surface. The pigeon weighs about eight times less than the stork, and has twice as much surface. The sparrow weighs three hundred and thirty-nine times less than the Australian crane, and possesses seven times more surface. If we now compare the insects and the birds, the gradation will become even more striking. The gnat, for example, weighs ninety-seven thousand times less than the pigeon, and has forty times more surface; it weighs three million times less than the Australian crane, and possesses one hundred and forty times more surface.

Columbi calculated that in order to support a man it would be necessary to have a surface twelve thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine feet and two inches in length, by one hundred and ninety-one feet and ten inches in breadth, but it has been since ascertained that a man can descend quite easily from a great elevation, with a supporting surface of twenty-nine square yards, eight square feet, and fourteen square inches. This superfices reduced to a square gives the length of a side 5 3 linear yards, nearly. The length of supporting beams from the center needs therefore to be only about 2.75 yards, provided their own weight is not taken into account.

Precisely here comes the first difficulty. These arms or beams necessary to sustain a web of silk or other texture, must have strength, rigidity and lightness. When man can make a structure as strong, as rigid, as elastic, as light in proportion to bulk as a goose quill, the problem of flight will be nearly solved. Compensation for want of power in the muscles of the chest may be made by calling into play those of the thighs and legs, as well as the arms, by means of suitable appliances.

What is now required is a material combining greatest strength with least weight. We know of no such material now available for the purpose. We, therefore, conclude that until such materials are discovered man will not fly. To use the words of one of the sages of a shop in which many of our youth'nl days were spent, flying is, at present, "theoretically practicable, but practically impracticable."—Scientific American

TEST FOR ILLUMINATING PETROLEUM. The Gorry (Pa.) Kerosene Oil Works recommend the following as a simple manner of determining the fire test of kerosene oil: "Take a cup or tumbler, fill it nearly full of water (previously tested by the thermometer to be one hundred and ten or one hundred and eleven degrees Fahrenheit,) then take a tablespoonful of the oil, of which it is desirable to test the igniting point, immerse it in the water, and stir for a moment or two to permit the oil to reach the equal temperature of the water, pass a lighted match very closely over the surface of the oil once, which always floats on the water. If it does not ignite, it can be safely used; but if it does ignite, discard it, however low the price may be; this is a fair and sure test as far as safety is concerned. The other so desirable point—does the oil burn brilliantly and without charring the wick?—the experience of every family will soon detect. Something depends upon the wick, and something upon the lamp; but properly manufactured oil is the main thing needed."—Scientific American.

FARM AND GARDEN.

THE CROPS OF 1869.

GOOD PROSPECTS FOR A LARGE YIELD.

We publish copious extracts from our exchanges giving accounts of the prospects of the coming crops in all parts of the country. It will be seen that the farmers in New England have not yet been able to commence their spring business on account of the backwardness of the season, the snow in some places in New Hampshire being still three feet on a level. In Connecticut some farmers have commenced plowing, but no planting has been done. But fortunately it is not to New England that the people of this country, and, indeed, a large proportion of the "rest of mankind," are accustomed to look for material wherewith to sustain animal life. If left to herself New England could scarcely raise sufficient breadstuffs to sustain her own teeming population. It is to the broad and gigantic West, the fertile Middle States, the ever-luxuriant South, that our people look, both for the production of the fabric from which is fabricated the raiment that in a great measure covers them and a large part of foreign humanity, as well as for the supplies of breadstuffs, provisions, fruits, and nearly everything else that comes in the way of human consumption. Therefore it is with the highest satisfaction that we refer to the cheering record given in the published reports of the coming crops in the sections named.

Throughout the West the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, etc., a larger breadth of land than usual has been sown in wheat. In all respects the winter sown promises well, while a considerable space of new ground has been broken up and sown with spring wheat. In Missouri there are a few complaints, while from Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee the reports are most encouraging. In some parts of North Carolina, as well as in Virginia, a large share of attention is being bestowed upon the raising of early garden truck for the Northern market, but not to an extent to interfere with the great staples of those States—corn, cotton and tobacco. From the interior of New York, as well as from New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware and Maryland, we have satisfactory accounts. The planters in Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas and Texas are recuperating their energies, and from every section, with the exception of a part of Texas, where the grasshopper pest is again disturbing the corn and cotton fields, and a part of Alabama, whence complaints of damage by unexpected frosts reach us, we have cheering accounts.

But it would seem from all reports that Georgia gives promise of being more fortunate the coming than in the past year. The accounts of the growing wheat in that State are glowing in the extreme—one field of a thousand acres in fine condition being among the pleasant sights recently witnessed by a Georgia cotemporary. Larger quantities of land than usual have been planted in corn and oats, while the cotton breadth will be fully up to the standard. It is estimated that in Georgia fifty per cent. of the land will be planted in cotton, forty per cent. in corn and ten per cent. in oats. Tennessee will have a larger breadth of land in cotton than ever before. Louisiana is rejoicing in a promising and much augmented crop of sugar cane, and a generally revived condition of agriculture within her borders, which may be said with truth of every other Southern State. Even South Carolina begins to express herself contented with the new order of things in regard to labor, and her fields are showing their wonted fertility.

In Florida a number of Northerners have commenced the cultivation of fruit on an extensive scale, but Florida is naturally a great cotton-growing State, and as such is destined to become one of the richest in the cotton growing galaxy. In regard to fruit prospects accounts are somewhat conflicting, and here and there we hear the note of a croaker. It is stated that in some sections of Kansas, and even as far south as Alabama, late "freezes" have destroyed most of the peach and apricot blossoms. But while this is the case only in limited sections, from the vast area of land devoted to fruit culture we hear no complaints, but, on the contrary, tidings both cheering and welcome. Thus is our country, from one end to the other, blessed by a benign Providence with the elements of internal wealth and national prosperity and plenty.—N. Y. Herald.

A New Method of Grafting Fruit Trees.

BY M. JEAN SISLEY, LYONS, FRANCE.

The readers of horticultural publications are aware that Mr. A. Boisselot, of Nantes, France, is the inventor of a very useful method of grafting the vine, which is to insert the graft in the fork between two branches. The advantage of this mode of grafting the vine has been generally recognized, but no one has before thought of applying it to other trees, and A. Boisselot himself was not aware of the great service he rendered to horticulture when he published his invention. I have applied it to a great variety of trees, but principally to the pear, to experiment with new varieties of pears which I received in great number every year. Before I knew Boisselot's system I could not make use of a great number of the grafts I received, not being willing to sacrifice the trees that were yielding me yearly a quantity of fruit; the old system of cleft-grafting necessitating the mutilation of the whole tree, or at least its principal branches. During the last two years I have grafted every variety of pears I have received, (and at any time of the year,) according to the Boisselot system. The grafts have grown like the other branches of the trees, and some of them bore fruit last year. I can thus keep my old trees until I find that the new sorts are preferable to the old ones, and most likely I shall not be obliged to cut them down, as several sorts of pears can very well live and prosper together on the same tree. I have thus increased my enjoyment. This method is, of course, not very practicable on large trees, but is principally useful for small gardens where espaliers and dwarfs are grown, to take up less space. By this method, with a limited number of trees, a great many varieties of fruit can be grown. It can also be usefully employed for experimenting with seedlings that show signs of excellence. It must be understood that no part of the branches between which the grafts are inserted is to be cut back; therefore no mutilation of any part of the old trees is necessary, as is the case in cleft-grafting.—American Agriculturist.

They have won the confidence of every house keeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of.....$10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of..... 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of..... 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of..... 25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on any policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

DARBY'S

PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

A CHALLENGE TO THE WORLD!

We challenge the world to produce a better or a stronger recommendation for any article, for any purpose, than the following:

NOVEMBER 1, 1868.

We very cheerfully unite our testimony in favor of the great merits of the valuable disinfectant manufactured by Professor Darby, and known as DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID. From the reputation of Professor Darby as a scientific gentleman, from our own knowledge of this preparation, and from the general esteem in which it is held wherever known, we have no hesitation in recommending it as one of the most valuable household articles with which we are acquainted.

CHURCH OF THE STRANGERS, New York.—Visitors to the city of New York are informed that they will find divine service every Sunday, in the large Chapel of the University, Washington Square, at ten and a half A. M. and at seven and a half P. M. The evening service in summer is at eight o'clock. Waverley Place, immediately north of the New York Hotel, out of Broadway, runs west to Washington Square, on the east side of which is the University. The entrance to the church is the main door of the University. University Place cars run from the door of the Fifth Avenue Hotel to the door of the church. From the St. Nicholas and Metropolitan, take the cars corner of Broadway and Broome, leave at Waverley Place, and go west one block. At the Astor House take University Place cars, leave at Waverley Place, and go west one block. Strangers will find cordial welcome and polite attention.

The pastor is Rev. Dr. DEEMS, who devotes himself to the spiritual interests of strangers. If any be sick, let them address him a note by mail, as "Pastor of the Church of the Strangers, New York," and it will reach him. The ladies who compose the "Society of the Sisters of the Stranger" procure medical, legal and spiritual help for strangers in perplexity, distress or sickness. Address "Sisters of the Stranger," care Rev. Dr. Deems, New York.

If you are coming to New York soon, cut this out and paste it in your memorandum book.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all surpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

Contingent fee, per term..... 2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Bennors.

SIGN OF THE BIG TEA POT.

I would respectfully announce to my friends and the public generally, both in the city and country, that after an association of over twenty years, under the name and style of Austin & Goodwyn, formerly corner of Customhouse and Front Levee, I have permanently located as above, and shall continue my old business of

MANUFACTURING TINWARE,

in all its branches, as heretofore, and in addition will endeavor to keep at all times a full and complete stock of the best, as well as the latest and most approved

COOKING STOVES.

The names of a few will suffice to give an idea of the great variety constantly kept on hand:

The Charter Oak,	The Good Samaritan,
The Revenue,	The Torchlight,
The American,	The Brilliant,
The Magnolia,	The Fashion,
The True Kentucklan,	The Farmer,
The Maid of Orleans,	The Southern States,
The Mutual Friend,	The Sunny South,

and many others, too numerous to mention, a of which will be sold at

THE LOWEST MARKET PRICES,

for cash or approved city paper.

Being ever grateful for the liberal patronage bestowed and confidence reposed in me during my former copartnership, I would most earnestly solicit a continuance of the same, and shall pledge myself to do my utmost to maintain the reputation of the old house.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTItute, Staunton, Virginia.

The next session begins on the 21st day of SEPTEMBER, 1868, and closes on the 24th of June, 1869.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with a Faculty of twelve professors, teachers and matrons.

This is a Female College of the first rank; one of the most flourishing in the South; young ladies here from nearly all sections of Virginia, and various Southern States. Method of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Health and comfort of pupils unsurpassed. Those from the Gulf States, especially, have greatly improved in health. No social disquietude. The population of this great Valley is nearly all white. This institution is an educational home for the daughters of the South.

Charges for the entire scholastic year, board and tuition, in collegiate course, embracing

Ancient Languages..... .....$215 00
Music 50 00
French or one Modern Language 20 00

Refer to Professors Smith and Holmes, Virginia University; Mrs. John B. Floyd; Bishops Pierce, Emly, Doggett; Rev. Drs. Duncan and Munsey.
